Killington was home to several former shelters. The first, to my knowledge, was a frame leanto about which little is known. Future research may reveal the date of its erection, the name of the builder, and its eventual fate. Presently the only clue is a picture said to have been taken in 1915 showing this structure standing near the Tin Hut. It may be significant that at this time the old hotel on Killington had ceased operations and was falling into disrepair.

Killington Steel Shelter, popularly known as the Tin Hut, was located on a flat, grassy area east of the present Cooper Lodge. The date of its erection is also in doubt, but it was torn down about 1938. Parts of it were used as forms in construction of Cooper Lodge.

In 1927 a family named Bucklin erected a stone shelter known to many as Porky Lodge. Some of our existing shelters could compete for this title! The shelter fell down over a period of years.

In 1969 an open front shelter was constructed 1.1 miles south of Cooper by Farm and Wilderness Camps to house the overflow of visitors to the top of the mountain and named Tamarack Shelter. In the early 80s a nordic ski trail was laid out in front of Tamarack. Hoping to find a more remote location on a relocated Long Trail, members of the Killington Section dismantled the shelter in 1984 and bundled it up in anticipation of its removal. While various parties argued over the best route for a relocation, the parts of our shelter disappeared.

Northeast of Governor Clement Shelter on the bank of the Cold River once stood Blue Triangle Camp. It was built in 1930 by a girls club from Burlington. As two camps in that area seemed superfluous, Blue Triangle was taken down in 1951 and parts of it were used to construct a camp in Spring Lake Clearing. This was named Spring Lake Camp. The landowner considered it a nuisance and asked that it be removed. So in 1954 it was removed half a mile south to lands of Spring Lake Ranch and named Sunnyside. It burned in 1968. A new Sunnyside, since renamed for Miss Minerva Hinchey, a longtime Executive Secretary of the Green Mountain Club, was erected on the same site.

An open front shelter was built in 1921 on the site of the present Clarendon Shelter. When the new shelter was built in 1951 it was a closed lodge, but it was opened up in 1971 in an attempt to discourage squatters. This has been only partially successful.

The last of the former shelters known to me was named Buffum and was located 0.8 mile north of Route 140. The first structure on the site was an open front shelter built in 1922. In 1961, largely through the efforts of Craigie Perkins of our section, a lodge was built. Unfortunately, it burned in 1966.

In preparing this article, I relied on information obtained from Churchill Scott and old issues of the Long Trail News. [If anyone knows of other old camps, please write! --Ed.]

HIKEATHON

(information supplied by the G.M.C. office in Montpelier)

The Long Trail Protection Fund (LTPF) Committee hopes all section members will set aside September 7, 1991, for a major fundraising effort: the "Save the Long Trail Hike-A-Thon." This is also the Club's major event in celebration of the Vermont statehood bicentennial.

The Hike-A-Thon offers active members a chance to hike and help the trail at the same time. Hikers are asked to obtain pledges from family, friends, co-workers, and neighbors.

A suitable pledge might be one dollar per mile, with a suggested minimum of $50 per hiker. For a short five-mile hike just ten pledges reaches that level. Longer hikes have the potential for raising more money. If ten members participate on each hike, each outing can raise at least $500, although any amount will be welcome. There will be prizes for the hikers who obtain the most contributions and a raffle for all participants.

Each hike will be limited to ten people, to avoid over-use of the Long Trail. For the same reason, the hikes will be spread out along the length of the Long Trail with no two hikes planned for the same stretch. (The GMC office will keep track.) Hikes can also take place off the Long Trail. The idea is to get as many people out as possible.

In addition to an army of hikers, the Hike-A-Thon needs area leaders and co-leaders who can organize the event on the local level. The LTPF Committee hopes each GMC section will see it as a fun-filled rallying point and get as many people out as possible. It is also a golden opportunity to raise local consciousness about the Long Trail; a fact sheet about the Long Trail Protection Campaign will be provided as a hand-out for those who pledge.

For more information about being a hiker in this event, see the may Long Trail News.

If you can participate as a leader of a hike or a hiker, please contact Sue or Rob Carey at 446-2830.

Smoke & Blazes welcomes not only reports of Section hikes but also letters and reports of your own unusual excursions.

SECTION ANNUAL MEETING, 1991

13 April 1991

from minutes by Wally Rogers, Secretary

The Killington Section Annual Meeting began at 5:30 with a potluck supper, followed by a business meeting with 29 members present.

Trails and Shelters Committee Chair Sue Carey reported that she had met with Sue Lester of the GMC central office to discuss work needed on the Clarendon Gorge erosion problem at the north abutment and other bridge maintenance. She announced the need for more shelter adopters and completion of a signage project.

Outings Committee Co-Chair Herb Ogden, Jr. asked for more volunteer hike leaders and discussed the possibility of going to outings every two weeks when necessary. The consensus was to keep weekly outings when possible, scheduling an open date as a rain date for the previous hike if agreeable to the leaders.

The Publicity Committee new Chair, Bernie Donahue, discussed plans for better coverage in the media.

G.M.C. Director Herb Ogden, Jr. reported on G.M.C.-wide activity. Participating in the Killington-Pico merger negotiation has contributed to the club's deficit and need for dues increase. At a recent Directors Meeting, only Herb's veto prevented a by-laws change that would have permitted fast dues increases, with which the sections might not have been able to cope in time. (By-laws amendments by the Directors must be unanimous, while 2/3 of those members present at an annual meeting can amend the by-laws of the G.M.C.)

President Rob Carey led a discussion of amendments to the Killington Section's own By-Laws, proposed by the By-Laws Revision Committee (Delight Gartlein, Herb Ogden, Jr., and Sue Thomas, chaired by Wally Rogers), and then by the Directors with some changes. The amendments were approved unanimously and are now in effect. They are printed elsewhere in this issue.

Sue Carey announced the intersectional meeting for 18-25 August at the Mt. Morris Boy Scout Camp in Eden. She also explained G.M.C. fundraising, with a hikeathon on 7 September. A motion was passed to hold a yard sale to benefit the G.M.C. at the Careys' home during September, 1991.

G.M.C. President Brian Fitzgerald explained Pico-Killington negotiations and displayed various visuals used in the Act 250 hearings.

Treasurer Wally Rogers spoke on section dues for 1992. Given the 1992 G.M.C. assessment of $12 per adult and $18 per couple, our current dues, and our current membership, the section will run a $500 deficit in 1992. Given that the section has a balance of over $1000 in the general fund, Wally recommended keeping section dues at the current level for 1992. This was accepted unanimously. Herb Ogden, Jr. then moved to donate $1000 from the Kirk Fund to the central G.M.C. in recognition of its costly efforts to protect the Long Trail in our area. This would not inhibit Killington Section maintenance of our trails and shelters, given the Fund's large balance. The motion passed, and the donation will be made as funds become available over the next three months.

Elected to three year terms as Killington Section directors were Roma Pulling, Herb Ogden, Jr., and Timothy Welch. Ray Catozzi was elected to be our second G.M.C. Director if needed and to serve as alternate until then.

The meeting adjourned at 9 p.m. The directors met briefly to elect Rob Carey president, Linda Pellerin vice-president, and Wally Rogers secretary-treasurer.

MYSTERY HIKE

28 April 1991

By Jerry Parker, Leader

Sunday afternoon hikes usually draw a good turnout. It was a beautiful day so I wasn't surprised to have 33 people show up.

Several cars headed toward Pittsford. I kept checking in my rear view mirror hoping no one took a wrong turn. When we finally got all the cars parked, we were just over the Pittsford town line into Brandon. There were several beaver dams across the road in a swamp. I am familiar with this area, growing up in Pittsford. I spent a lot of time exploring the Sugar Hollow and the surrounding mountains.

The first stop was an old cemetery with gravestones dating back to 1800. We proceeded up a logging road. It was then that I realized the leaders of this hike were five children way ahead of everyone, and we were following them. At this pace it didn't take us long to get to the Sugar Hollow Pond. Everyone seemed pleased with the mystery. The pond is quite large, in a secluded area. I kept busy catching newts for the kids to hold. After twenty minutes we started down again at the children's wishes.

The hike was enjoyed by all even though it was shorter than two miles.

TWO WALK-THROUGHS AND A WORK PARTY

5 May, 11 May, and 25 May 1991

By Sue Carey, Leader

There were three work parties during the month of May. We managed to walk through the entire 22 miles of Long Trail on our section, visited all six of our shelters, and completed some badly needed waterbar work.

On 5 May, we walked through the section from the Upper Cold River Road to Wallingford Gulf. It was a pleasant sunny day and the walking was enjoyable. We ran into the usual blowdowns and clipper work but managed to get through it.

On 11 May we worked on erosion control on the section from Route 103 to Clarendon Gorge. This is a very short piece of trail, probably only 200 yards, but it is the most heavily trafficked in our section. We replaced waterbars and dug ditches. It was a hot day and we did an impressive amount of work, but more will have to be done, including major cribbing work next to the bridge abutments. You'll be seeing more work parties scheduled for Clarendon Gorge.

On 25 May the northern walk through was held. I drove a group of people with clippers and saws in hand up Killington. Some went north and the rest went south. Another group put in some waterbars on the first half mile south of Sherburne Pass. The forecast called for a couple of showers and it turned into a chance of where you were. It showered north of Killington but the people described the weather as pleasant for working.

Special thanks to everyone who came out for the work parties. It couldn't have been done without you.

BRISTOL NOTCH

8 June 1991

by Jerry Parker, Leader

We got off to a good start and were at the camp by Gilmore Pond at 11:00. We took a short break at the pond and ate our lunch at the big rock overhang. The deerflies and mosquitoes decided on a change of menu from deer and moose to human blood. They were out in swarms so we didn't enjoy a leisurely lunch.

June is too late in the year to have a hike in the mountain with all the foliage and ferns three feet high and no beaten trail to follow. I got a little off track in this jungle. We were at the ridge where the airplane wreckage was. I have been up there several times in early spring or late fall, and it looked totally different with all the vegetation so overgrown. I guess we were not more than 50 yards from the site, but we didn't locate the wreckage.

It was getting late, so we decided to start down. We came across the loggers camp with two woodstoves. By now the bugs were really bad, so we didn't waste any time getting out.

There were pink Lady Slippers blooming in abundance. I guess we could say that was the highlight of this hike. We were glad to get back safely to our cars.

MOUNT ASCUTNEY: UP THE WEATHERSFIELD TRAIL AND DOWN THE WINDSOR TRAIL

by Herb Ogden, Leader

After several attempts to have this excursion, foiled by things like ice storms, I finally succeeded. The weather did play a trick on us at the summit, where a thunderstorm chased us off the nice new observation tower. Luckily, Jerry Parker found us a rock overhang and nearby cave, where we stayed pretty dry in the downpour.

The new Weathersfield Trail is a beauty, and we all thought the Ascutney Trails Association deserved much praise for it. From the new parking lot, it heads gently uphill for a while, then ascends steeply to a smaller version of the Crystal Cascade. In this dry season, it had no water, and the Cascade was but a trickle. Uphill from the small cascade, the trailbuilders found a genuine flume, a long, squared-off cleft in the rocks left when weaker rock eroded. It is spectacular. So are the giant wood stairs just up the trail. The new trail then wends very pleasantly along a nearly level stretch with views to the south before coming to the Crystal Cascade, where we enjoyed lunch and a view.

From the Cascade, the trail now stays to the east of the brook in a fine evergreen forest. It finally crosses the brook at about the "Halfway Brooks" and rejoins the old trail for the rest of the way. We stopped to admire Gus's Lookout and deplore the theft of the Aldrich memorial plaque some years ago. We enjoyed the view from the West Peak and admired a huge hobblebush Ray Catozzi located.

On the way down, Thor persuaded us to forego the Brownsville Rock view rather than suffer one of his bolts. We did stop at the Log Shelter and Gerry Falls while descending the Windsor Trail to end a pleasant outing.

CHITTENDEN RESERVOIR RIDGE RAMBLE

by Herb Ogden, Leader

I wasn't surprised to see only a small group show up for this 13 mile hike that I had labeled "difficult." Actually, the Forest Service had improved the LT so it was much better than I expected, but it was still a long day.

We left our cars at the last new house on the New Boston Road, preferring not to leave parts of the cars farther on. The New Boston Trail had apparently been adopted by some very conscientious snowmobilers, and they have improved it with a fine new bridge. In what seemed like no time we were at David Logan Shelter.

The Long Trail from there to the old Mendon - North Sherburne stage road had fresh paint blazes, some new erosion control work, and a generally much nicer aspect than anticipated. We liked the view by the former North Pond Trail junction and the later views of Chittenden Reservoir and Lefferts Pond.

After passing Rolston's Rest Shelter, we got off the LT at the Elbow and took the old stage road down past the beaver ponds, now growing up to meadows in places. This is very pretty country.

The hike ended with a surprise. The branch of the stage road that led from the beaver ponds to Wildcat, in Chittenden, has been made passable! Had we known, we could have driven that part.

CLARENDON GORGE WORK PARTY

by Sue Carey, Leader

The 28th was hot and humid with temperatures in the nineties but Saturday was much cooler and less humid. Our original aim was the Clarendon Gorge bridge area. Earlier in the week I had made arrangements for a load of stones to be dropped there so we could fill in holes along the path and cover some spots that are badly eroded. Unfortunately the driver didn't deliver the stones as planned.

Of course there was plenty of other work to do. John Hughes and Bill Robichaud hiked south from Route 103 and did some minor rerouting. Chris Davis, Herb Ogden and I picked litter at Clarendon Gorge and then headed for Minerva Hinchey.

Herb hiked north on the trail with a swizzle stick and practiced his golf swing [huh? --Ed.] on the weeds along the trail. Chris and I nailed flashing along the bunks to discourage the porcupines, cleaned out the spring, fixed holes in the outhouse, and put in a new toilet seat. We also replaced the table with a new model and varnished it.

Everyone met at the shelter for lunch and most of us called it a day then.

EVERY $6 BUYS ONE FOOT OF TRAIL AND $50 EARNS A NEW PAIR OF SOCKS!

by Sue Carey

Yes, it's true! You can help save the Long Trail and earn a new pair of socks at the same time. It's the Save the Long Trail Hike-a-thon which is set for 7 September 1991. Our Section's part is from Route 140 to Route 103. Just 5.1 easy miles. We need volunteers to get sponsors and donations, and others to help shuttle hikers.

If your socks are worn and need replacing, you'll want to raise enough donations for a new pair. Every hiker who raises $50 in pledges gets a free PAIR OF SOCKS! But don't be satisfied with just a pair of socks. By raising $100 you get a fanny pack. $250 brings you a Jansport Taos pack, $500 a day and a half pack, and, for the real go-getter, $1000 gets you a Big Frog Tent from North Face. Oh, yes, the fine print: everyone gets the socks but you only get one of the other prizes.

So hurry and tell Rob or me that you want to participate in the hike-a-thon. Just remember that in order to get your SOCKS you have to raise $50 in pledges and register before 23 August. Call us today. We'll rush you a pledge form so that you can start bugging your friends, neighbors, relatives, and co-workers about sponsoring you. Call 446-2830.

VOLUNTEERS FOR PEACE WORK PARTY AND

by Sue Carey

During the week of 26 August a group of people from Volunteers for Peace will be working on the Long Trail. Volunteers for Peace is an organization based in Belmont that sponsors workcamps around the globe. Some examples of their work include building a school in South America, working on the Dismas House in Rutland, an Environmental Center in Maine, various projects in Europe, and working at children's camps in Russia. The Volunteers pay for their own transportation to and from the host country.

The Volunteers will help us complete projects that aren't routinely done each year. This might include clearing and blazing side trails and doing stone work at Clarendon Gorge. They have people to head up the work parties, but I thought it would be nice to have some Killington Section members involved. If you are interested, call Sue Carey at 446-2830.

Also, the Volunteers have asked us to put on a social activity. We have scheduled a covered dish party and slide show at Herb Ogden's house at 4 Emmett Avenue in Rutland at 6 p.m. on Thursday 29 August. Hamburgers, hot dogs and beverages will be provided. Bring another main dish, a side dish, or dessert to share.

CHALLENGE COMPLETE AT LAST!

by Roma Pulling

After several people asked us if we hadn't completed our project yet of photographing all the Long Trail shelters, we decided to finish it this spring. Before the leaves were fully developed, after which lighting in these wooded areas would not be as good, we made five trips north in six weeks and photographed the last eight shelters, including the new Corliss Camp.

While visiting Corliss Camp, I hiked the Davis Neighborhood Trail to add to my list of side trails completed. The trail follows an old logging road and was not difficult except for being very muddy when we walked it in April. We were pleased to find Parker Camp, which we heard was going to be dismantled last summer, still standing and in use. It was like visiting an old friend, as we had camped there in 1983 on a backpacking trip from the Johnson-Waterville Road to Route 118.

The other seven shelters were approached via the Long Trail. Our greatest effort was our last hike, from lake Mansfield to Puffer Shelter and back, ten miles over rugged terrain. As I don't attempt that much frequently these days, I wondered what effect it would have on me, but I pulled through and even had enough strength to do a walk-a-thon the next day. The hobblebush grew beside the trail all the way and was incredibly beautiful.

So, what will our next project involve? Perhaps we will hike more side trails and add some segments to our coverage of the Appalachian Trail. Keep tuned.

GREEN MOUNTAIN CLUB PRESIDENT THANKS
KILLINGTON SECTION FOR $1000 DONATION

Herb Ogden, Jr., G.M.C. director, received the following after the Killington Section Annual Meeting:

April 19, 1991

Dear Herb:

Thank you for the opportunity to attend the Killington Section's Annual Meeting on Saturday. It was good to chat with folks from the Section and have a chance to bring everyone up to date on the Killington/Pico situation. I'm pleased that the central Club and the Killington Section have been able to work so closely on this issue.

I also thank you all for the generous donation of $1000 to help defray the costs associated with mediation and Act 250 in the Killington matter. We do need your support if we are continue our effort to protect the LT/AT across the Coolidge Range. The Sections' donation demonstrates that the Killington Section is truly committed to the Long Trail.

Please pass my thanks along to your members.

MYSTERY HISTORY HIKE

7 July 1991

by Roma Pulling, Co-Leader

Those who expected Churchill to report on this are already disappointed. He was kind enough to change hikes with Al and me when a conflict developed on our original hike date (July 13). Then the Clarendon Shelter cookout scheduled for that date was rained out. Our "mystery history" hike nearly suffered the same fate.

Six hikers left Main Street Park, but only five arrived at our parking spot at Big Branch. One had correctly forecast stormy weather and returned home. By the time we were ready to take the Long Trail south we had picked up four more hikers in the parking area by prearrangement and were hiking in light rain, which gradually increased until at Big Branch Shelter we took refuge from a heavy downpour. This continued for over half an hour, accompanied by thunder and lightning which seemed to strike in our immediate vicinity. As long as we were inside, looking out, it was almost enjoyable.

My purpose in hiking in the Big Branch area was to explore the history of S. L. Griffith's lumber empire. Griffith became "Vermont's first millionaire" with saw mills and charcoal kilns in Danby and Mt. Tabor. The section of Mt. Tabor into which we hiked was once known as Mill Glen. When the storm abated, we followed the trail a short distance to explore the site of a Griffith mill and waterwheel. If walking conditions had been drier, I planned to bushwhack into the woods to Greeley Cemetery. The history of Mt. Tabor tells of Griffith buying the "Greeley Mill." I like to think there is a connection. From there we would have gone south on the trail to Old Job, site of timber operations in the past and of an enormous sawdust pile. But as bushwhacking would have been like taking a shower, we stopped at the suspension bridge and turned back. The trail, which had been crossed by one stream on the way in, was now interrupted in a dozen places by runoff, some of it fast and deep.

On the way home three of us stopped at Griffith's grave in Danby's Scottsville cemetery and admired his house, now an inn and restaurant in Danby.

PLEASE SEND DUES TO TREASURER
WALLY ROGERS BY YEAR'S END!*THE BIGGEST ROCK IN SHREWSBURY

4 August 1991

by Jerry Parker, Leader

We parked at the picnic area on the CCC Road. Fourteen hikers and two dogs proceeded a short distance down the road until we came to a logging road which we followed, stopping to pick raspberries.

We then turned off onto a snowmobile trail. We found a toad which kept five children happy. A little while later we came to the so-called "Biggest Rock in Shrewsbury." Some of us and the children climbed a makeshift ladder to the top, which made me a little uneasy with a 25 foot sheer drop on the back side of the rock.

We decided to take a different route down so we bushwhacked a short distance until we came to the Shrewsbury Peak Trail. It was a little steeper and rockier, but slowly we made our way down and got back safely to our cars.

VOLUNTEERS FOR PEACE

26 - 29 August 1991

by Sue Carey, Trails & Shelters Chair

There always seems to be some work to do on our section of trail. So when the Volunteers for Peace showed an interest in working on the Long Trail, I was enthused. The Volunteers for Peace is an organization that does volunteer work on projects located around the world. The volunteers pay their own traveling expenses and usually are housed and fed by the Volunteers for Peace.

They helped us on three different days. During two days at Clarendon Gorge, they put in new water bars and replaced some that had been vandalized, did some reblazing, and finished a minor reroute around a wet section.

Helping on the work parties were Gemma from Philadelphia, Peter from Germany, Elena from France, and Vladimir, Vladimir and Victor from Siberia. The three Russians were very good at cutting away blowdowns with hand saws. In fact the three of them could cut away a tree faster than one person with a chain saw. They pointed out to me that the saw they were using had broken teeth and couldn't be tightened. That was embarrassing. I'll have to work on tool maintenance. Even with a poor quality saw, they did a good job.

On Wednesday Sue Thomas took them trail clearing on the Bucklin Trail. This must have worn them out because they refused to work the next day. They also were impressed with the view from Killington Peak.

On Thursday we had a pot luck supper at Herb Ogden's house. This gave us a chance to socialize and learn more about what they thought about Vermont. We also learned that Gemma and Vladimir were planning on getting married and moving to Siberia. We wish them luck!

HIKE-A-THON

by Sue Carey, Section Leader

The Hike-a-thon was very successful. We raised $519 for the Long Trail Protection Fund. This will buy, on the average, two acres of land for trail protection. Also, several people who came out hiking with us enjoyed it so much that they joined our Section.

We met at the park at 9 a.m., then regrouped at Clarendon Gorge at 9:30. What a nice day for a hike -- cool and sunny. The hikers were shuttled to Bear Mountain Road and started hiking north.

Rob and Seth Carey manned the snack stand at Minerva Hinchey Shelter. We had the usual hot beverages plus soda, water and lemonade. Also, there was soup, cheese and crackers, and numerous desserts -- quite a spread.

We regrouped at the shelter, lunched, then headed north again. Rob and Seth were ready to start packing when a group of Massachusetts Boy Scouts also on the hike-a-thon appeared. They helped finish the leftovers.

Mara and I lagged behind the group. When she started to ask "how much further is it?" I taught her fractions -- $\frac{1}{4}$, $\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{3}{4}$ of the way. Everyone got back safely and at least three new people have joined the club since the hike.

GREENE ROAD, CHITTENDEN TO PITTSFIELD

by Sue Thomas, Co-Leader

Sometimes accidents result in happy discoveries. A couple of years ago, while hiking around Chittenden, I got lost. I didn't know how lost till I emerged on Route 100 in Pittsfield. Though I was far from pleased at the time and staggered back to my car after dark, I had inadvertently stumbled onto an old way called the Greene Road, which in the early 1800s was the only local way over the Green Mountains. By reading Chittenden's history and talking to several members of its historical society I learned that it had originally been an Indian trail. It passed across German Hill and through the New Boston area, then by a mill and Greene's Tavern before heading up to North Pond.

It seemed an appropriate hike for the bicentennial year but, due to the logistics of spotting cars as far apart as Chittenden and Pittsfield, I was reluctant till Herb Ogden offered to co-lead. That way he could share the blame if we had more hikers than cars, which is exactly what happened when sixteen people came!

We had beautiful weather, and set out from Mountain Top Inn on the relatively flat portion of the hike. After a brief stop at New Boston to discuss the history of the area (we were fortunate to have Jean and Charlie Davies along from the Pittsford Historical Society), we continued on and soon began the rather vicious climb up the ridge. Our group ranged from two teenagers to hikers in their mid-seventies, and I'm happy to report that everyone made it, and remarkably cheerfully! I'm not happy to report that two weeks before we got there loggers bulldozed through the area so that it bears little resemblance to the quaint old road I got lost on.

Everyone was relieved after the climb to reach North Pond, where we stopped for lunch amid lots of moose tracks. After lunch we meandered down the other side of the ridge, where Jerry spotted bear claw marks on a beech tree and some moose hair on an overhanging limb. The only after-lunch challenge was getting all sixteen of us in two vehicles. By squooshing nine into Ray's we were able to do it -- not very comfortably, but it worked.

One postscript: Jean called to say that she and Charlie went back later and she counted "thank-you-marms" on the way up to the pond. I've unfortunately lost the paper I wrote the exact number on, but she explained to me that a "thank-you-marm" is a level space long enough to accommodate a horse and wagon on the way up a hill. Thanks, Jean, for my new fact for the day!

SECOND ANNUAL TACONIC MOUNTAINS RAMBLE

21 September 1991

Kit Davidson, Leader

by Linda Pellerin

The older children said it was their best hike ever and Jerry's nephew Ross can't wait to go back, so I would say Kit's delightful scenic hike was a great success.

Thirty-two of us started out under a bright blue sky to hike about three miles and enjoy views in every direction. Everyone marveled over Kit's man made waterfall and Japanese type garden.

I led a small group back the "escape route" that Kit sent us on, not knowing the steers would be in the pasture. The children kept mooing as the steers mooed back. You can imagine my surprise when a large number of horned bovines came charging through the woods toward us. Luckily they were called back by another steer. They stood glaring at us as I ran to get over the barbed wire fence, not exactly your fearless leader.

Once we reached Kit's trailer, we helped ourselves to drinks, cheese and crackers, compliments of our generous host. Our sincere thanks to Kit.

SHREWSBURY PEAK TRAIL

by Roma Pulling, Leader

The climb up the Black Swamp Trail was pleasant and the view from Shrewsbury Peak superb, but my goal for this hike was to complete the Shrewsbury Peak Trail from the summit to where it intersects the Long Trail. This we did.

On a cool day of mixed sunshine and clouds, eight people met at the park, more than I expected at the designated hour of 8:30. We met two more hikers at the foot of the mountain.

The Black Swamp Trail is a shorter alternative to the Shrewsbury Peak Trail, with a steady but moderate ascent to a point just north of the peak. On the way we visited Shrewsbury Peak Shelter, or, as we like to call it, Newfound Shelter, a log leanto for about six hikers, on a short side trail. From here Margaret Henkel showed us a direct route back to the main trail, eliminating any backtracking. We were soon on the summit, admiring views of Mt. Ascutney and Mt. Monadnock in the far distance. From here three hikers returned to their cars, using the Shrewsbury Peak Trail to the former Northam Picnic Pavilion site, where with foresight we had spotted two cars.

The rest of us continued north on the Shrewsbury Peak Trail. We were fortunate to have a director from Farm and Wilderness Camps, David Martin, with us, who could set the leader straight whenever she strayed from the trail! It was actually very well defined and had been cleared this past summer by workers from the Farm and Wilderness Camps. I was pleased to find this part of the trail in such good condition after having been warned on two occasions that it was difficult to follow and obstructed by blow-downs. On the way we ate lunch on a nordic ski trail before completing the trail at the site of the former Tamarack Shelter, removed in 1984. David Martin assured us that his workers were ready and willing to build a replacement for Tamarack as soon as a location has been determined.

From this point we returned to our cars the way we had come. On reaching the ski trail where we had lunched, I was surprised to see two cyclists pedaling along it. We met four other hikers on the trail, and two more arrived at the trailhead as we left for home. The drive was a delight due to the colored foliage, which seemed to be at its peak at that elevation.

MYSTERY HIKE, GLEN LAKE AREA

by Walter Churchill Scott, Leader

On a perfect October day our section had its quarterly mystery hike and to tell the truth even the leader was not sure where to go.

At 9:30 Ed Riley was there; a couple of minutes later Bernie Donahue arrived. Then six members of the Telemark Ski Club, located in Pittsford, joined us after calling Saturday evening to confirm our walk.

The whole group looked pretty fit, so we chose to visit the Glen Lake area. Leaving the boat launching area, we walked along the Moscow Road, then cut off onto a woodroad going over the causeway at the north end of Glen Lake.

Next we took a short side trip to Said Pond, a Soil Conservation project of 1930-40. A pretty spot and nearby in one of the clearings we heard and saw some geese going south for the winter.

As we went on uphill and swinging around to the west side of the lake, we made the usual one mistake as always, by turning west for about five minutes. Realizing our error, we turned around, got on the correct trail, and soon came to the overlook.

At this point, as long as most of us had not brought a lunch, we decided to return via the blazed trail which skirts the lake most of the way, rather than continue around the lake, hitting Scotch Hill Road and returning to our cars.

A new dam is being built at Glen Lake that results in high water. We were able to walk along the shore. Ed pointed out some mussels to us, plus a number of other interesting sights.

It was a pleasure to have the folks from the Telemark Ski Club with us, and we are sure to send a new schedule to them in hopes they will join us again.

CANTY TRAIL WORK PARTY

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

I think this was the best turnout for a side trail work party in the last six years. A half-dozen people spent a pretty fall day on the trail up Blue Ridge Mountain. We completely cleared it, dug out old waterbars, and put in a dozen or so new ones. The trail needs more than that, especially on the middle third, but some of the needed drainage on the old woodroad entails major earthmoving. It's not perfect yet, but it's in the best shape it's been in for about the last decade.

We stopped for lunch at the falls, a very pretty place with a view. Farther up, we noted where Churchill Scott said the old Hellebore Trail went north of the brook. It used to cross the Old Turnpike Road and hit the Long Trail near where Tucker Lodge once stood, now at the edge of the Robinwood development. Churchill recalled the Hellebore Trail once had a branch north to the Wildcat Road in Chittenden, but the top part of this has disappeared and even the bottom is hard to find.

This seems to be a very popular trail. We met a dozen or so hikers. We hope the bottom part, across Craigie Perkins's Tall Timbers Camp land, will remain open to the hiking public despite the many new survey flags we saw. (The top part is Green Mountain National Forest.) We also talked about extending the trail to the middle summit of Blue Ridge, which has a nice view over the south summit and Pico.

KILLINGTON, LTD., PICO PEAK SKI RESORT, AND THE LONG AND APPALACHIAN TRAILS

by Herb Ogden, Jr.

Some may recall that, back last winter when Killington, Ltd. still had an agreement to buy the Pico ski area, these ski areas signed a well-publicized agreement with the Green Mountain Club and other trail and environmental groups. This was the result of many mediation sessions that began in the summer of 1990. Under the agreement, some 4,000 acres west of the Coolidge Range was to remain undeveloped. In exchange, the G.M.C. and others agreed that Killington/Pico would not be opposed in their application for an Act 250 permit to link their ski areas with a few lifts and trails, mostly just south of Pico Camp. Pico Camp lay in the way of two ski trails and was to be moved at least partly at the ski areas' expense. The parties agreed to disagree about ski development along the LT between Pico Camp and Sherburne Pass.

The Green Mountain Club and the Appalachian Trail Conference have appealed the Act 250 permit granted this summer because it does not make clear whether the mediated agreement is a condition of the permit. In other words, the permit may allow Killington or Pico to build the connector trails, plus trails over part of the Long Trail between Pico Camp and Sherburne Pass, without giving up development west of the Coolidge Range. The Green Mountain Club also opposes the new lifts and trails that the permit would let Pico or Killington build between Pico Camp and Sherburne Pass.

GENEROSITY OR OBLIGATION?

by Herb Ogden, Jr.

Members may be interested to compare the following excerpts from deeds to parts of the land between Sherburne Pass and Killington Peak traversed by the Long Trail, with Killington, Ltd.'s propaganda about being there first and allowing the Trail to cross its land through sheer generosity. Nevertheless, note that the deeds do not cover all the land in question and do not create a protected corridor. The deeds are (1) Mortimer Proctor to Pico Peak, Inc., 7 May 1948, (2) Vermont Marble Co. to Pico Peak, Inc., 23 November 1946, (3) Vermont Marble Co. to State of Vermont, 29 December 1945, and (4) Vermont Marble Co. to Green Mountain Club, Inc., 22 January 1945.

Killington has argued in the Act 250 proceedings that these conditions mean only that the Long Trail has the right to go somewhere over these lands. If, however, Killington is wrong (as I think), we have the right to use the trail unless we move it. Moreover, the deeds say nothing about summer use only. Do hikers have the right to use this route in winter, too? If so, what effect would an exercise of that right have? Would skiers enjoy avoiding hikers or snowshoers who moved slowly across the ski trails? What would this situation do to a ski area's liability insurance premiums? This was not an issue before Killington began to run Pico and made plans to build ski lifts and trails on a substantial part of the Long Trail.

September 3, 1946, so far as the same affects said premises. (e) A right for the public and others to use the Long Trail, so-called, as now and hereafter used and laid out. This deed is also upon the following conditions:

A Note About Numbers

Smoke and Blazes started in 1948 as a monthly publication and continued so until about 1959 when it became a bimonthly. In about 1967 it switched to quarterly publication. Occasionally issues were skipped, especially in 1970 and 1971.

In general each calendar year was assigned a new "Volume", and "Numbers" were assigned consecutively from "1" through each year.

There is some lack of consistency in the months of publication, and there are some out-and-out errors in the numbering.

The following Table of Contents lists the issues in this binder showing the Volume, Number, and Date as printed and, where different, what the Volume, Number, and Date probably should have been,

Dedication

This set of copies of Smoke and Blazes is donated to the Rutland Historical Society in memory of my parents, Mary and Craigie Perkins and my aunt, Vera Perkins. They conceived the idea for a Killington Section newsletter in 1948 and served as editors and publishers for the first several years of its existence, cutting stencils, and running mimeograph copies in our living room. They continued as frequent contributors to the publication and as active members of the Club for over a half century. Fortunately, Dad had a pack rat proclivity which I seem to have inherited. By combining his collection of Smoke and Blazes with mine, I have been able to put together this complete run of the publication.

BALD MOUNTAIN - GALICK PRESERVE

3 November 1991

by Wally Rogers, Leader

Fifteen members and friends met at The Nature Conservancy parking area for the Galick-Bald Mountain Preserve in West Haven, Vermont. You have to cross through New York to reach this little known area of Vermont on Lake Champlain, just across the lake from South Bay. The lot was filled with others enjoying a company hike, but we didn't see them during the day. Climbing the trail from the lot, we registered at the log book and hiked across the open fields to a large barn. Vandals and weather have damaged the structure and rusted the spare parts inventory of the Galicks-wizard mechanics.

We found fall apples still clinging to the trees and being enjoyed by porcupines. They were ten feet up in the trees about 100 meters apart and tolerated our delight and close inspection of their lunch spot. Following braided paths in grass and scrub junipers, the group met at an abandoned hillside house above the lake for our lunch. Below on the shore was a rock pier. The people who lived in the house probably used the lake as a major route into their farm.

We separated into several groups according to interests and energy levels with eight continuing, mostly by trails, to the ridge SE of the Bald Mountain peak, south along the cliff tops, circling the dens of venomous animals and returning to our cars a bit later than the projected time. The warm sunny late fall day and views of Lake Champlain and Black Mountain helped me to appreciate the first Americans, farmers and natural area preservationists who have lived and worked in this area.

PLEASE SEND 1992 DUES TO TREASURER WALLY ROGERS NOW!*PICO BUSHWACK

9 November 1991

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

The turnout for this hike was an impressive surprise. More than a half-dozen people turned out for what was billed as a long, difficult bushwhack. They got what was advertised and had a good time! Their participation also doubled the number of people to hike a route to which Pico Ski Resort would like to relocate the Long and Appalachian Trails to avoid the new ski lifts and trails it wants to build between Pico Camp and Sherburne pass.

First came the easy part: we climbed about 1400' up from Sherburne Pass to Pico Junction along the snow-dusted Long Trail, then sidled along to Pico Camp. Vandals have hit the windows again; Lexan replacement should be considered. After enjoying the view of Ascutney, we continued south on the LT until it hit the ridge.

Next came the moderately hard part with the nice woods and views. Heading westerly around Pico's cone, we followed various colors of flagging through dense evergreens. Those who had been there before us left us plenty of branches to break as we went, and a continuous crackling sound accompanied us. Fairly soon the woods opened up and we entered a pleasant area of mossy rocks and old growth, with nice views toward Killington and Mendon Peaks. We picked a particularly nice one around the 3400' elevation for our lunch stop, warmed by the late fall sun. To judge from the 1940 Guidebook, we were about on the route of the long-abandoned west spur that used to rejoin the Long Trail and the Pico Loop at Pico Junction.

Occasionally zigzagging, we followed a generally pleasant route down a ridge extending about due west from Pico. It looked like a good place for berrying in the summer, but also a difficult stretch to keep cleared at that time of year. We then headed north, crossed a few little brooks, and entered a large, flattish open area with lovely birches. It ended at a 2920' knob crowned by a glacial erratic. This shows on the USGS map, west northwest of Pico Peak. We were about 2/5 of the way to Route 4.

Now came the unpleasant part. We descended steeply to a brook and waded through saplings north of it. We did catch sight of a cliff to our east, and briefly skirted another to our very immediate west, but most of the scenery was uninteresting second growth. An old logging road brought us to the dead-end "dump" where Pico Ski Resort stores the Alpine Slide off-season. Descending from there, we entered a wettish area of second growth containing first a field of small boulders and then a field of large ones. This was very slow going, and we wondered whether a decent trail could be built here. We also increasingly noticed road noise from Route 4 as well as a vacation chalet perched above us and other Pico resort buildings.

The tired group almost rebelled when I went straight uphill to go from one flagline to another near a big ledge. But they made it, they slabbed along the rocky, brushy slopes south of the Beaver Pond, and they emerged, tired but satisfied, on Route 4 midway between the Beaver Pond and Robinwood. The final walk up paved roads to the Pass was a pleasant change from the rocky, thickety terrain at the bottom of our bushwhack.

We did not hike Pico Ski Resort's proposed final link to the Long Trail. It goes north through a very wet area just west of Fox Run, then slabs easterly along the base of the steep, bouldery slope to Willard Gap.

All the hikers concluded that a very pretty trail could be built from the Pico-Killington saddle to the 2920' knoll. After that point, however, we lost enthusiasm. If there was any way we could keep the present route more or less as it is, we decided we would prefer to do that.

FROM THE PAGES OF OLD VERMONTERS

Below is a 1935 article printed in the July issue of The Vermonter, the privately published former "State Magazine." Our copy came from W. Churchill Scott's collection and was selected by Ray Catozzi. Ray also found several other articles from The Vermonter of the 1930's, dealing with topics like the Long Trail Lodge, an end-to-end in the mid-1930's, flora and fauna along the trail, and a multi-page poem that seems almost as long as the entire Long Trail.

The Inn Spectacular

Long Trail Lodge Landmark to Great Vermont Architect

By MARK G. PIERCE

NATURE became a hostage, and a willing one, when Paul W. Thayer created the Long Trail Lodge. The rustic architecture is almost more natural than nature itself.

To build a truly rustic hostelry so natural that one can hardly discern it from its enveloping foliage, to make use of standing trees and immovable boulders for supporting pillars and walls of an attractive and comfortable hotel, and to design a hostelry so universal that every student of nature will consider himself as much at home as in his own clubhouse once seemed a fantastic dream. To suggest that the originator's vision was eccentric is untenable for such a criticism is everywhere refuted: we must admit that it is outstanding.

"Leaves that Sleep. Did you know that leaves of a number of our common plants go to sleep at night? Examine the leaves of our common clovers and of the lupines some dark night. You will find them folded up in a resting position. Wood sorrel or oxalis also sleeps.

LODGE LORE

The Long Trail Lodge joins superbly the primitive and the refined, courtesy and quality, all recognized in the planning of the unique lodge in Sherburne Pass, hardly a hundred feet back from the main hardsurfaced road between Rutland and White River Junction, route U. S. 5.

The most effective way in which to acquire an understanding of this amazing and fascinating inn is to make a personal stop-over there yourself. You will find a genuine and hospitable welcome, a choice of comfortable rooms within the main lodge or in separate buildings. There are four very popular and almost continuously occupied adjacent cabins, each with living room, bed rooms and large fireplace, built in the same novel and attractive design as the main lodge. They are formed right into the rocks, wired with electricity, and obscured from general observation by trees. Many fixtures including the lamp shades are of bark, waste basket of wood, candle holders from small wooden blocks, mirrors framed by narrow sticks, and where doors are numbered or labeled, forked and twisting sticks form the numerals or characters.

The living room has an interest at every turn. The fireplace is enjoyed from rocking chairs or a four-seater swing suspended from the rafters. The chandeliers are inverted trees with an electric light glowing at the end of each branch. A bird-recognizing game, built by the resident naturalist, Maurice Broun, inveigles everyone: if the light does not blink it isn't the fault of the device—no, you are pointing to the name of some other bird, so just keep trying! The magazine table is well stocked, and a remarkably fine set of hiking photographs taken by M. L. Joslin of Waitsfield and assembled by him in two albums awaits inspection. The door handles indicate the fantastic angles at which branches have grown, and stuffed animals will startle you as they peer from obscure corners in exceedingly lifelike positions. Both well-marked trails of the Appalachian Mountain Club and the Green Mountain Club lead through the Long Trail Lodge.

The new spacious dining hall affords accommodation of many guests and offers an excellent outlook upon Deer's Leap mountain, the pool, and surrounding grounds. The superior merit of the food has been developed to the degree of national recognition and increasing favor. The dining room service has been developed to such a point that it is the pride of all patrons.

In no other place have I seen such a wealth of nature lore supplied in a more intriguing manner. Three inch signs, hardly noticeable at first, blend with the landscape but suggest by pithy phrases the unlimited amount of study one who appreciates and understands the sciences might make. Forty trees, from the hemlock to ironwood, are found near the "Lady Fern. Very common and grows in almost any location. It is extremely variable in form. You may tell it easily from other ferns, however: look on under surface of their fronds for double row of curved sori as no other native fern has this characteristic.

LONG TRAIL LODGE PHILOSOPHY

"Pokin' 'round 'mid ferns and mosses, like a hoptoad or a snail, somehow seems to lighten crosses where my heart would elsewhere fail."

lodge, and a small display in front shows the characteristic of each for the novice, and for most of the rest of us. If you generally make fancy bird houses, you will find why paint and fancy designs will frighten rather than attract birds. And although you and I once knew the ten-letter word for plant-eating animals, we won't have to recall carnivores, herbivores, or rodents to understand the exhibits here; yet this is just where you would want to come if your eye-glasses were an inch thick and you were dedicating your life to the study of the saltatorial gryllus niger orthopterous insect that others were satisfied to call the "cricket." You will probably want to take pencil and paper with you when you hike about the environs of the Long Trail Lodge.

"Wasps make paper by chewing but they do not scatter it along roads and through the woods as humans do.

"It takes sixteen acres of spruce trees for one Sunday edition of a Metropolitan newspaper."

Cars from all over, and all the New England states bring visitors to this unusually attractive inn. Approaching the front door, just as you pass the fireplace uniquely located on the front porch, you may read: "Twenty-five species of ferns have been found within a half mile of the Lodge, and fifty-two species of birds were recorded in the immediate vicinity last month." Within, you begin to notice things that escaped your observation before—the hall trees are real trees, some of the walks are illuminated at night, a store is fitted with hikers' supplies including films, flashlights, moccasins, socks, canes, woodsmen's tools, powdered milk, maple syrup, coffee, and pancake meal; the tables have "tree legs," the rustic extends even to the furniture of the kitchen, the radio music is coming from a birdhouse, and the mail-box is a birch log.

The history of the Long Trail Lodge dates back to 1923, when Mortimer R. Proctor and his mother, Mrs. Fletcher D. Proctor, chose this sightly section of Vermont for a spectacular edifice. Deer's Leap is a sheer cliff where a century and a half ago, according to the legend, a deer resting on the rocky precipice was driven over the ledge to its death by a hound. Across the pass, to the south, lies Pico Peak, and down between these two summits the main building, set between moss covered ledges in the midst of sweeping woods, was reared. It was a real masterpiece of woodland architecture, a structure of unique beauty "Summer comes with such a weal of fragrances we need almost no other nurture. Leaves of sassafras and spicebrush reek with exotic aroma. Pennyroyal, crushed beneath our steps, protests in scented phrases that make the air expressive, wild grape and honeysuckle become the season's thurifers and lend the evening breezes their essences for admiration far and wide.

"The breathing process of leaves is continuous, both day and night, but the manufacture of plant food is dependent on sunlight.

expressive of the true wilderness spirit. It was fondly preened by the devoted architect, readily accepted by the sponsors, and Mr. Proctor and his mother presented it to the Green Mountain Club. At first a caretaker and his wife operated it for the specific use of Club members, but later it was opened to the general public. The G. M. C. was able to interest Mr. Treadway, manager of the L. G. Treadway Service, who came personally to supervise the development of the Lodge so that it would be on a par with the other "Real New England Inns" which extend westward as far as Dearborn, Michigan, and whose acclaim reaches far beyond. Unlike some of them, it does not operate the year around, but is open from the middle of May until the middle of October.

This achievement in rustic design, large rooms with beams and columns made from yellow birch logs still clothed in their shining bark, comfortably furnished rooms, meals of unexcelled quality, the happy songsters flying through and singing in the enveloping foliage that so perfectly blends, the gorgeous sunrise awakening the natural sanctuary, or the stillness of the evening and folding leaves . . . what a creation . . . The Inn Spectacular.

"The study of entomology is one of the most fascinating of pursuits. It takes its votaries into the pleasure house of nature and explains some of the wonderful links which form the great chain of creation. It lays open before us another world of which we have been hitherto unconscious, and shows us that the tiniest insect, so small perhaps that the unaided eye can scarcely see it, has its own work to do in the world, and does it."—Rev. J. G. Wood.

KILLINGTON SECTION DIRECTORS MEETING

21 November 1991

by Wally Rogers, Secretary-Treasurer

The meeting opened at 5:10 pm at Linda Pellerin's home. Those present were Sue and Rob Carey, Ed Reilly, Herb Ogden, Linda Pellerin, Phil Johnson, Tim Welch, Ray Catozzi, Sue Thomas, Brian Fitzgerald (for the GMC Killington Committee), Bernie Donahue and Wally Rogers.

Sue reported for Trails and Shelters: Tim Welch agreed to be co-chair and they are looking for someone to be in charge of the various side trails we maintain. She discussed a replacement for the Clarendon shelter. A group in Wallingford wished to help with labor and $700. It was agreed that we should go ahead with site selection, anticipating replacement in 2 or 3 years.

Herb reported that the Main Club is having a fund drive for their headquarters project. He reported that Wes Weston had left some old photos for review and the group agreed, in the absence of organized section archives, that the photos would be sent to the Main Club archives if they wished to have some of them. He has copies of Main Club minutes available if members wish to see them. He is currently secretary for the Main Club.

Rob Carey reported that the Canty Trail lower access may soon be changed due to property sales. A work party recently improved the trail.

With information provided by Herb and Brian, the entire group discussed Killington-Pico trail options. Motions were made and passed as follows:

The Killington section does not wish to commit to maintain both the present LT route and an additional new LT route.

The Killington Section supports investigation of the proposed western route for relocation of the AT-LT and preservation of access to the present route as part of a composite agreement that would protect the trail from the north boundary of Coolidge State Forest (south of Little Killington) to Willard Gap.

Meeting adjourned at 10:00 pm.

POTLUCK SUPPER

21 November 1991

by Linda Pellerin

As usual we had a veritable feast from everyone's contributions. The night's selections ranged from Jerry Parker's venison stew to Ed Reilly's acorn bread.

Our thanks to Jean Davies for her informative and enjoyable slide show and talk on useful and edible wild plants. We all learned what to look for in the woods and Jean brought sample of various kinds of ferns, trees and other edibles.

CLIMBING DIAMOND HEAD

by Roma Pulling

On our recent trip to Hawaii, Alfred and I stood on the beach at Waikiki, posing for a picture with Diamond Head in the background like many tourists; but I wanted more. I wanted to climb it. So one afternoon we caught a city bus going in that direction and got off at the entrance to the state park.

"Head" in my Random House dictionary is defined, among other things, as "a projecting point of a coast, esp. when high". In this case, 761 feet high. The name of the head came about by accident when British sailors found calcite crystals there and mistook them for diamonds. Even when the truth was revealed, the name stuck. The inside of the head is an ancient crater used from 1904 through World War II for coastal defense but now owned by the state.

At the bus stop we were still some distance from the trail head and proceeded to walk up a paved road and through a tunnel into the crater, where the .7 mile trail starts near a military installation. It begins on an easy incline to a lookout and from there climbs three flights of concrete stairs, one comprising exactly 99 steps. Next, one walks through a long, unlighted tunnel. In spite of a warning at the trailhead that "flashlights are required", most came without and felt their way through.

Hikers who still weren't discouraged faced another challenge: a long staircase spiralling up a vertical shaft. Those who survived this hurdle emerged onto the summit and to a fine vantage point with views of the shoreline to the east and of Waikiki to the west. It was well worth the effort, and we were amazed to find a steady stream of people each way. I would recommend this hike for all healthy visitors to the islands.

RAINY RICHARDSON LAKE

by Carol Chapman (Our previous editor, now a member of the Burlington Section.)

Memories of a perfect July weekend at Upper Richardson (one of Maine's Rangely Lakes) prompted us to plan this summer outing. Fourteen of us set out early Friday morning, August 9, hoping that the prediction of a rainy weekend would prove incorrect.

After a dry and scenic trip over, we paddled out to Big Beaver Island in waves large enough to splash over the gunwales. We found there was a shelter over the picnic tables. Tents were up before the rain arrived. Steady rain came down that afternoon, evening, and all night long, finding its way into some tents. The winds blew, and we awoke to more of the same.

Saturday, after breakfast, four of our party left in heavy seas, escorted the mile across to the mainland by Peter Alden and Clem Holden. A noon potluck feast kept us in good spirits, and tarps tied around the sides of the shelter kept the wind from blowing everything away. Reading, walks, watching loons, naps, and encounters with a friendly mallard occupied us for the day. By late afternoon, the consensus was that it would be wisest to pull up stakes and leave after an early supper.

The ten of us headed in various directions, several to Olga's camp in the Northeast Kingdom, some home, others to visit elsewhere in Maine. Sunday's weather was vastly improved with sun enough to dry out wet cloths and gear.

It doesn't sound like the kind of weekend one would want to remember. But two weeks later we had a reunion at the Holdens' camp on Coates Island with another delicious potluck, this time in warm sunshine.

PICO CAMP LOGBOOK

By Sue Thomas

One of the joys of adopting a Long Trail shelter is the opportunity to read the log books. Here's a sampling of entries made by hikers at Pico Camp this winter and spring:

12/30/90 - My buddy and I purchased snow shoes for the big trip to the Green Mountains. We should have brought water skis. As I write this it is 50 degrees and raining like hell. Some winter wonderland.

5/8/91 - Started at Route 103 yesterday, stayed at Governor Clement shelter last night when my boyfriend proposed to me. I accepted of course, and this is the best hike I've ever been on!

5/25/91 - Thank you, Thank you, THANK YOU to the trail maintainers!!! You make this happen. To those who aren't, clear a blowdown on your way out, clean a water bar with your boot heel. And remember, no matter where you go, there you are.

5/25/91 - My first weekend back on the trail after the thru hike in '89. When I awoke in a shelter on Glastenbury Mtn. this morning, D.J., Snakebite Tom, Bungalow Bill, Laurie the Traveling Wilbury and Uncle Ed were all there standing over me saying things like "He took a nasty bump on the head when he tripped on that root back there" and " You remember me dontcha Shepard?" Laurie smiled her lovely smile and put a cold rag on my forehead saying "We thought he was going to leave us there, for awhile". I tried to sit up and told them that I HAD left them - I finished my hike, climbed Katahdin in October of '89. I told them that I went on planting trees for awhile and then moved to a place called Rochester - Some of it wasn't very nice, but most of it was beautiful. Laurie said "there, there now" and everybody nodded knowingly and smiled. Just then the Traveler came walking up, stuck his head in and said "I was just passing by - on my 10th consecutive thru hike ... , wanted to see if he was alright." Nobody seemed to understand, I'd gone to another world - of type A personalities, concrete, technocomplexity, anthropocontricity, human arrogance, hatred, war, McDonalds, and the whole time I kept saying "I want to go home". Who says there is no such thing as trail magic?

ELFIN LAKE SKATING PARTY

19 January 1992

by Sue Carey

It was a very cold day with a high of 8 degrees so we didn't have to worry about falling through the ice. Eight people came on the outing: my family plus Jerry Parker and Sue Thomas. Walt and Sally Deinzer came later with their two dogs.

The ice had been cleared off in spots, but with shovels Sue and Jerry were able to make a maze of skating paths through the snow. In places the ice was crystal clear. You could look down and imagine shapes in the ice: sleeping cats, stars and jelly fish. In the cold temperature the ice was constantly freezing. Throughout the afternoon you could hear the low rumbling of pressure cracks breaking the ice.

Rob had started a fire so we were able to warm our toes and toast marshmallows and drink hot beverages.

OLD BRANDON ROAD

by Roma Pulling

On a frigid winter day when the afternoon "high" was 12 degrees, twelve daring people ventured out to hike an old road in Brandon. The name of the road, which wasn't publicized as it is on private property, is, fittingly, the Old Brandon Road. Access is from Carver Street on the northern end and from the athletic field at Otter Valley School from the south. We parked at the school and after a brief conference decided it would be easier and just as quick to walk the entire distance, which we estimated to be about a mile, up and back rather than spotting cars.

We didn't have to ponder whether to ski, snowshoe or hike as the decision had been made for us. A few days before, there had been rain followed by freezing temperatures, rendering the trail either bare or a sheet of ice. Some of us took to the woods frequently to avoid the more treacherous spots.

Our route led into the area of the oldest settlement in Brandon, then known as Neshobe. To this part of town came Amos Cutler, a blacksmith, in 1772, closely followed the next year by John Ambler and wife with their daughter and her husband, David June. The Amblers and Junes are buried in a cemetery on Hawk Hill on this road, and we visited it. Jean Davies told us of the connection by marriage between the Junes and the Cox family, early settlers of Pittsford, commemorated in the naming of a mountain in that town and by Camp Betsey Cox.

We inspected one cellar hole, and there must be others. Jerry Parker will lead another hike in this area April 26, at which time we may be able to explore further under better conditions.

Jean and her husband, Charlie Davies, invited us to stop at their house in Pittsford on the way home for coffee, and we all accepted enthusiastically. With a fire in the wood stove, coffee, tea and hot chocolate, sandwiches we brought with us and cookies supplied by the hostess and another cook, as we browsed through books from their library, it was the perfect ending to a grand outing. Thanks, Jean and Charlie.

TEXAS FALLS - HANCOCK

22 February 1992

By Phil Johnson

Nine people turned out for our hike/ski north from Texas Falls off Rt 125 between Hancock and Middlebury Gap. We started at the falls but found so much ice on and around the falls that only the braver (read less wise) of us walked down to see the falls. The ice formations in the ravine were beautiful. From the falls we took the Texas Brook Trail following the brook right up to Texas Gap, a trip of about 3 miles one way. During the winter this is used as a snowmobile trail and sure enough, we did meet a few snowmobilers. Two of these came whipping around a blind corner in front of us causing quite a scare, but no injuries.

At the top of the gap we stopped for lunch and one of our group promptly built a nice little fire and pulled out his hot dogs for lunch. It was rather pleasant to be able to enjoy the fire at the mid-point of the hike.

After lunch we started the trip back down to the cars. Two people had chosen to ski the day and spent all morning struggling up the valley, but on the way back they got their fair reward. The whole trail is a relatively even grade which seemed perfectly suited for skiing down. The biggest hazard seemed to be the two dogs hiking with us who kept jumping in front of the skiers and trying to bite the skis.

Back at the picnic area by the falls we started a fire, heated water for coffee and cocoa and roasted marshmallows. The perfect way to finish a winter hike.

STONE HUT - NORTH SHREWSBURY

29 February 1992

by Roma Pulling

Our Leap Year hike didn't have much going for it at the beginning. It was a bitterly cold and windy day with snowy roads in Shrewsbury, but four intrepid people met us at the park at the appointed time and we were off. It was nice to have Christine Cahee back with us, and George Reynolds drove up from Springfield to join us along with two of our regulars.

A short distance from our goal, our small car wasn't negotiating the snowy roads well; so Jerry Parker came to our rescue. He found us an alternative parking space and ferried us to the trail head in his 4 X 4.

There was snow on the ground in Shrewsbury! We didn't take an exact measurement, but when Sue Thomas stepped off the snowmobile track she sank in up to her knee. The scenery on the CCC road (North Shrewsbury to West Bridgewater) was fantastic.

On our way to our destination we paused briefly at two landmarks. The first was Meetinghouse Rock, where starting in 1818 church services were held until an appropriate building could be erected. The second was the site of the former picnic pavilion in Calvin Coolidge State Forest. This structure also used to be a popular destination for hikers but unfortunately burned a few years ago. Only the tall stone chimney still stands.

A short distance beyond the pavilion site our trail veered to the left and we were soon at the attractive stone building which I have heard referred to as the "stone hut". I was recently told that it was built as a cottage for the caretaker of this part of the state forest. Now, with windows broken out and the inside trashed, it is a favorite hang-out for snowmobilers, 14 of whom were there when we arrived. At least they had a fire going in the fireplace, and it was a short job to heat water for coffee, cocoa and instant soup.

After eating lunch we hiked back to Jerry's truck for a return to our cars and an early trip home.

Annual Meeting

By Phil Johnson & Herb Ogden, Jr

After a great deal of excellent food and too many desserts Rob Carey brought the meeting to order. Wally Rogers provided us with a treasurers report, a copy of which is included in the newsletter. With our current dues schedule we will be drawing upon cash in our checkbook to cover the section expenses. This sparked a lively debate on what the dues schedule should be. It was finally resolved that a committee would be formed to evaluate the due schedule and bring the topic back up at the fall potluck meeting.

Herb Ogden reported on meetings of the GMC Directors and the Executive Advisory Council, and the successful move to the new headquarters in Waterbury Center. After last year's budget woes forced cancellation of the Long Trail Patrol, the Directors are happy that there will be two Long Trail Patrols this year, plus a roving duo. The ski development plans for Pico Peak continue to cause concern; watch for release of the National Park Service's Environmental Impact Study, which may say which route the Park Service prefers north of Pico.

Sue Carey covered the Trails and Shelters explaining that she had recruited Tim Welch to help coordinate the maintenance of the trails. They have split our section so that Sue will be covering from Rt 140 to Upper Cold River Road and Tim will cover from there to Rt 4. They both expressed interest in finding someone interested in covering the side trails.

Publicity Committee Chair Bernie Donahue mentioned the publication of the hike schedule in the newspapers. The Rutland Herald has been very helpful in getting our schedule into the calendar section.

Outings Committee Co-Chair Linda Pellerin spoke about hike scheduling. Over the last year we have had no difficulty filling the three month schedule.

Herb Ogden, editor of Smoke and Blazes, noted that, in response to his pleas for help, Phil Johnson has done a fine job taking over most of the work. He also said he has given up reminding hike leaders to turn in articles, and that he welcomes non-standard articles and letters to the editor.

Rob then gave his last president's report as he is finishing up his last year after serving as president for the last six years or so. Outgoing Board members; Rob Carey, Churchill Scott and Ray Catozzi were thanked for their service to the club and three new board members were elected: Sue Carey, Sue Thomas and Phil Johnson.

The Board of Directors then had a short meeting to elect officers. Elected for the next year were: President - Phil Johnson, Vice President - Linda Pellerin, Secretary/Treasurer - Wally Rogers. In addition, Herb Ogden resigned as a Main Club director (in his role as main club secretary he maintains a seat on the main club board and Executive Advisory Council) and the Board elected a new Main Club director to represent us: Wally Rogers will serve for Herb's remaining one year.

Dear Fellow GMC Member:

We need your help on a critical trail protection issue! On May 4, the National Park Service (NPS) released its Draft Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) for the Killington/Pico section of the Long/Appalachian Trail across the Coolidge Range. We need you to become an active participant in the EIS public-comment process and to speak out for the Trail!

The Park Service has identified a preferred alternative that contains provisions that may be opposed by members of both the conservation and local business communities, but does satisfactorily protect the LT/AT. NPS must receive strong, clearly-stated support for the preferred alternative from AT/LT users during the public comment period, which ends July 15. Your participation is crucial to the effort to protect the Trail across the Coolidge Range. Please review the enclosed map and position statement and support Long/Appalachian Trail protection by:

- Attending one of the public hearings and speaking out in support of the preferred alternative. Even if you prefer to submit written comments, attend a hearing to show your support for the Trail.

June 10 in Rutland, 7:00 p.m. at the Holiday Inn (Route 7 south of town)

June 11 in Bennington, 7:00 p.m. at the Bennington Free Library (Corner of East Main and Silver Streets)

- If you cannot attend or don't speak at a public hearing, please send your written comments by July 15, 1992 to:

The draft EIS evaluates eight separate protection alternatives for the 8-mile section of the Trail between the Mendon/Shrewsbury town line (south of Little Killington) and Maine Junction (north of Sherburne Pass). The alternatives range from no additional protection to prohibiting any development near the present Trail. Several alternatives combine trail relocations (to avoid existing or proposed ski development) with varying levels of ski development across or near the Trail.

Two alternatives would prohibit any ski development across the Trail or within a 1,000-foot protective corridor that the Park Service would purchase. One of these is Alternative 3, which would protect the existing LT/AT from any development. While this is the most desirable option from a hiker's standpoint, it would prevent Pico Ski Resort from developing any of their property on the northeast side of Pico Peak. Pico's management feels that they must develop this area in order to survive, and they will surely challenge any attempt by the Park Service or the trail community to limit their options in this area. Other alternatives that keep the Trail in its current location north of Pico Peak limit ski development and are unacceptable to Pico, or allow excessive development along the Trail and are unacceptable to the GMC.

The second alternative that prohibits ski area development near the Trail is Alternative 5, the Park Service's preferred alternative. Under this alternative, the Park Service would protect the Trail in a high-elevation, remote location south of Pico Peak. The northern portion (from Pico Peak to Maine Junction) would be relocated to the west side of Pico ski area and cross Route 4 about one mile west of Sherburne Pass. NPS would purchase a 1,000-foot corridor around the Trail that would exclude any ski development. Pico Camp would eventually be relocated to a site on the new route. NPS would also seek a permanent easement to maintain the existing LT/AT as an access trail from Sherburne Pass, through proposed ski development, to Pico Peak.

The Green Mountain Club supports Alternative 5. In the best of all possible worlds, we would prefer complete protection of the existing Trail, which provides the best hiking experience of any of the alternatives. However, we believe that for most of its length, the preferred alternative offers a remote, scenic, high-quality hiking environment, and does not interfere with most ski development plans. Support for the preferred alternative demonstrates to NPS, our members, and the ski industry that we are eager to work for solutions that preserve the hiking experience while recognizing the concerns of local communities.

Our support for Alternative 5 represents a significant compromise on our part, but one that we believe is in the best long-term interest of the Trail, provided that the Park Service achieves the protection described for this alternative in the draft EIS. A fully protected, 1,000-foot corridor for the entire LT/AT between the Mendon/Shrewsbury town line and Maine Junction and an easement that would keep the current LT/AT available as an access trail from Sherburne Pass to Pico Peak must be part of the final protection package. Other conditions outlined on the enclosed position statement are also critical for this alternative to be acceptable to the GMC.

We cannot overemphasize the necessity of your support. The Park Service must receive a strong message that the protection called for in Alternative 5 must not be weakened, but rather should be strengthened by adding the points discussed in the position statement.

GMC and Appalachian Trail Conference volunteers and staff have spent countless hours working on Trail protection issues in the Killington/Pico region since the early 1980s. The Long Trail News has carried several articles since 1989 detailing the various government actions, discussions with the ski areas, agreements, lawsuits and hearings. More time, money and energy has been devoted to this matter than any other single trail protection issue. This compromise offers our best chance of protecting the Trail where it crosses the Coolidge Range.

In order to more fully involve you and others in our discussion of trail protection at Killington/Pico, we will make a presentation during the GMC Annual Meeting on June 6. We expect to begin at about 11:00 a.m. The meeting will be held at the Friendship Inn at Quechee Gorge in Quechee, Vermont. We hope you can attend.

Thank you for actively participating in this very important Trail protection effort.

Sincerely,

Brian T. Fitzgerald, Chair
Killington/Pico Committee

Executive Director

Green Mountain Club Position Statement on Killington/Pico Draft EIS

The Green Mountain Club and Appalachian Trail Conference plan to support the National Park Service preferred alternative (Alternative 5) in both oral and written testimony during the public comment period. However, our support depends on several important conditions, which will be reflected in our testimony:

- No new ski development should be permitted near or across the Trail south of Pico Peak. The section of proposed Trail from Pico to south of Little Killington offers some of the finest, roadless, high-elevation hiking in Vermont. New ski development in this area, such as that reserved by Killington in the 1989 easement agreement with NPS for the 1.2 mile Killington-Little Killington section, would have extremely negative impacts on the hiking experience. NPS purchase of Killington's outstanding rights is extremely important, and Killington has already stated its opposition to the NPS position. Consequently, support for the NPS position (under all EIS alternatives except "no action") -- to expand the corridor to 1,000 feet in width and purchase rights reserved in 1989 by Killington for ski development between Killington Peak and Little Killington -- is a critical requirement to GMC.
- The existing, historical route up Pico must be protected. Access to Pico Peak from Sherburne Pass on the current Trail must continue through grant of a permanent easement to NPS. If the western route is chosen, such an easement will ensure that one of the oldest sections of the Long Trail System will continue to be open to hikers. The existing Trail will provide a direct route to Pico Peak and the ridgeline south of Pico, as well as new loop-hiking opportunities in this popular and frequently-visited area.
- Permanent protection for a Trail route across the Rutland City Forest must be obtained. The National Park Service does not have the authority to purchase municipal land if the municipality does not wish to sell. Therefore, some commitment from the city to sell adequate land for the Trail must be received before the western route is officially sanctioned. GMC and ATC have been working closely with city officials on the possibility of such a purchase.
- Funds to pay for construction of the new route must be found. After many days of fieldwork exploring options for the western route, we have concluded that approximately 7.6 miles of new Trail would have to be constructed if the preferred alternative is selected. The Trail will cross difficult terrain in some areas, and the cost of construction will be very high. A source of funds must be identified to assure that the new Trail is properly constructed.

• • • •

The western route (Alternative 5) represents a significant compromise. The superior alternative is NPS Alternative 3, which protects the highest-quality Long/Appalachian Trail environment by prohibiting all ski area development within a 1,000-foot corridor surrounding the existing Trail north of Pico. Alternative 3 would preserve the historic, ridgeline route and the long history of the Trail at Sherburne Pass and provide the most direct connection to the Trail north of U.S. 4.

Nevertheless, we realize Alternative 3 creates an unreconcilable conflict with Pico Peak Ski Resort's expansion plans for the northeast side of Pico Peak, where the current Trail is located. Implementation of Alternative 3 by NPS would virtually guarantee a long legal battle, stretching the decision-making process well into the future, and possibly taxing the Club's limited staff and financial resources. By supporting the western route, we will minimize future conflicts with Pico ski area, demonstrate the Trail community's flexibility in establishing the permanent route of the Trail, and recognize the economic desires of the local community at the same time that we secure a remote, undeveloped, and scenic hiking experience on the northern end of the Coolidge Range.

We encourage you to prepare oral testimony for the public hearings in Rutland and Bennington on June 10 and 11 and submit written comments directly to the National Park Service during the formal public comment period on the EIS, which ends July 15. We also ask you to carefully consider the above conditions and indicate your personal support for GMC/ATC's compromise position (Alternative 5). NPS needs to hear from you -- as a member of the community of hikers who use the Long/Appalachian Trail -- and how you feel about the protection alternatives that are outlined in the EIS.

If you have any questions or want more information, please contact Dennis Shaffer at the GMC office at (802) 244-7037.

OLD BRANDON ROAD

by Jerry Parker, Leader

The day started with rain with no letup in sight. The hike was scheduled at 1 p.m. I left home in the pouring rain thinking no one would show up. As I got into Rutland the sky toward Brandon was blue and no rain was in sight. There were six hikers waiting.

We parked in the Otter Valley High School parking lot and walked across the baseball field until we came to the trail. Some wildflowers were in bloom: spring beauties, yellow violets, and bloodroots.

The two youngsters who were along really appreciated the early rain, as they didn't miss a single puddle to step into; they were wearing "rubber boots."

We visited the cemetery on Hawk Hill as we did on a previous hike led by Roma. She wrote a nice report on its history in the April Smoke & Blazes. It was a coincidence we both scheduled "mystery" hikes in the same area.

When we started down, Rosie, the youngest, had to be carried by no one but Mommy. So we had to take several rest stops and finally the other three hikers proceeded on their own. It turned out to be a beautiful day, and Rosie's comment was "Mommy, this was a real nice hike."

LILY POND, CASTLETON

by Sue Thomas, Leader

I'm sitting at home listening to the thunder crack and the rain pour down and thinking how fortunate we were to finish our hike a mere half hour before the storm hit!

We were also fortunate to have among our 14 hikers several experts on various subjects, which added a great deal to the day. Frank and Libby Thorne showed us ferns and club mosses, Jerry Parker identified raccoon and turkey tracks and found an area where the turkeys had scraped under the fallen pine needles for food, and Jean Davies told us Indian and colonial uses for many of the plants we found, even treating us to a taste of day lily shoots. With the aid of binoculars and a field guide we identified a Northern harrier (a large hawk), flushed a grouse, and had to tread lightly to avoid stepping on red eft.

Because of our unusually cold spring, wildflowers were scarce, so that those we found were enthusiastically appreciated -- coltsfoot, several kinds of tiny violets, and one trillium bud. The first hepatica was spotted when we had to detour around an area where beavers had flooded the trail, so I guess we can thank them for it.

The first hikers to reach the pond flushed six ducks, but apparently they didn't like the looks of our group and hadn't returned before we finished our lunch. A heron was spotted flying overhead and peepers sang (yelled) for us.

We took a vote and decided to make a short side trip past a beautiful little waterfall to a place where beavers have recently done some landscaping, transforming a footbridge into a dam and building their lodge in the newly flooded area. On the way, we found a pile of feathers where a grouse provided a meal for some hungry critter.

We finished the hike at the Bomoseen float bridge, where most of the hikers settled under a tree to wait for the rest of the cars to be ferried over from Glen Lake. All in all it was a very productive hike, considering everything that we saw and learned in a distance of only 2 1/2 miles. Thanks to everyone for making it so much fun.

BRISTOL NOTCH

9 May 1992

by Jerry Parker, Leader

I couldn't believe it: another hike of mine and another rainy morning with rain forecast all day!

We had a misprint in the schedule: "Easy 4 mile hike." I anticipated a fairly large crowd, all expecting an easy hike. I guess the weather helped in this respect.

Six hikers were waiting, of which two were prepared for that easy hike. Entering Middlebury, we were greeted by clear and sunny skies and enjoyed this lovely weather all day.

I decided first to go to Gilmore Pond, where we stopped for lunch. Nina and Margaret then went back to the cars; they were able to have their easy hike. Sue offered to walk them down but they assured us they could make it OK. This section of the trail is well-traveled. Linda was puzzled by the picture window in the outhouse. I explained the reason but she wasn't impressed.

Five of us proceeded. We saw several beaver dams. I did not have the problem finding the plane wreckage that I did last year when we went in June and the area was overgrown and I missed it within fifty feet of the site. We walked around inspecting the plane parts. Phil was busy taking pictures. On the way down we stopped at the lookout. We could see Lake Champlain and as far as New York.

As we were nearing the road, I spotted some trailing arbutus that were almost gone by. We continued down to where we parked. Nina and Margaret left us a note assuring us they made it back and, yes, I'm proud of you both.

SOUTHERN HALF WORK PARTIES

16 and 17 May, 13 and 27 June
by Sue Carey, Leader

Route 140 to Upper Cold River Road, 16 and 17 May: Maintenance on the Trail in rainy weather is uncomfortable. When Saturday dawned as a dreary day with rain likely, I decided to postpone the work party. Anyone who called was told that we would meet on Sunday. Just in case anybody came to the park wanting to work, I brought tools. Five people decided to risk getting wet and came to the park willing to work. The next day five more people arrived, so we got all of the southern part of the Killington Section brushed and cleared.

Clarendon Gorge Suspension Bridge, 13 June: Various people from the Killington Section have been warning the main club about the poor condition of Clarendon Gorge Bridge for years and finally they started to listen. Robert Freis (now former but at that time current GMC Field Supervisor) was able to obtain a grant from the National Park Service for repairs to the bridge. Fred Gilbert volunteered to supervise a work party, and all that was left was to find people to work.

Even though the Clarendon Gorge Bridge is not part of the Killington Section's duties, it was left to the Section to find volunteers. The date was arranged after Smoke & Blazes was mailed with the outing schedule, but with an informational letter sent to the membership and Bernie Donahue's good publicity, enough volunteers arrived to complete the task. The workers replaced some rotten support beams, installed a higher cable for a hand railing, fenced the open space under the railing, and greased the cables.

Within the next several years more work will be needed.

Clarendon Shelter area Long Trail relocation, 27 June: Three years ago, when the Long Trail in Clarendon was relocated to the land bought by the National Park Service, a section just north of Clarendon Shelter was missed. On 27 June we relocated the remaining 200 yards or so of trail into protected trail corridor land. The new section runs straight across the abandoned town road, crosses the brook, passes a small cascade, and heads sharply east to join the old route above Clarendon Shelter. The shelter, not on protected land, is now on a blue-blazed side trail. Everything was finished, including blue and white blazes. [Signs to Clarendon Shelter were still needed; one AT through hiker told me he missed the shelter altogether. --Ed.] We left and walked down the old road to our vehicles just before it started to rain and hail.

VARIOUS HIKING ADVENTURES

by Roma Pulling

From the time I read about the new Bear Hollow Shelter in the November issue of Long Trail News, I knew I had to go there. It was May 5 this year before all systems were "GO" and we were headed north toward Morristown.

Bear Hollow is an open-front shelter constructed in 1991 by the Sterling Section about a mile south of the old French Camp, which was still standing in May and sheltering hikers as it has since 1931. We camped there on July 6, 1984, on our way south to Smugglers's Notch.

Because of spring road conditions, we couldn't drive all the way to the gate on the road branching south from Route 15. Walking was easy and the wildflowers, including colts's foot, spring beauties and dog tooth violets, were beautiful along the way. The crossing of French Hill Brook was as difficult as I remembered it, and we spent several minutes finding a safe crossing in that season of high water.

The new shelter was worth the effort to get there. It is well constructed on a shelf above a stream with a railing across the front. The round trip was about six miles.

Our other outings were all short ones in National Parks on our recent trip through the Midwest, starting with the Empire Bluff Trail at Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore, in Michigan. It led us through the forest to a lookout 400 feet over Lake Michigan. It afforded a lovely view of the dunes further north on the shore. Before leaving we drove to another vantage point and climbed a dune.

Our next opportunity to stretch out legs came on our visit to Isle Royale National Park. This park is part of Michigan but closer to Minnesota, and we drove there to catch a boat to the island. No cars are allowed on the island; one either walks or doesn't get around. Seven of the sixteen people on our boat were backpackers who planned to stay several days. We got off the boat, after a 2 1/2 hour ride, at the ranger station on the southern end of the island, called Windigo. After a very quick lunch, we had two hours before catching the boat back to Grand Portage, and we made the most of it. After completing a loop trail, we headed for the campground on the lake shore and learned from another hiker that a moose was plainly not to be missed! We succeeded in sneaking up for a good view and were mostly ignored by the big fellow.

Three days later we were on a trail in Pipestone National Monument in southwestern Minnesota. This area is administered by the Park Service to protect quarries used by Indians for hundreds of years. The stone quarried there was carved into peace pipes. Today Indians are the only people allowed to quarry the stone, and we watched them working on it. The trail led us past several places where quarries have been worked in the past.

In Blue Mound State Park in south-central Wisconsin we hiked the Mound Trail to see the herd of about 30 buffalo. Then we continued on to inspect the mound, which is actually a long ridge constructed of blocks of stone by people in the past. No one knows why or by whom.

In the hilly area of northeastern Iowa near Marquette we took a guided hike in Effigy Mounds National Monument. There both conical and effigy mounds constructed by Hopewell Indians are protected. The ranger led us past a number of them and explained that the rounded mounds were used as burial sites while no one knows the purpose of those shaped like animals. We saw one shaped like a bear. Another highlight of this hike was a lookout with a gorgeous view of the Mississippi River Islands, a wildlife refuge.

Our last hike was at Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore on Indiana's Lake Michigan shore. We enjoyed a short hike on a woodsy trail near the Visitor's Center. While being appreciative that 13,000 acres of woods and shoreline have been preserved, I never lost a feeling of claustrophobia. It is squeezed between a nuclear power plant on the east and the overcrowded maze that is Chicago on the west.

Two days later we were winging our way home to the familiar hills of Vermont.

CLARK BROOK TRAIL

11 July 1992

by Roma Pulling, Leader

At an early (8:00) hour on Saturday morning five other people arrived at the park and headed north toward Granville with Alfred and me in three cars. Like so many days this summer, it was cloudy and cool.

Clark Brook Trail started out easy but required increased effort as we neared the LT. Even some of the younger hikers took more frequent rest stops. Several crossings of Clark Brook were spanned by bridges. One of these caused comment as the hand rail was in the middle.

We arrived at the junction of the Clark Brook Trail and the LT near lunchtime so paused to eat. Two people returned to their car at that time, but five of us continued north on the Long Trail to the summit of Mt. Roosevelt, .4 mile further on. The summit was enveloped in fog, but we stood where there would have been an excellent view to the east on a clear day.

We passed beds of violet wood sorrel, and I stopped to admire a cascade and a flower that was new to me - a shinleaf.

One hiker suffered a painfully sprained ankle on the return hike but has survived to lead another hike.

APPALACHIAN TRAIL, BRIDGEWATER

by Roma Pulling, Leader

For the first time, we planned a hike and no one came. It wasn't the weather because it was nearly ideal for hiking. Unfortunately, it was equally ideal for many other activities.

While the hike was still in its planning stage, we discovered that the road to No Town, where we planned to have a family member meet us and whisk us back to our trail head in Bridgewater to pick up our car, was blocked by a "Bridge Closed" sign. So we had to activate Plan B, which was to hike as far on the Appalachian Trail from North Bridgewater as possible and return the same way.

On the way along Route 4 I watched the Ottauquechee River for signs of wildlife and discovered a herd of six deer on the opposite bank. A thrilling sight!!

After having driven as far as possible on the access road, we parked and walked up an abandoned road to the Appalachian Trail crossing and headed south. In about a half hour we passed the side trail leading to Wintturi Shelter but continued on over a knob. By lunch time we reached what is known as The Lookout but when I lived in that area was a wooden tower called Lucy's Lookout. Now it is a frame camp, locked, but with a ladder leading to an observation platform on the roof. The view is outstanding and encompasses nearly 360 degrees.

A lot of the trail there followed old roads and we could zip along, but we soon encountered another knob, steeper than the first. Further on we crossed a bridle trail and then came to a brook. A glance at our watches told us we should turn back.

Some of this trail had been relocated since my last outing there so was much new to me. We saw some late-blooming violet wood sorrel, a pink flower I have yet to identify, and ghostly Indian pipes. We met one through hiker and one out for a shorter period.

BALD MOUNTAIN - MOONLIGHT HIKE

12-13 September 1992

by Jerry Parker, Leader

What a night! What a moon!
What a hike!!

You couldn't have asked for a better night. It was clear and cool with a full moon. We started at 6:20 p.m. on the Bald Mountain trail toward Red Rock Vista. There were eleven hikers and after a short distance I realized it was going to be a slow hike. The trail was not well maintained and hard to follow in daylight, and when it started getting dark it was almost impossible.

Some of the hikers expected an easier hike, but we had several steep places to climb. We had to take several rest stops along the way.

We made it to the Red Rock Vista after 8:00 p.m. where we ate supper overlooking the City of Rutland all lit up, an impressive sight. We could hear the noise from the fair but the trees obscured our view. While we ate we decided on a easier decent which was longer. We started down after 9:00 p.m. and really had to look for the trail. I went ahead to search for the trail on one occasion and found a partly chewed deer antler which mice eat to get their calcium.

We came to the airport lookout next. The runways were all lit up and flashing. It was beautiful. After this our troubles began. It was 10:00 when we came to a sign stating "Trail Closed Logging"! There wasn't much we could do but continue on. There was no trail to follow, so we headed down the logging road. After a slow trip we came to a logging header which I recognized from a previous hike. By then our flashlights were getting dim. Phil let me use a spare one he had in his pack. We were on the logging road that went between Cold River and where we parked.

It was now 11:00 p.m.. Some of the group weren't sure whether I knew where we were, but Joann recognized the area from a spring hike with Churchill and assured all that we were not lost. When we got into clearings the moon gave us light we sorely needed.

We continued finally getting to the fire road that circles Bald Mountain. It was almost midnight. As we came to our cars I expected someone waiting for us (like the rescue squad). One comment was "This sure was a real adventure." I think it will be talked about for some time.

What started out to be a easy three mile hike as scheduled was almost five miles and six hours.

NEW ROOF ON COOPER LODGE

by Sue Carey

Ruth and Sandy Lamb, caretakers of Cooper Lodge, were the instigators of this work party. Ruth is a descendant of C.P. Cooper for whom the lodge is named. Ruth's uncle, C.P. Cooper's son, donated money for the new roof.

The new roof was definitely needed. Water was leaking into the lodge and was damaging one section of the structure. The work party was arranged after the schedule was mailed, but through word of mouth, the US mail and the Rutland Herald, enough people were notified for a crew of eleven to be formed.

We drove two trucks up the steep and winding Killington service road. The new roofing was carried approximately 75 yards to the lodge and the old roofing was carried back to the trucks. These ten feet by three feet pieces of metal were not only heavy but awkward.

The weather was very dreary. The entire day was spent in a cloud. Occasional wind gusts made working treacherous. One sheet of metal was blown off the roof and hit John Ruppe in the head.

The roof removal and replacement took the entire day with the majority of the crew not leaving the mountain until 6:00. Originally we had hoped to also reconstruct the outhouse at Pico Camp, but roof work took the entire time. If you are interested in outhouse construction, contact Tim Welch.

It was a hard job but the roof should last for decades. Ruth and Sandy would like to thank all the Killington Section "laborers" who helped complete this project.

We would like to thank Ruth and Sandy for their super effort as caretakers of Cooper Lodge!

DORSET PEAK

4 October 1992

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

This hike began with my version of the old riddle about the river, the boat that can hold only three people and a dog (or whatever), the seven people, three dogs, and one cat that must get across, and the question how many trips are necessary. When I absentmindedly let a hiker meet us at the Danby trailhead instead of at the North Dorset trailhead, I added a round trip between these two places. At least the trips up and down the Great Valley of Vermont were unusually pretty, just before the peak of foliage season, and we did finally get started up the mountain.

The Danby trailhead is almost exactly due south of Danby Four Corners, beginning at the 1410' elevation shown on the USGS Dorset 7.5 min. quadrangle. The top is about 3760' and that yields some 2350' of climb, plus a little more in the saddles between the various peaks.

We headed about due south from the Danby trailhead and soon crossed a small brook on a well-maintained woodroad that appeared to be on Smoky House Project land. Before we left the fields, we had a beautiful view north over the fall colors and the mountains on this wonderfully clear, crisp day. The woodroad climbed steadily and sometimes quite steeply to the gap between the 3515' west peak of Dorset Mountain and the higher east peaks, right on the Danby-Dorset town line. This is where the trail from Dorset Hollow comes in. It is the only Dorset Mountain trail described in the club's Day Hiker's Guide to Vermont. From the gap, we again had nice views to the north and northwest.

From the gap, the woodroad, which I had billed as "relatively level," actually climbs pretty steeply in places before the trail leaves it and heads south to the site of the fire tower. There was a little good-natured grumbling about the way lawyers use language from those who hadn't grasped the full significance of "relatively level."

We lunched at the fire tower site, enjoying the views to the west and north till the cold west wind drove us off this 3730' knob and on to the actual Dorset Peak, elevation 3770'. The true peak boasts a nicely carved sign, the lower five feet or so of a cabin nicely made of logs squared off at the ends, and an Appalachian Mountain Club "New England Hundred Highest" register. There is a limited view back to the fire tower site from just southwest of the true peak.

Driven by my recollection of a view from the northernmost peak (3690'), our group of eight went thither. After the summit ridge trail hit the old woodroad, the trail became pretty indistinct, but we did find the final peak and the remains of another log cabin there. The view, however, turned out to be in the same category as the gold that the old Spaniard is supposed to have hidden at Wallingford's White Rocks.

We retraced our route to about 700' southwest of the true peak, then turned south at a junction marked by signs. There was a "North Dorset" sign pointing back the way we had come. We concluded it had fallen off the tree and been nailed back up pointing in the wrong direction.

At first, our trail down was a little-used snowmobile trail that moonlighted as a brook in places, descending at a moderate grade. Almost all of it shows on the USGS map; just the very top is missing. At the 3350' elevation, this trail joins a woodroad that the USGS map shows as coming from near the fire tower site. After a very pretty and nearly level quarter mile, the woodroad suddenly pitches down very steeply and loses about 800' in only half a mile. This was slow going, but pretty.

Peak and Netop Mountain, we paused to consume the goodies that we had passed up at the windswept fire tower site. They were most generously shared by our excellent bakers while we admired the view of Dorset Mountain and The Mettawee to the west.

From here, the woodroad had been used very recently for logging. The skid tracks went south up toward Netop; we took them downhill and, after two switchbacks, reached the old Dorset-Danby County Road described in the Day Hiker's Guide. I was glad to see the County Road, for I had never hiked down to it from Dorset Peak before and was not absolutely sure the woodroad I had spotted earlier this summer was the same one the USGS map showed coming down from Dorset Peak.

We crossed the County Road and headed down what the USGS map calls a "jeep trail," soon crossing an old power line evidenced by a huge downed pole. Pretty soon, a blue-blazed road came in from the north. This hits the County Road a little farther north than we did, and is an alternate route to the Natural Bridge. We followed the trail, now an old public road, downhill and across Gulf Brook to the poorly-marked junction with the Natural Bridge Trail. After about 400' the road became passable. We walked past an old dam and a few houses, and soon we were in North Dorset at our cars.

This is a strenuous but very pretty way to go up and down Dorset, and nicer than the route from Dorset Hollow, which is extremely steep before it hits the Dorset Mountain gap. I've described it at some length because it is not in the Day Hiker's Guide. With this description and the USGS map, an experienced hiker should have little trouble following it.

DEER KNOLL HIKE

by Rob Carey, Leader

Let's go some place different. How about Deer Knoll on Mt. Equinox? Sure, we can scout it out at the Intersectional before leading it in October. Thus began the adventure.

At the Intersectional, we discovered that Deer Knoll had been dropped from the newer Day Hikers Guide (note that this is not the most current one). After spending some time looking for the Burr and Burton Trail we finally got started. After the Trail started getting steep, it was time to bushwhack. Just as we neared "turn-around-time" the advance members of the group spotted a promising opening and we arrived at the destination and enjoyed the view. The return trip suggested several roads that would reduce the bushwhacking.

The day of the Section's Hike was at the height of the foliage season, a fact we were reminded of as we drove into Manchester. Traffic was backed up about a mile either side of Malfunction Junction. Starting the hiking from Burr and Burton, and following the Burr and Burton Trail got us off to a good start. Branching off we followed several roads, until none seemed to be heading the right direction. It was time to start bushwhacking. The plan was to hit another old road and follow it awhile. Unfortunately, we never ran into any of the other roads. As our "turn-around-time" approached, we decided to retreat and enjoy the hike back. The foliage, although a little past peak, was still beautiful.

We did see some promising roads leading toward Equinox Pond, where the old guidebook describes the Deer Knoll Trail beginning. Perhaps we'll try again next year. The view is worth it!

RUTLAND REGIONAL PLANNING COMMISSION - ENVIRONMENT REPRESENTATIVE.

Wally Rogers is the area-wide representative for the environment on the Rutland Regional Planning Commission. The Commission is developing a regional plan at this time and also reacts to town plans and other regional activities. The Long Trail, AT, Catamount Trail, open space, water quality, bike trails and land use are all important issues that may be affected by the Commission. He wishes to develop a list of Rutland County residents interested in these topics: people who want to learn more about the issues and be able to take part in town or regional meetings and promote the importance of these environmental issues.

KILLINGTON AND PICO UPDATE

by Herb Ogden, Jr.

During the National Park Service's comment period on its draft Environmental Impact Statement, about 50 GMC members wrote to the NPS and sent the GMC office a copy. All but about 5 took the GMC's position of support for Alternative 5 (west of Pico, rejoining the LT at Willard Gap) with some protection for the current LT. The local Appalachian Trail Conference staffer is negotiating with Pico and the City of Rutland to get this combination. Success appears possible. Meanwhile, the final NPS Environmental Impact Statement will probably come out in January and will probably continue to choose Alternative 5.

Dear Members of the Killington Section-Green Mountain Club:

The following minutes for our meeting, November 21, 1992 has the approved dues schedule for the section. Please check this notice when you send your dues during January, 1993. If a date appears on your mailing label because of joining late in the year, you may deduct $0.25 for each month in the year you were not a member--if your label says 8/92, deduct 8 times 0.25 or two dollars.

Twenty-three members of the Killington Section met at the Econo Lodge in Mendon on November 21, 1992 for a pot-luck supper and special meeting which was duly warned. The business meeting was opened by President Phil Johnson at 1845 hours. Sue Carey, "Trails and Shelters", announced an environmental training meeting to be held Jan 23-24. Herb Ogden described the pro and con views of the National Scenic Trail designation for the Long Trail. Discussion followed. The members present voted unanimously to endorse the directors motion "The Killington Section Board of Directors oppose deciding National Scenic Trail status until more complete information is obtained and urge that any proposal acted upon by the Main Club Directors be presented to the Members at the next Annual Meeting for ratification before action is taken." Members are urged to pass on their views.

Wally Rogers presented the dues proposal. Our local household costs are currently $6 per year. The main club assessment has gone from $5.50 three years ago to the present $12/18. We have local funds to temporarily soften the increased dues impact. The following dues categories and fees were unanimously approved.

life member-Kil Sect	400.00	400.00

Group consensus was to thank our Econo Lodge Hosts.
Herb Ogden presented a program titled Cycling in Germany.
Meeting was adjourned at 2015 hours.

OTTER CREEK CANOE TRIP

5 September 1992

by Ruth Gibbud & Jerry Parker,
Leaders

On a sunny Saturday morning, ten varicolored canoes with 20 adults, four children and one dog put into Otter Creek at the West Salisbury covered bridge and headed north for Middlebury. On the way we got a history lesson when we stopped at the marker commemorating Ann Story. The river was high enough for us to enjoy the many remaining wildflowers and avoid the mud common along much of the rest of the river at this time of year. We took out for lunch at a railroad trestle that provided photographers with some interesting perspectives on the river and the rails as well as the beginning of the color changes along the mountains.

This reporter heard no complaints and enjoyed the trip tremendously.

LONG TRAIL - LINCOLN GAP TO COOLEY GLEN

by Sue Thomas, Leader

The forecast was awful the day we set out for this hike, but as it was one of three pieces I needed to finish my end-to-end, I was determined to go anyway. It was a joint hike with the Burlington Section which made it lots of fun. Hope we'll be able to do more of that in the future. We started up from Lincoln Gap (and I mean UP!), a great way to get your heart started! After all the ugly predictions it turned out to be a beautiful day, tho cold, we weren't tempted to linger at the viewpoints. Late fall is such a great time to hike ridgetops, with the leaves down you can see so much more, and the light is especially nice for taking pictures. We had a long ridge to traverse before climbing to the summit of Mt. Grant, and it was very beautiful.

We had a quick lunch at the summit, the wind and cold inspiring us to eat quickly, and descended to Cooley Glen shelter. From there we followed the Cooley Glen Trail along a beautiful river down to our cars. It was a long hike but one I'd like to do again in warmer weather when the views are more appealing.

We missed the Pullings, whose car we spotted in the parking lot. They were off on the Emily Proctor Trail showing off in front of some feeble young folks, and had already left by the time we got back to our cars. If you want more details, ask them- that is if you can keep up with them long enough to hear it!

PLEASE SEND 1993 DUES TO THE SECTION TREASURER NOW!

Please see the article on page 7 and the form on page 8. Thanks!

NICKWAKETT CAVE - PITTSFORD

by Sue Carey, Leader

The day was very cloudy with scattered showers forecast. This didn't seem to deter many because nineteen people came on this hike including eight children. I advertised this hike in my Brownie schedule so two of the families who came have girls in my troop.

Nickwakett Cave is a mile up an old town road. It is a small cave with three entrances, but there are several long passages to explore. It also has bats, spiders, and several nice formations of flowstone and ribbons.

The following is a story about the trip by Laura Daubenspeck, a second grade student:

Today Im happy becas im going in a cave. Evre bute went in except me I went alittl ways it was dark. at the end it was rainy we fond sheltr. I was rel rel cold and wet the shetr was dry I got in the shetr I got rel dirty my dad got dirty to it was fun.

The following is a story by Mara Carey, also a second grade student:

Today Im happy becus im going to a cave it is dark. When I came in I was clean. When I came out I was dirty. I liked the cave.

CANTY TRAIL WORK PARTY, BLUE RIDGE MOUNTAIN

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

On a wonderfully clear day, five stalwarts gathered to put the Canty Trail to bed for the winter. In Mendon, a sixth hastened up the trail to join us.

We began by clearing blow-downs on the fairly level stretch before the first big brook crossing, leaving one evergreen stump cut in a way we think will puzzle future hikers. (Its present position is not that in which it was cut.) After the first crossing was a skid road, new this year. It has obliterated the old road from there to the biggest brook crossing and made the trail wetter. Fortunately, the loggers spared most of the blazed trees. Unfortunately, they used blue to mark their trees to cut.

We crossed the major brook on a new log bridge, deviating from the trail, which crosses a few feet upstream on rocks. The skid road finally stopped a few yards short of the National Forest purchase boundary. We couldn't do much about it except open a few waterbars.

Once we entered National Forest and were back on the old woodroad, most of our work was drainage. We dug out all the old waterbars and added several new ones. We also cleared spur trails to the top and bottom of the cascade and improved the summit trails a little.

A little snow lingered in shady places above the 3000' level, but we were warmed by the sun as we lunched at the Rutland Lookout. Ray Catozzi told us about the old Hellebore Trail that connected Blue Ridge with Willard Gap until the 1930s, and we speculated about where it deviated from the top of the present trail. I noted that the woodroad that crosses the Canty Trail above the cascade continues across the brook on a ruined log bridge and eventually (after many briars) comes back into the Canty Trail somewhat above where the Canty Trail turns northeast, away from the old Canty place. Maybe the Hellebore Trail branched northeast from that woodroad?

Ray confirmed that long-time member Craigie Perkins, who owned Tall Timbers at the bottom of the Canty Trail, has sold it to his son in North Carolina. He may want the trail moved. Ray will write to him to try to keep access to Blue Ridge, one of our prettiest hikes.

LACHUTE RIVER INTERPRETIVE TRAIL
by Sue Thomas, Leader

Our annual effort to avoid being shot at during hunting season took us to Ticonderoga this year for a short hike along the LaChute River. Armed with a very detailed pamphlet we passed the sites where a succession of mills once operated, beginning with the first sawmill built by the French in 1755, lumber in the 1800's, graphite (remember those yellow "Ticonderoga" pencils you used in school?), iron, paper and pulp in the 1900's, and today's hydroelectric turbine. The pamphlet also explained the geology of the area, and even though we lost track of where we were some of the time it was very interesting.

We'd planned to roam around Fort Ti after that but the gates were locked up tight, and rather than demand entry "in the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress" (or the Green Mountain Club!) we went on to Chimney Point for lunch amid the ruins of the fort there. Much of the barracks is still standing and the kids had a wonderful time running from room to room.

I have some extra copies of the LaChute interpretive pamphlet if anyone would like one. It is a short hike but worth the trip for history buffs.

POTLUCK AND SPECIAL MEETING
21 November 1992
by Phil Johnson, President

At our annual "Hunting Season" potluck last November twenty three members showed up to enjoy a pleasant evening of eating, drinking, eating, talking, eating, listening and a little more eating. The minutes of the meeting were mailed out to all members along with a copy of our current membership list.

Sue Carey gave an update on Trails and Shelters status, Herb Ogden lead a discussion of the possible designation of the Long Trail as a National Scenic Trail. Members approved the Section Directors' request that the GMC gather more information before voting on this. We evaluated and unanimously approved a proposal from the Board of Directors to change the dues structure. This new dues structure simplifies the old structure by eliminating two of the seven categories. It also increases the total amount of dues which will be received to partially offset increases in Main Club assessments. Please note the new dues listed on the back page of the Smoke and Blazes when paying your 1993 dues.

Lastly, I'd like to thank Herb for his slide show tour of bicycling in Germany and our hosts, Ross Almo and Susan Doane of the Econo Lodge for providing the facilities free of charge to our section.

ABBEY POND, RIPTON
6 December 1992
by Roma Pulling, Leader

This lovely little woodland pond used to be a favorite destination for KS members but had been selected for several years. The day Alfred and I chose to make up for this omission was a good day for a winter hike - not too cold and at least partly sunny.

Four people met us at the park, and we were off to our parking area a short distance east of Rt. 116 in East Middlebury. The trail which starts here is easy at first except for a tricky crossing of Muddy Brook, which is the outlet of Abbey Pond. From here the trail rises more steeply, and on this stretch we lost two of our hikers, who returned to their car.

The blazing caused some momentary confusion, but we arrived at the pond at lunchtime only to find a brisk, cold wind which discouraged us from lingering. We found a spot which offered some shelter and ate a quick lunch and left rather hurriedly but not before admiring the beaver lodge and two blue heron nests in the tree tops. We were told that access to the pond is controlled during nesting season.

On our return to our cars, we found our two companions waiting for us, and after agreeing that it had been a pleasant outing, we headed home.

On the trail we met four hunters (muzzle loaders) and four other hikers.

PINE HILL PARK TO PROCTOR

9 January 1993

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

On a mercilessly cold but, luckily, mercifully only slightly breezy forenoon, the Leader was astonished and delighted to find that thirteen other people had decided to brave the icy air and try a new hike. One very small dog also participated in the outing, peering out of a Snugli while trying to keep his ears from freezing and, doubtless, wondering what the humans were up to.

After spotting cars near the end of Ormsbee Avenue in Proctor, we began our hike at the north end of Evergreen Avenue in the City of Rutland, entering Pine Hill Park. After enjoying the view along the power line from near the old stone crusher, we hiked one of the few still-open parts of the Pine Hill Park Trail System, up to the road to Rocky Pond. As we gained elevation, we encountered a slight dusting of snow.

We paused briefly to enjoy the view over frozen Rocky Pond. Some of the hikers reminisced about the days when this was a city swimming area with a parking lot, refreshment stand, and fireplaces. Then it was on to Muddy Pond, much prettier than its name. Turning westerly at the junction on the south side of Muddy Pond, we soon passed the last view of Rocky Pond and tramped through pleasant woods to another power line, which we followed for some distance. We took the second trail to the north from the power line and followed a woodroad along the west side of Pine Hill. Near what appeared to be an old orchard, we found numerous oblong holes in the ground, probably for percolation tests.

By now our thermometers showed an average temperature in the mid-teens Fahrenheit. The lunch stop was appropriately short. We then began a long downgrade, avoiding the trails to the east that go higher on Pine Hill. We skirted Reynolds Reservoir, passed a Proctor water storage tank, emerged onto Proctor streets, and were soon enjoying the welcome warmth of our cars.

Apparently the wildlife found the cold even less appealing than we did. Nothing seemed to be stirring, though we did see some deer tracks and what appeared to be a raccoon track.

G.M.C. DIRECTORS REJECT DRAFTING U.S. SCENIC TRAIL LEGISLATION; APPROVE NEW TRAIL MANAGEMENT PLAN IN DAY-LONG MEETING
by Herbert G. Ogden, Jr., Club Secretary

After considerable debate and an amendment to treat logging on the Appalachian Trail the same as on the LT, the Directors adopted an over forty page LT System Management Plan, with more specifics than the former one. This will guide Club staff and volunteers in dealing with what happens on and near the Trail.

A proposal by the Land Protection Committee to draft legislation making the LT a National Scenic Trail, so that federal eminent domain authority could be used to deal with landowners who refused to sell a trail corridor (as on the Appalachian Trail), was defeated 20-9 after intense debate and a dramatic appearance by a landowner who closed the LT.

Talks with Pico and the City to reroute the LT/AT west of Pico Peak and rejoin the present route at Willard Gap continue. North of Pico, the present LT will likely become a side trail.

SNAKE MOUNTAIN HIKE

by Phil Johnson, Leader

The weekend before the hike, Linda and I went to Snake Mountain to scout out the starting point for the hike. While we were driving around the icy backroads, slipping and sliding in my 4 wheel drive truck, we were somewhat suprised to be passed by a person on a mountain bike, effortlessly pedaling up the hill. I'm convinced that this person could have also ridden that bike straight up Deer Leap.

We followed the directions in the Day Hiker's Guide and found what we thought was the starting point for the trail. Unfortunately the land was posted and we were unsuccessful in contacting the landowner. Sue Thomas had mentioned that she had a friend who lived in the area and that if needed, Sue could contact her to see if there was another access to the mountain. We did take Sue up on her offer, and were informed of a trail that starts on the east side of the ridge and works its way up a steeper path.

On Saturday morning we met four others at the park, and started north. We picked up Nina, Margret, and Nina's daughter Joanne in Middlebury. Near the trailhead we met Gordon and Helen Cawood of the Breadloaf Section.

We found the trailhead with no trouble approximately straight east of the summit. The eleven of us started hiking in light fog and under cloud cover, but were hopeful that the weather forecast for sunny skies would grace our hike. The temperature was just right at around 40 degrees. The ground was snow covered and slippery and wet at times. Throughout the hike we found many animal tracks that Jerry was able to identify: deer, raccoon, squirrel, turkey, partridge, rabbit, and maybe even a bobcat.

We hiked north, we hiked west, we hiked south and we hiked east. We found ridgelines, a beaver pond and even a summit, but we never found Snake Mountain summit, or any trail we could identify as the trail noted in the Day Hiker's Guide. After a couple hours of wandering and the requisite lunch stop with cookies, we decided to give up our quest for the top and head back to the cars. Although the leader received much good natured ribbing about his orienteering skills, everyone had a good time.

For future adventurers I will note here directions to the trailhead that we used on the east. Take Route 23 northwest out of Middlebury and follow it through Weybridge Hill. About 1.5 miles past Weybridge Hill, when Otter Creek appears on your right, take Prunier Road to the left. Go over a one lane bridge over Lemon Fair River and take a right. Follow this road for about a mile and you will see a red house on the right and the trailhead on the left. There's a red steel gate across the trail. I will not attempt to advise how to get to the summit from there!

The Day Hiker's Guide also notes that the trail formerly started on the west side of the ridge across from Willmarth Road. This will be my next try on the mountain.

VALENTINE'S FIREPLACE PARTY

14 February 1993

by Roma Pulling, Leader

The weather was better than predicted on Valentine's Day with partial sunshine. With two cars and the six hikers who met us at the park, Alfred and I headed for the end of Bellevue Avenue, where we were joined by the lone skier. There, assisted by Ray Catozzi, who had hiked this route several times before, Alfred started hiking toward our house, cutting across lots, following paths through the woods and then power lines.

While the hikers got under way, I volunteered to ferry our car back to our house, where we would need it for transportation later. That done, I strapped on the snowshoes, took Sitka on her leash, and started back along the route the group would be taking. After being slowed down twice when Sitka and I disagreed on which way to go -- including once when she thought it was her duty to chase a snowmobile -- I met the group coming through what our neighbor calls the Cedar Swamp. It should have been frozen -- we had had several below-zero nights -- but two people got wet feet. We think high water this year was the reason it failed to freeze solid as on previous hikes. I still feel guilty for leading people into a quagmire.

Back at the house, Alfred had the wood ready in the fireplace and in minutes we were sitting cozily in front of a roaring fire with cups of coffee or hot chocolate. To complete the menu there were cookies of several kinds contributed by the hikers, and Valentine candy. It seemed like an ideal way to spend a winter afternoon.

WEST HAVEN SKI TRIP

by Wally Rogers, Leader

Five of us had a great day for a five mile ski trip in West Haven. It was a glorious sunny day, starting at 8 degrees and warming to 18 by the end of our three hour trip. We crossed snowy fields along the Poultney River and then climbed to the gap at the base of the Bald Mountain cliffs and the home of the talus slope rattlers. All snakes were in their dens, but we saw many rabbit, deer, partridge and turkey tracks and kills in the snow. Skiing back to Lake Champlain, we ate our lunches and then had a flat two miles on the lake back to our cars. Intermediate skiing skills were important and everyone did very well.

SHERBURNE PASS TO PICO CAMP

27 March 1993

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

I had expected only a couple of people to show up for this challenging snowshoe hike, but several times more than that showed up on this bright, warm morning. That was good, because some people could trade positions and benefit from the track the first hikers had trodden down in the three to four feet of snow that still blanketed the north slope of Pico Peak.

The biggest challenge was overcoming the snowbank at the end of the old Long Trail Lodge parking lot. I figured since everyone made it -- even the hiker with five-foot snowshoes with tails -- we would do all right on the rest of the hike. We did, though of course many had the usual need to readjust snowshoe bindings after a little while.

The Sherburne Pass register, located where the Long Trail leaves the old Pico Pond road, was barely above the snow. When I had scouted the route a few days before, the bottom of it was below the snow. Pretty good for late March!

Once we gained the ridge, we sometimes found it hard to follow the trail, because the wind had sculpted the snow in ridges that ran across it. Those of us who were Killington Section members noted to our chagrin that our blazing was too old and too sparse, also. Of course some blazes were probably hidden beneath the snowdrifts.

One sees things in the snowy woods that one doesn't notice at other times of year. We spotted several of the insulator posts for the old telephone line to the former Pico fire tower, though I'd never noticed more than one in other seasons. Also, of course, we spotted skiers -- not only at Pico Junction, but also on the way up there. In several places, the ski trails are closer to the LT than any of us had imagined. Wildlife was scarce, however: few small creatures, and no large ones, had left tracks in the snow.

Coming out on the edge of the ski trail at Pico Junction, we lunched and enjoyed the view and the spring skiing spectacle. By then it was so warm that many skiers came by in shorts, and one borrowed some sun screen from the Leader. Another skied over to us, intrigued by what we had on our feet. "Snowshoe" soon entered that person's vocabulary.

After assessing our strength and the time of day, we decided to press on to Pico Camp. The slabbing path to the camp was the hardest snowshoe, but we dug in our edges and made it to the camp without much side-slipping. The camp was in fine shape; the Lexan windows that Phil Johnson and Linda Pellerin put in last year had survived the winter intact, and trash was at a minimum. We read the old register, enjoyed the sun some more, and marveled at the view of Ascutney and the New Hampshire mountains before heading back down the Long Trail.

PROCTOR HIGH LEDGE

by Ray Catozzi, Leader

After suffering (?) the great blizzard of '93, we welcomed a nice warm balmy Sunday afternoon for an easy walk up to a high vantage point looking out over the peaceful village of Proctor and the Green Mountains to the east. We did have three to four inches of wet slushy snow to walk in, but the ledge lookout was bare and dry. It was pleasant to sit around and view the scenery while eating a picnic supper, all 15 of us, including 6 young, somewhat boisterous children. These short afternoon walks prove to be popular. We should have more of them.

ANNUAL MEETING

by Herb Ogden, Jr.

About 22 Killington Section members and a half-dozen guests attended the Section Annual Meeting. The Econo Lodge Mountainside again generously put its fireplaced meeting room at our disposal for the potluck and meeting.

After enjoying the traditional variety of good food, we conducted our yearly business. Treasurer Wally Rogers's report appears elsewhere in this issue; we are in good shape financially.

GMC Director of Field Programs Lars Botzjorns reported that the National Park Service has transferred responsibility for the Appalachian Trail to the U.S. Forest Service, and that the USFS Manchester, Vermont, District is now responsible for the AT/LT north to the Mendon-Sherburne town line. North of there, it's the USFS Rochester District.

GMC Southern Field Assistant Dave Hardy announced that the Deer Leap Trail from Sherburne Pass to the top of the cliff will be closed on 6 June. The USFS is responsible for this trail and may make a new access trail from the south. In the meantime, the only access will be on the Deer Leap Trail south from near Willard Gap on the Long Trail. The Killington Section welcomes the abandonment of the dangerous trail up the cliff.

President Phil Johnson asked GMC Secretary Herb Ogden, Jr., a member of the Killington Section board of directors, to report on main club activities since neither Director Wally Rogers nor Alternate Ray Catozzi could make it to the last GMC board meeting. Herb urged members to respond to a questionnaire that will probably be sent out on organizational review and to consider whether those Section members who contribute (or have in the past contributed) neither work nor anything more than dues should essentially get a bargain membership in the GMC while At-Large members pay more and get less.

Herb also described the two factions that have formed around the question of National Scenic Trail status (the Appalachian Trail is a National Scenic Trail) for the Long Trail north of where the AT leaves it. He said one faction has concluded that we must own outright a thousand foot wide corridor for almost all of the LT. Because several landowners refuse to deal with us, that faction says we must get federal condemnation authority. That faction also says it may cost $5-10,000,000 more to finish buying the LT corridor, and that we can't raise that amount until at least 2010. Therefore, we should try to get federal funds through some sort of National Scenic Trail status.

The other faction questions whether we really must have a thousand foot wide corridor as long as we can keep a decent footway. It also thinks we should try to buy fairly non-restrictive easements from landowners rather than push outright purchase. It thinks some landowners would like this better, and that it might cost less than buying a thousand foot corridor outright. It also fears that, if we ask Congress for condemnation authority, more landowners will join the one who has already kicked the LT off his land to protest our even considering National Scenic Trail status. This faction is not convinced we need federal condemnation authority and wants to see more evidence before deciding. Herb said he was in this wait-and-see faction.

GMC Executive Director Dennis Shaffer and Land Protection Committee Chair Roger Sternberg spoke in favor of National Scenic Trail status. Sternberg pointed out we could seek this status without condemnation authority. He assumes that, at the 6 June meeting, the GMC board will vote on whether to ask him committee to draft federal protection legislation for the LT. Shaffer said the GMC had never turned anyone down for lack of a thousand foot easement. He also noted that most land had been bought outright because the owner was selling the whole property; we had been dealing only with willing sellers until recently. President Johnson invited members to comment. Jean Davies said that concern for the LT landowners made her side with the wait-and-see faction.

President Johnson and Dave Hardy presented a proposal to fund a Cooper Lodge caretaker this summer. Total salary for 16 weeks would be $575, but some of that would be recouped from overnight user fees. It is hoped that a caretaker will reduce vandalism and be able to get a reliable count of how many use this part of the trail. (Since the National Park Service and Killington, Ltd. have not agreed on the route of the LT in that area, statistics may be important.) Killington Section members voted to take from the Kirk Trails & Shelters Fund the necessary money to pay the part of the caretaker's salary not covered by overnight fees.

President Johnson thanked this year's committee chairs for their work. They were Sue Carey and Tim Welch for Trails & Shelters, Linda Pellerin and Herb Ogden for Outings, Bernie Donahue for Publicity, and Herb Ogden for Smoke & Blazes. Herb then thanked Phil for doing most of the work on the newsletter.

Bernie Donahue, Linda Pellerin and Wally Rogers finished their second three-year terms as Killington Section Directors and were thus not eligible for reelection. President Phil Johnson thanked them all, especially Wally, for their service to the club. New directors elected were Ray Catozzi, Larry Dodds, and W. Churchill Scott. The Directors then met to reelect Phil Johnson as President and elect Larry Dodds Vice-President. They also elected one of their absent members as Secretary and Treasurer, but she has reportedly declined to serve and a replacement is sought.

The meeting ended with a slide lecture by Wally Rogers and Delight Gartlein on their winter trip into the Grand Canyon. Members enjoyed this different view of the canyon and the comments by Wally and Delight.

QUARTERLINE ROAD\BOARDMAN HILL - CLARENDON

by Larry Dodds, Leader

Originally scheduled as the Wallingford Pond to Little Rock Pond hike, the location of the hike had to be changed due to the late Spring wet and muddy conditions in this area. The hike was relocated to the Quarterline Road area.

We were blessed with a warm, sunny, clear spring day with temperatures hovering in the uppers 60's by mid-day after a chilly morning start. Eleven people gathered for the hike including five brand new hikers (three adults and two children) whose cheerful faces I hope to see again on future hikes. We really enjoyed your company.

Off to the hike!! We parked our cars south of the Boardman Hill/Quarterline Road intersection. We hiked up the Boardman Hill Road toward West Rutland to the hill's crest and took in a beautiful encompassing view of the surrounding hills including Big Hanley to the West and a series of peaks that runs north from Big Hanley, one guessed to be Grandpa's Knob. The east provided a grand view of the Killington, Pico, and Mendon Mountain peaks. The clear weather and lack of foliage made all views of valleys and peaks spectacular.

We turned back toward the Quarterline Road, hiked back to the intersection, and began walking south along the Road. AL PULLING had begun his own personal "green-up" crusade by collecting various bottles and cans along the road. AL was an inspiration!!! Soon everyone began plucking beverage containers from the roadside and carrying them along the route.

Jerry Parker pointed out assorted wildlife as we walked including a weasel, red and grey squirrels, partridge, chipmunks, frogs and frog eggs. A male cardinal's bright red profile was seen flashing across the Road and his song soon pierced the morning stillness. One of the children, Christina, begged Jerry to capture some frog eggs for home study which Jerry gladly did, dropping a cluster into a large juice container that he had collected. When Jerry presented the prize to Christina she exclaimed, "YUK!! I don't want 'em any more!!". Jerry made several hapless attempts to convince Christina that she really did want the eggs. Each was met by a flat "NO!!"

We spotted a patch of bright yellow coltsfoot in full bloom mixed in with dandelion plants. For a moment, there was some confusion as to which flower belonged to which plant, but we got it sorted out. Helen Cawood took notice of Bird's Eye Mountain off to the West and I pointed out Herrick Mountain.

Noontime approached. By then we had hiked along the Road about two miles. We decided to turn around and hike north back toward the cars and stop to have lunch where the Velco 115kv transmission line crosses the Road. Clearance for the line had left a nice, sunny, open spot atop an embankment where we could take in a beautiful view of the Otter Creek Valley and points south toward Wallingford.

After lunch we hiked back to the cars for a total trip of about 4.5 miles. Everyone was mellowed by the sunny spring day as well as the cordial friendship that developed between new and pledged participants of this GMC-Killington Section hike. It was a great day-hike!!!

KILLINGTON SECTION BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

by Larry Dodds

The Killington Section of the Green Mountain Club Board of Directors meeting began with Phil Johnson, our previous President, informing the rest of the directors that his resignation would be effective at the close of the meeting. We will miss Phil and wish him GOOD LUCK. Phil promised to come back and hike with us as soon as he can.

Sue Thomas was nominated for Secretary, but she respectfully declined. Herb Ogden was nominated for club President and he as well respectfully declined. Sue Carey was nominated for and unanimously elected our new President. Roma Pulling was nominated and unanimously elected Treasurer. Jean Davis was nominated and unanimously elected as Secretary. Congratulations to all of our newly elected officers!

Herb Ogden led a discussion about the Killington-Pico Formal Agreement which will protect the access of the Long Trail over PICO property. Herb projects that the access will be granted. Herb then raised a question on where the Deer Leap Trail will end, at the first or second lookout? It was suggested that the trail blazing stop at the first lookout. The most desirable course of action would be to find and build a new trail from the Maine Junction to the Peak. A work day has been scheduled to close off the trail up the face of Deer Leap.

Sue Carey informed the group that the Sheriff's Patrol will be on the look out for campers at Clarendon gorge. The Sheriff will notify the Manchester Ranger's District. Sue also mentioned that the Pico Camp outhouse needs to be replaced.

Sue Thomas suggested that we add a "near Firehouse" to the outings announcement which appears in the Rutland Herald to clarify the location of the meeting place.

It was resolved that the start of term service for each member of the Board of Directors is:

1991: Herb Ogden, Tim Welch, Roma Pulling

1992: Phil Johnson, Sue Carey, Sue Thomas

1993: Churchill Scott, Ray Catozzi, Larry

Jean Davis will serve out the remainder of Phil Johnson's term.

Phil Johnson mentioned that volunteer labor is available from General Electric employees for rebuilding or relocation of the Clarendon Shelter. Our contact at GE is Ex-Killington Section member Ray Dube. A discussion of moving the shelter to a trail north away from the main trail ensued. It was agreed that the shelter's current location is too accessible.

Tim Welch expressed his concern over the National Scenic Trail designation or any other State or Federal funding creating additional difficulties or "red tape" for the Club. He was also concerned about the potential regulation of trail and shelters.

This reporter will be volunteering his time to help Herb with typing up the Smoke & Blazes.

At 9:10 PM Ray Catozzi made a motion for the meeting to be adjourned. It was seconded by this reporter and the meeting was adjourned. We all bid Phil Johnson a hearty farewell and good luck.

SPRING WALK-THRU

1 May 1993

by Rob Carey, Leader

About a dozen members and other interested workers came out to get the lower portion of our Section of the Long Trail in shape. By splitting up in to groups of two or three, we were able to cover all the Trail from Rt 140 to Gov. Clement Shelter.

It took a few minutes at the Fire Station to decide who was going where, and with whom. It was also important to make sure that cars would be spotted properly, so no one came out to an empty parking lot at the end of the day.

Dave Hardy, the new Southern Field Assistant, was able to join us. We had reports of a washout between the Cold River Roads. After helping with several car shuttles, Seth Carey, Dave Hardy, and Herb Ogden drove into Gov. Clement Shelter. There was some trash there, including some odds and ends of metal and a car tire. We cleaned up the area and brought out the refuse. There were two large barrels also, one for returnables and one for garbage. The maintenance of these is uncertain.

After lunch, Dave Hardy and Seth and Rob Carey drove out to the Upper Road and started working south. Other than a few wet spots, the Trail was in good shape. We were able to clear all the blowdowns. As we neared the Lower Road, we began to wonder if the washout was a phantom report. We soon discovered it was not. The Trail footway is about eight feet from the bank. Whole trees have been uprooted. It will be necessary to check how wide the Trail Corridor is and move about 200 feet of Trail. The current footway should be stable for the rest of this season.

MOUNT ASCUTNEY

12 June 1993

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

This was a repeat of a very popular hike from a few years ago, luckily without the thunderstorm.

A good-sized group spotted cars and then headed up the Weathersfield Trail after admiring the Ascutney Trails Association's trailhead bulletin board. We hoped that the late snow would mean there would be more water in the falls than last time, and we were not disappointed. The Little Cascade, bone dry last time, was running beautifully. The Flume, also dry last time, also had a good flow. It comes in by a pretty waterfall over one side of the top. Soon we climbed the Giant Wooden Stairs and entered the fairly level stretch with the fine views south. Reaching the Crystal Cascade, we found plenty of water falling over seventy feet, and we even clambered down the old trail on the west bank to get a better look. This was also a very scenic lunch stop.

Wending our way through pleasant evergreen woods above the cascade, we eventually joined the old trail on the other side of the brook and then climbed steeply up past big boulders to Gus's Lookout and the West Peak. We then spent quite a while watching aviators in a hang gliding contest sail off the West Peak platform, hoping to land over twenty miles away.

There was still a little climb left, but we made it to the summit in very good spirits and good time. The younger folks stood on the USGS marker at the very top, and then we climbed the relatively new observation tower just north of the summit to again marvel at the panorama.

On the way down the Windsor Trail, we varied last time's route by visiting Castle Rock and Blood Rock, both with fine views. The children were a little disappointed that Blood Rock was not covered with gore. Their parents, on the other hand, were a little concerned they were too close to the edge. After a refreshing stop at Halfway Spring, we descended to the final attraction, Gerry Falls, a wonderful, mossy place.

I think everyone agreed that, mile for mile, the rerouted Weathersfield Trail is the most interesting and scenic for a long ways around. Hats off to the Ascutney Trails Association for creating it!

NEW DEER LEAP TRAIL?

by Herb Ogden, Jr., condensed by Larry Dodds from Herb's letter to the GMC Trails & Shelters Committee

The Club in general agrees with the Killington Section that the dangerous cliff section at the south end of the Deer Leap Trail should be abandoned, and now that the Forest Service is inclined to agree, I have some suggestions for alternate routes. They are based largely on a bushwhack I took recently.

The SOUTHERLY ROUTE that I have found runs directly from Maine Junction to a point between the upper and lower lookouts on Little Deer Leap. Leaving Maine Junction at elevation 2420, one ascends along the edge of the steep slope that leads down to Sherburne Pass. This slope eventually steepens into the Deer Leap cliffs and makes shortcutting down to Sherburne Pass difficult. At about elevation 2480, at a dead yellow birch perched atop a huge rock, there might be a halfway decent grade down to Sherburne Pass if one wanted to make a shorter route and avoid going all the way to Maine Junction, but it would require serious switchbacks to control erosion.

Continuing along the edge, with views to the south through the trees, and with huge boulders close at hand, one comes to an almost level place at about elevation 2500. Climbing very gradually along the edge, one enters some beautiful fern glades at elevation 2525. To the right is a ledge near the south summit of Little Deer Leap; just beyond is the Deer Leap Trail north of the Upper Lookout. If one stays on the edge, however, and descends slightly, one hits the Deer Leap Trail between the upper and lower lookouts. Because that trail doesn't become dangerous until just south of the Lower Lookout (elevation 2420), that's fine.

RELOCATION ON LITTLE DEER LEAP: Beginning at the Upper Lookout, I suggest a minor relocation toward the south summit of Little Deer Leap. The trail presently climbs a ledge at the edge of the woods north of the Upper Lookout, crosses a level place used for camping, and then climbs another ledge before entering an evergreen tunnel that leads to the south summit. The ledges are very difficult for short people to climb. If the trail were moved a little to the west, it could avoid the southerly ledge, cross the west side of the flat area, and avoid the northerly ledge by going along Little Deer Leap's westerly scarp until it hit the present trail about 150' south of Little Deer Leap's south summit.

The NORTHERLY ROUTE would leave the present Deer Leap Trail at elevation 2540, where it descends northwesterly from near the south summit of Little Deer Leap. It would generally stay on a contour, following a well-trodden path. The path soon forks. The south branch peters out at the fern glade I mentioned in the Southerly Route description. I do not propose it be made an official trail. The north branch stays north of the ridge but becomes indistinct by the time it reaches the northwest flank of Little Deer Leap's north summit, in a pretty white birch forest. There, at elevation 2560, is a nice view toward Pittsfield. From there, the trail could either climb about 100' to the end of an old woodroad (elevation 2580) just northwest of the north summit of Little Deer Leap, or it could follow the contour until it hit the woodroad, which descends to a point on the LT about 200' north of Maine Junction. The woodroad is a little too steep for good erosion control in places, and we might want to avoid it altogether, route the trail just south of it, and come out right at Maine Junction.

RELOCATION ON BIG DEER LEAP: I propose a relocation from a point north of Cerf Brook to just north of the top of Big Deer Leap. It would avoid the last pitch of the climb up the south side of Big Deer Leap, which is so steep that erosion will be severe with greater use. Maybe it could switchback to the east. I would also like to see the trail go to the top of Big Deer Leap, which is a nice, bouldery, open place with a hint of a view. Presently, the trail skirts around the summit's west side.

One relatively short alternate is needed once we abandon the trail from Sherburne Pass to Little Deer Leap Lower Lookout. If one arrives at Sherburne Pass planning on a few tenths of a mile hike to Little Deer Leap (as it is shown in our literature and the 50 Hikes book) and sees a sign at the bottom saying one has to go almost all the way to Willard Gap and then double back on the north end of the Deer Leap Trail, he or she may conclude that is too far and go up the old route anyway. Going up, let alone down, is dangerous. But if the hike were not over a mile and did not involve climbing Big Deer Leap, maybe most hikers would put up with it. Moreover, the alternatives I suggest, used together with the present Deer Leap Trail from near Willard Gap to the Little Deer Leap Upper Lookout, would give Appalachian Trail hikers a scenic alternative to the present LT between Willard Gap and Maine Junction (which will be AT once the AT is relocated from south of Pico Peak, through Willard Gap, to Maine Junction). Finally, if both of the alternatives I propose were built, the day hiker from Sherburne Pass or Gifford Woods would have a nice loop hike around Little Deer Leap.

It has been suggested that we should not only abandon the Deer Leap Trail between Sherburne Pass and the Little Deer Leap Lower Lookout, but also put up "closed" signs and pile it with brush. I don't altogether agree. I think the signs should say the trail has been abandoned because it is dangerous for even experienced hikers, and they should show how to reach the alternate routes. I would avoid the word "closed" unless we have landowner authority. Saying the trail is "closed" also may trouble the many rock climbers who use Little Deer Leap. Do we mean to forbid them access, or only to disclaim responsibility for the trail? Finally, I think piling brush would anger the rock climbers, and they would just haul away obstacles. See map on next page.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE TO ACT

The National Park Service has issued its Final Environmental Impact Statement regarding the location of the Appalachian Trail (and Long Trail) The companion volume of letters the Park Service received is interesting reading. Copies are available from Herb Ogden, Jr., work phone 775-3368, home 775-1350.

By the time you read this, the Park Service probably will have released its decision. It is expected to endorse Alternate 5, which moves the trail west after it passes Governor Clement Shelter, returns to the present route from Cooper Lodge to just south of Pico Camp, goes west around Pico Peak, crosses Route 4 about a mile west of Sherburne Pass, and rejoins the present Long Trail in Willard Gap and the present AT at Maine Junction.

HEDGEHOG BROOK TRAIL, FAYSTON

by Roma Pulling, Leader

As we sat on Burnt Rock Mountain, enjoying the gorgeous view, a dark cloud covered the sun. Fearing this signalled a change in the weather, we made a speedy exit; but a few minutes later the sun was out again. This was the only cloud in an otherwise sunny day with the temperature in the 80's.

Having described this hike as sometimes difficult and designated an 8 o'clock departure time because of the long drive, I didn't expect a large group, and I was right. One hiker met us at the park, and we picked up another on the way.

Waitsfield provided a convenient coffee break on the way north, and then it was only a short distance to the trail head. There we were met by a pit bull, who promptly attacked Alfred's pack in an attempt to get at his lunch. Fortunately his diet did not seem to include hikers.

The trail started out in a leisurely manner, but this was not to last. Approaching Burnt Rock, we were pulling ourselves up over boulders the size of a house. At this point Bernie was heard to remark, "I thought you said this hike was difficult." But we were rewarded with a lunch stop on one of the best lookouts on the long trail. This was just below the summit. Bill climbed to the top, but the rest of us decided to save our strength for the hike down.

We met about 15 other hikers, most of whom were on their way up as we were coming down. There were also an unusual number of dogs.

You guessed it right. Rained out again. My apologies to Linda Pellerin for not showing up at Fair Haven -- also apologies to the gentleman in Benson and would like to hear from him again. Also to the six people who appeared at the park for a good hike. Let's try again at a later date.

CANOE TRIP

29 August 1993

by Jean Davies

What you all missed! All except three, that is. Roma Pulling with Jean and Charlie Davies headed for Chittenden Dam on August 29, on a "Picture Perfect Day," according to the weather report.

The water was mirror-smooth as we headed off to explore the opposite shores. I was just commenting on the lack of visible wildlife, when we became aware of a strange piece of driftwood Was it some birds? It was none of those, but instead a young deer swimming slowly across the water. We watched as it struggled out of the water, over the slippery rocks to the safety of woods. Interestingly, the deer didn't shake itself as a dog would have upon leaving the water.

Paddling on, we saw a pair of cormorants. Cormorants on Chittenden Dam? We'd thought they were salt water birds, but have since learned that crested cormorants are indeed at the Dam. We watched them flying and diving throughout the rest of the day. Later we noticed that one curiously resembled a loon, but Roy Pilcher, Audubon member, told me that a pair of young loons was apparently at the Dam.

Added to the wildlife were the beautiful views of Mountain Top Inn, Mt. Carmel, and Pico. We ate our lunch on a sandy beach which might well have been Canadian wilderness or Michigan Boundary waters as far as other visible humans went. We saw only water, trees, rocks and driftwood.

As we paddled home against a rising breeze, more canoes, fishermen, and sailfish appeared, but we'd already enjoyed our brief 'wilderness' canoe trip, and were pleased to see others enjoying the day. We hope more of you will be with us on our next adventure.

ADIRONDACK OUTING

by Herb Ogden, Jr.

Three Vermonters joined three New Yorkers for a long and wonderful hike along the Tongue Mountains, the range that points southward into Lake George. We began at the Clay Meadows Trail and hiked through an area which co-leaders Sandy and Ruth Lamb told us had been farms before it was bought up for the Adirondack Park. We then ascended to the saddle and headed south to enjoy the first of many grand views from a shelter. The weather was perfect and the foliage was beginning to show in the mountains overlooking Lake George.

We hiked south to French Point Mountain for lunch, scrambling in and out of the great gulches that cleave the ridge. At our lunch spot, we were rewarded with a magnificent panorama of the lake and the distant High Peaks. After some discussion, we decided to forge ahead to the Point of the Tongue and return along a shore trail, thus turning an approximately 8 mile hike into a 13 mile one.

The extra distance was worth it. As we hiked south on the ridge of the Tongue, wonderful views continued on all sides. We felt as though we were on the prow of a great ship that was cruising down the lake. The woods were often parklike, full of great old tall trees. Much to Sue Thomas's disgust, however, and to Linda Pellerin's delight, the rattlesnakes were nowhere to be seen.

The final leg of the hike was a shore trail along Northwest Bay back to Clay Meadows. It was not as level as we thought it would be when we chose it rather than going back over the Tongue from our lunch stop, but it was very pretty, and it provided a place for two of the hikers to take a quick dip in the lake. We all returned to the trailhead very tired but also very satisfied with the day's outing and very thankful to the Lambs for having led it.

MOONLIGHT MYSTERY HIKE

by Ira Hawley, Leader

The weather finally cooperated providing us with a FULL MOON. Pleasant afternoon temperatures cooled down as sunset approached and a cool breeze came up. Eleven people assembled at the park. With the Friday afternoon traffic and numerous stop signs we soon lost contact with each other as we started north toward Brandon. At the first cut-off from Route 7, we reassembled to continue on to Blueberry Hill in Goshen. At the large parking area we started our walk up the open hillside for spectacular view of the valley below and various mountain ranges beyond. We were there in time to see the sun set amidst some clouds. In about a half hour daylight was nearly gone and we started back down the incline. It was early darkness as we arrived at our cars, where there was a large gravel area. Here we started a small but brisk fire to roast some frankfurts.

A card table was set up to lay out the frankfurts, rolls, and condiments. Everyone cooked their treats on long-handled homemade spears to their own satisfaction.

"This reminds me of an old fashion wiener roast", someone commented. Now the FULL MOON appeared over the ridge line of The Great Cliff, Mount Horrid, and Cape Lookoff Mountain.

We had a discussion about continuing some hiking along an open Forestry Road for about a mile, but most everyone wanted to return home.

LONG TRAIL INTER-SECTIONAL HIKE

2 October 1993

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

A forecast of afternoon rain turned this planned 12 mile hike from Wallingford Gulf to Governor Clement Shelter into a walk of less than half that length. That worked out just right. We were blessed with some sun in the forenoon for a nice picnic at Spring Lake Clearing, complete with Sue Thomas's birthday brownies for the Section's immediate past Vice-President, and the rain did not begin until we had finished the hike at Clarendon Gorge and were retrieving the spotted car. The inter-sectional part did go as planned, for we were joined by two Breadloaf Section members who were working on their End-to-End.

Descending from the Airport Lookout to Clarendon Gorge, we were surprised to find a neatly printed sign on a tree saying "HAPPY BIRTHDAY LINDA P." At first this was attributed to Sue Thomas. After the birthday girl opened the container that was attached, however, it became clear that Sue was not responsible. Inside was a cupcake, a candle, and a match -- and a note from a male admirer inviting the birthday girl to dinner! Eventually we got her to say who it was from. If you weren't there and want to know -- too bad!

Don't know what to do with old issues of Smoke & Blazes? Leave them for a doctor's office or other place where folks will see them and have a little time to read them. This helps spread the news about our section of the Green Mountain Club.

Especially in view of the current debate about how wild the Long Trail should be, and whether we need federal funds or condemnation authority to achieve our goal, the following excerpt from an article in the August - September 1934 Vermont by Marion V. Urie is one that Editor Herb Ogden, Jr. found interesting.

The Long Trail is maintained by the Green Mountain Club. It is divided into sections and each section is maintained by the members of the Club living in that vicinity. The condition of the trail varies because of the popularity of certain portions and because of the interest and care bestowed upon it by the members of the different sections. The northern section is much newer and has been used less than the others. Here we found that underbrush, ferns, and nettles had sprung up very rapidly. However, there were freshly painted blazes and we had no real difficulty in following them. This is a rough, densely wooded region, pierced by few roads and one can easily get the impression of really being in the "wilds."

The middle section seems to be the most popular. Here we find the rocky summits of Mount Mansfield and Camel's Hump and a well defined and much-used trail. We were already quite familiar with these two mountains but that did not lessen our pleasure when we once more gained their rocky summits. Our first mail station was at the Mansfield Hotel, and we certainly appreciated the letters that awaited us there.

As we went down into the southern sections the trail became less and less arduous; there were fewer really fine views as the trail took us through large areas of forest where lumber camps were once teeming with activity. We passed by many such remains, now fast disappearing beneath a growth of luxuriant vegetation. In most places the trail was in good condition and well marked. However, after leaving the Arlington-Wardsboro road we found a very poor section. The trail was scarcely discernible and the blazes exceedingly few and far between. Consequently we lost the trail and, also consequently, a whole day.

I think I can truthfully say that we were not anxious or alarmed, even if it was nightfall. But we were exasperated at having come so far on the trail only to lose it in spite of our best efforts. We were fortunate in locating a snug and well-supplied cabin, apparently used by hunters, where we made ourselves comfortable for the night. The next morning we gave up the idea of finding the trail again and at ten o'clock, with no notion as to how far it would be necessary to travel, we started off to follow an old railroad cut out to civilization. At three o'clock that afternoon, after hiking some fourteen or fifteen miles, we came out on a back country road and were laconically informed by busy haymakers that we were some thirty miles from the nearest point where the Long Trail intersected a highway. How to get there was our next problem and hitchhiking seemed the only answer. Our luck still held and at seven o'clock we arrived at Fay Fuller camp, two miles north on the trail from the Bennington-Wilmington highway. We had come around Glastenbury Mountain, so we spent the next day doing the piece of trail we had missed and doing it again on the return trip.

The scenic aspects of the trail are varied, so everyone who is at all interested in hiking should be able to find something which appeals to him in this 300 mile display of nature's beauties. There is the constant thrill of never knowing just what is coming next. Every curve reveals some new charm or unique specimen. Perhaps it is a huge rock capped with lovely little ferns growing in a deep bed of moss; or it may be a weather-beaten tree, twisted and gnarled into a most fantastic shape. At other times the trail comes out suddenly on some natural promontory or lookout, and the hiker sees spread before him a vast panorama of forest with the farms and villages nestled in the valley below. Many times it would seem that those who first cleared the trail must have been thinking of the old saying that "the longest way round is the sweetest way home," as this footpath winds and curves continually. In most cases this is all for the good as it makes it possible to include many more beautiful spots than could be seen otherwise.

ANNUAL TACONIC RAMBLE

by Linda Pellerin

A relatively large party gathered for our Fourth Annual Taconic Ramble which maintained the tradition of being one of the most enjoyable outings on our schedule. The weather was perfect and the views were spectacular. Our hosts, Kit and Margret Davidson, had a feast of wine, cheeses, crackers, chips and dips for us to enjoy as we sat on their new deck overlooking a picture perfect view of the Taconic Mountain Range.

We thank the Davidsons and hope those that have not had the pleasure of participating in this outing remember to look for it scheduled in late summer or early fall.

FOLIAGE HIKE TO WHITE ROCKS

10 October 1993

by Sue Carey, Leader

The foliage was at its peak and the air was cold, but it a good day for a hike. Roma and Al Pulling, Bernie Donahue, Seth and Mara Carey and myself met at the White Rocks Picnic area in Wallingford. We started up the Keewaydin Trail with the goal of reaching the top of White Rocks Cliff.

This trail is very steep. When we reached the spot where the Long Trail intersects with the Keewaydin Trail one member of the Carey party sat down and refused to go anywhere but down the trail and home.

Roma, Al, and Bernie continued to the top of the cliffs and had a good view of Wallingford and the Otter Creek Valley. The Careys headed back down the trail. I had to promise Seth and Mara that we would hike to the top of White Rocks Cliff on a trail that is not so steep. Someday we shall return.

APPALACHIAN TRAIL, NORWICH VT.

23 October 1993

by Roma Pulling

As always, Alfred and I kept a "weather eye" on the day of our hike and were at first encouraged, when it looked as though it might clear, but discouraged upon arrival in Norwich, when it had again clouded over. But by afternoon the sun was out and it was a lovely, but crisp, fall day.

We met seven hikers, all women, at the park and were pleased to welcome a new member, Marjorie Sweeny! Taking three cars, we headed for Norwich, where we parked a car at the village green and packed everyone into the two others for the trip to the trail-head. We planned to hike the Tucker Trail to the Appalachian Trail, and this was complicated by the lack of either a sign or trail blazing. But our advance inquiries had pointed us in this direction, which proved to be the right one.

The Tucker Trail follows an old road for part of its distance. The walking was slightly uphill and was easy to moderate. The only markings visible were two faded logos from the Dartmouth Outing Club. At the trail intersection we turned east and encountered the usual ups and downs one expects when hiking in Vermont until the trail merged with a Norwich street. We followed paved streets back to the cars and discovered again how much harder this walking is on the feet.

From the Norwich green, which provided the closest parking available to our goal at the Connecticut River, the trail continues on paved streets and through an underpass to a bridge over the river into Hanover, New Hampshire. While one driver ferried the others back to the Tucker Trail to get two cars parked there, I offered to lead any interested parties on this last section of the hike and got only one taker.

We met several joggers (!) but no other hikers. Wildlife was limited to one chipmunk. But just after emerging from the woods we saw two adorable burros in a barnyard. Several of us wanted to bring them home. As this would have presented a few problems (?), the burro-napping never took place.

After the occupants of our car refreshed themselves at Ho Jo's in White River Junction, we returned home from a rewarding trip.

ANNUAL POTLUCK SUPPER

20 November 1993

by Linda Pellerin

The unofficial attendance for the supper was twenty-eight adults and five children. The food as usual was excellent, the company enjoyable, and everyone ate until their hearts were content. Winnie Chevalier presented a slide show on Baxter State Park in Maine. The slides were spectacular and I'm sure we all wished we were there. Thank you, Winnie, for the beautiful presentation. Thanks also to the Econo Lodge and Ross Almo for letting us use their comfortable and spacious facilities. It won't be long until our Annual Meeting Potluck. Hope to see you all there!

GREENWALL SHELTER

by Roma Pulling

December 5 was not a very good day for a hike. There was the thick fog, which never lifted. If Alfred and I had gotten separated from the other hikers, we wouldn't have been able to see them. And the driving wasn't great due to a scattering of snow on the higher elevations of Sugar Hill Road where it meets the Long Trail. Then there was the wind, which was cold when we encountered it several times that afternoon. I was worried we wouldn't be able to start a fire as the wood was saturated from the snow and rain the fell the day before. And to top it all off, Alfred thought he had lost our car key. What next?

But we had a good group of hikers, never complaining and always in good humor. Six met us at the park, and two more waited for us in Wallingford. Unfortunately, one had to turn back before reaching the shelter because of another commitment.

Alfred had brought dry kindling from home, and we got a really good fire going on which we toasted marshmallows and heated water for hot beverages to enjoy with cookies and doughnut holes.

And when we got back to our car, Alfred found the key - right where he had left it!

It was a good hike.

VERA A. PERKINS, 1898-1993

by Janet P. Martin

Vera had been a Killington Section member for 55 years when she died on November 27, 1993. She had earned her "End to Ender" along with her brother Craigie and his wife Mary in the late 1960's. In the early years my cousins and I hiked with them on many Killington Section hikes. She participated in some of the earliest Intersectionals, and as the Martin family grew, she often accompanied them on hikes and to the Intersectionals. In 1962 she had sole charge of our three girls, before their 4th, 6th, and 8th birthdays while I was giving birth to their youngest brother. She was 92 when she went on her last snowshoe hike with the Killington section.

Old timers in the Section remember fondly sugar-on-snow parties in her attic and the wonderful pies she made for the annual meetings and potluck suppers.

Few of us knew that Vera wrote poetry. Here is one that all hikers can relate to titled "Summer Noon on Long Hill":

The sky is a deep blue.
The air has a singing warmth and an earthly fragrance.
A gipsying bee hums fitfully.
As spires of smoke reach silently up from the town below.
Earth rests briefly at the turn of the day.

DIRECTORS ASK MAIN CLUB TO KEEP BUCKLIN TRAIL LOCATION AS IS; RENEW COOPER LODGE CARETAKER FUNDS.

by Herb Ogden, Jr., from notes by Wally Rogers, Temporary Secretary

At a meeting on 6 January, the Section Directors discussed a letter from G.M.C. headquarters regarding the Bucklin Trail, which leaves the Wheelerville Road in Mendon at Brewers Corners, follows a woodroad along Brewers Brook for about two miles, and then ascends to the Long Trail at Cooper Lodge. This trail is on a property being acquired by the State of Vermont. The G.M.C. will have a conservation easement banning motorized travel. While Headquarters proposes that we temporarily not enforce that restriction because the woodroad along the brook is used by backwoods vehicles, Headquarters suggests that the Bucklin Trail eventually be moved south onto the side of the ridge, so as to avoid contact with vehicles.

Killington Section directors agreed that the present valley woodroad route has less maintenance and is in a favorable location, that vehicles are few and tolerated, and that logging may cause temporary inconvenience and damage but is currently preferable to relocation. It was moved and unanimously passed that the Killington Section recommends leaving the Bucklin Trail where it is and waiving any restriction on motorized vehicles. Directors requested comment from the main club on our recommendation and a final decision on trail location.

In her role as Trails and Shelters Co-Chair, Section President Sue Carey reported on trail-road intersections which needed signs. She also reported on an October 1993 meeting on shelters. Many changes are planned. Cooper Lodge continues to be a problem, with vandalism and trash. It was moved and passed unanimously that the main club should ask the State of Vermont and S-K-I, Ltd. (Killington Ski Area) to repair winter vandalism and clear refuse weekly as part of the state contract. Directors noted that the Killington Ski Patrol could check the lodge every afternoon. Gates could be erected on the old ski trails in the area to re-direct skiers away from the lodge.

Directors also voted to pay the main club up to $575 toward the expense of a G.M.C. caretaker for Cooper Lodge in the summer of 1994. It was suggested that a tent platform be erected for the caretaker.

Sue Carey announced that Rob Carey would share responsibility with her for the southern half of the Killington Section's part of the Long Trail. Tim Welch is co-chair for the northern half.

It was noted that, since the Smoke & Blazes through the last issue showed some dues categories as being $2 less than they were supposed to be, the Treasurer could accept dues in that amount until the next issue gave the 1994 dues schedule, as passed in 1992.

WATCH FOR NEWS OF G.M.C. REGIONAL MEETINGS TO DISCUSS NATIONAL SCENIC TRAIL STATUS AND OTHER FEDERAL HELP OR LAND CONDEMNATION AUTHORITY FOR ACQUISITION OF LT AND SIDE TRAIL CORRIDORS NOW PRIVATELY OWNED. MAIN CLUB DIRECTORS HAVE BEEN DIVIDED ON THIS ISSUE.

WHEELERVILLE COOKOUT

by Ray Catozzi, Leader

We had a great outing. We had a fire going, water boiling, and hot dogs mostly cooked before dark descended on us. But everything went fine after my Coleman gas lantern was lit. All hiked out the same 1½ miles we hiked in: a half mile of Wheelerville Road and one mile of forest road.

BLUE RIDGE SNOWSHOE

by Sue Thomas, Leader

I've been wanting to snowshoe up to the cascade on Blue Ridge Mountain for years. Finally this winter nature cooperated and provided plenty of snow for the trip. Fortunately for us someone else had the same idea and left us a nicely packed trail offering less work. Although on the final pitch I began to wonder why it had seemed so appealing to me all those years! We made it and had our lunch beside the frozen cascade.

After lunch a few adventurous types continued to the summit, while those of us in our right minds went home to thaw out. [Note from one of the former: the trail was fine once we found it, and the view was great!] After all, we had a Southerner along. Our ex-president Phil Johnson came from South Carolina to see some snow. We awarded him the long distance medal for the day. No one volunteered for the distinction of oldest hiker.

MOUNT ASCUTNEY FROM THE WEST ON SNOWSHOES

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

The winter weather was gorgeous, but for some reason only two Section members showed up for this joint outing with the Ascutney Trails Association. After a beautiful drive over to West Windsor, Ruth Hare and I located a snowshoe track leading east from the Coaching Lane Road, which is east of and parallel to the Ascutney Notch Road. I had cleverly scheduled our departure so we would arrive there after the ATA folks, so we benefitted from the trail they had broken until we met them most of the way up.

We crossed open fields and some Ascutney Resort cross country ski trails, with fine views west, before entering the woods and taking a woodroad that headed east toward the Enright Quarry. We then branched off near the bottom of a long-gone log chute, taking first a smaller woodroad and then a bushwhack up an increasingly steep route through evergreens wearing a beautiful coat of rime ice. Here, we began to pass those few of the eight or so ATA hikers who either had snowshoes with tails or still had much to learn about snowshoe bindings. We were slowing down ourselves, tired by the climb, and were happy to see the white and blue blazes of the Weathersfield Trail at last. After a few challenging climbs on it, we reached the sunny summit and joined the ATA for lunch. We then went on to the new tower to enjoy the view. A few diehards (not we) climbed the tower on snowshoes, just so they could say they had made it all the way.

Barbara Rhoad of the ATA led us on a different way down. After admiring the views from West Peak and Gus's Lookout, we branched off to the west just below the latter and followed what was supposedly once a snowmobile trail (incredibly steep in spots, where our snowshoes acted more like skis) onto a fairly open ridge south of the Mower Quarry. This provided a very pleasant return.

CASTLETON RAILROAD BED X-C SKI

by Larry Dodds, Leader

This outing was to take place at the Wallingford Pond Recreation Area. A prior storm dropped two feet of new snow in the area and left it inaccessible. I made the move to Castleton Railroad Bed Trail.

A beautiful, bright, clear day greeted us this Sunday morning as five club members gathered for an engaging outdoor adventure blessed with warm Spring temperatures. Al and Roma Pulling came along with their snowshoes and Ruth Hare, Herb Ogden, and I were ready to ski. After a short drive out to the Castleton State College parking area we unloaded our gear and headed down the trail. The morning ski conditions were ideal.

Al and Roma headed out on their snowshoes and the three skiers soon left them behind. The miles piled up behind us and the day got warmer. We paused several times during the day to layer clothes on and off. At three miles down the trail toward Poultney Ruth started to have problems with her feet. She had skied a fair amount the previous day and was starting to show signs of it. She decided to turn back toward the College and meet Al and Roma.

Herb and I decided to push further down the trail, then turn around and meet Ruth, Al, and Roma for lunch. We made the Route 30 crossing and pushed on toward Poultney. We stopped at 4.5 miles and decided to ski back toward the College to meet the others for lunch.

Herb and I met the others after skiing about 1.5 miles toward the college. Al and Roma decided to head back to the parking area while the skiers paused for lunch. Al and Roma predicted that the skiers would overtake them on the way back.

After a needed rest and some lunch, the skiers were ready to head back. Off we went, at a much slower pace?! The snow was beginning to become sticky as the temperature rose into the 50's.

Huffing and puffing we made it back to the parking lot where Al and Roma were waiting patiently. "You've got to take up cross country skiing or learn to slow down on those snow shoes," I said to Al and Roma.

Castleton to Poultney would make a good end to end ski trip. Conditions permitting I'll try to schedule one for next season.

MERCK FOREST OVERNIGHT CAMPING

19 March 1994

by Sue and Mara Carey

"Merck Forest and Farmland Center is a 2,820 acre forest preserve in the Taconic Mountains of southwestern Vermont. It is owned and operated by a private nonprofit organization, for the purposes of education and conservation. There are a limited number of rustic shelters and tents sites available for public use."

The following is an excerpt from the log book and written by eight year old Mara Carey:

March 19, 1994:

My name is Mara Carey. My Mom, Dad, and little brother are staying at Spruce Shelter. My friend Sue Thomas is staying here too. We brought our dog Lady. I think she likes it here. We are all staying overnight. Today Sue and I played cribbage. I won! Our dog Lady is lying so close to the fire that I think she is going to fry.

I can't wait until we go to bed. My Dad brought a light. My brother and I got the top bunk. My hand is starting to hurt so I will write some more later.

March 20, 1994:

Last night we went Moon Skiing . We went to Clark's Clearing. Today i hurt my hand on a nail on the door. So watch out for nails! We have to leave soon so I will stop writing. Maybe I can come again.

Additional comments written by Mara at home:

When we were going home we came to a big hill. It was all downhill! I was holding Lady . Lady is a very strong dog. All of a sudden she started running and I fell and landed on my set. Lady was pulling me down the hill. My seat was a sled and I was sliding down really, really fast. Lady pulled me all the way down the hill and i came in second after my brother Seth. Seth was skiing! I was pretending that I was in the Iditerod. I came in second in the Iditerod!

Sue Thomas brought some chocolate chip cookies and wishes to share the recipe:

1 yellow cake mix

2/3 cup oil

1 bag chocolate chips

Mix first three ingredients. Add chocolate chips. Spread on cookie sheet. Bake at 350 degrees for 10 to 15 minutes.

SUGAR ON SNOW

by Herb Ogden, Jr.

A good-sized group of us gathered in the Unitarian-Universalist church basement for this traditional event. Unlike some recent years, there was plenty of snow, though the Careys kept some special Wallingford snow in their freezer just in case. Janet Martin cooked up the usual delectable syrup to an almost caramel consistency, and the crowd disposed of it, the snow, the donuts, and the pickles in short order amid pleasant conversation and talk of outings to come.

ANNUAL MEETING

by Jean Davies, Secretary

After a delicious potluck supper at the Econo Lodge in Mendon, Sue Carey, President, called the meeting to order. The Treasurer reported $805.74 in the checking account and $2828.55 in the savings. The George L. Kirk Fund has a balance of $1316.21.

Sue Carey reported that SKI Ltd. doesn't want the responsibility of daily care of Cooper Lodge on Killington which gets lots of abuse from skiers, so a caretaker appears to be the best answer. The Caretaker is to be funded by the State, Main Club, and Sections. There is also talk of a composting outhouse there.

The Minerva Hinchey Shelter is five feet off the protected trail land. It isn't a problem now. It's in the 20-year plan. Clarendon Shelter is 10' off the corridor, and is in the 10-year plan.

Governor Clement Shelter is accessible for local parties. It's considered historical because it's the only stone shelter, therefore it can't be torn down. The GMC may eventually build a new one and let the Park service have the old. The average age of shelters is 50 years. The Main Club undertook a review of them.

Pico will eventually become a ski trail, so a new site is being looked for. Gary Salmon says the "State is gun-ho" about the Bucklin Trail.

Dave Hardy is Southern Assistant for GMC. He reported that on May 7, there will be a meeting on the National Environmental Protection Act (NEPA). The Forest Service has to bring this to the public before any action can be taken. The meeting will be held at the Supervisor's Office in Rutland (Route 7 North). There is no cost.

June 4 is the Annual Meeting of the Main Club at Waterbury. Cost is $5.00 each.

After six years, one year must be taken off the Board of Directors. Bernie Donahue, Churchill Scott, and Herb Ogden, Jr. were thanked heartily for their service. New Directors are Linda Pellerin, Phil Smith, and Wally Rogers.

The following were present at the Director's Meeting: Sue Thomas, Phil Smith, Linda Pellerin, Sue Carey, Larry Dodds, Roma Pulling, Jean Davies. Voted as officers: President, Sue Carey; Vice-President, Larry Dodds; Treasurer, Roma Pulling; Secretary, Jean Davies. Wally Rogers is the "Director to the Main Club" and Linda Pellerin the "Assistant Director to the Main Club".

Everyone appreciated the fine hospitality of Ross Almo, of the Econo-Lodge, for opening his lodge to our meeting.

WILDERNESS ETHICS DISCUSSION

11 May, 1994

You are invited to join the Trail Management Committee on May 11 for what we hope will be the beginning of an introspective look at the GMC's trail management goals. We believe that it's important for this discussion to go beyond the Trail Management Committee to include the Club leadership and others active in our management and maintenance programs. We hope that you will join us.

The basis for our discussion will be Wilderness Ethics, the recent book by GMC members Laura and Guy Waterman. In their book, Laura and Guy challenge backcountry and wilderness managers to think about the implications of their actions (both physical improvements and regulations) in changing the wilderness environment for the safety or convenience of visitors. The meeting will be held at GMC Headquarters, beginning at 5:30 p.m.

Don't know what to do with old issues of Smoke & Blazes? Leave them for a doctor's office or other place where folks will see them and have a little time to read them. This helps spread the news about our section of the Green Mountain Club.

FROM THE MARCH GREEN MT. CLUB DIRECTORS MEETING

by Herb Ogden, Jr.

Unlike Section Director Wally Rogers, I do not formally represent our Section on the Board of Directors; I am a Director simply because I am Club Secretary. I do want to report on some concerns regarding the last meeting, not in order of priority:

Eric Chittenden, who spearheaded the drive to buy the HQ in Waterbury, has been distracted by other duties. The Headquarters Fund has fallen way behind target. We need volunteers to raise funds and donors to retire the mortgage on schedule.

The Land Protection Committee and the Trail Management Committee have, I think, gone overboard on issuing detailed standards, some about 50 pages long. I think they are over-bureaucratizing some club functions. We need some Killington Section members to volunteer to serve on these committees and counterbalance the well-meaning bureaucrats. If two would volunteer for a committee, they could ride up together. I already sit on the Land Protection Committee and can give a ride up to its meetings.

The Directors will probably decide in September whether to seek federal legislation not only allowing purchase of trail land with federal taxpayer funds but also allowing condemnation of trail land from owners who are not willing to sell outright. The Land Protection Committee is holding regional hearings on what form, if any, such a bill should take. Rutland's hearing was relatively well-attended, unlike the Norwich and Putney meetings, attended by about a half-dozen. Perhaps half of those at the Rutland meeting said nothing, however. Everyone with an idea on the subject should share the idea with a Director. This topic will also arise at the GMC Annual Meeting.

If a landowner is letting us cross his or her land and generally cooperating with us, but does not want to sell us or the government his land or the right to pass over it, I do not think we want legislation to force him to sell until this situation changes. In no case do I favor allowing us or the government to take more than an easement (the right to pass, not ownership of the land itself). Nevertheless, if enough members disagree and want more, I'm open to persuasion.

The Organizational Review Committee's work continues, now that survey results are back. I think the Committee will have to grapple with the rationale for Section members paying much less in Main Club assessment than At-Large members pay in Main Club dues. I think the rationale is that Section members collectively deserve a break because each Section contributes volunteer trails and shelters work, while At-Large members mostly do not. With the increase in At-Large members' adopting various trails and shelters, this rationale is not as sound as it once was. We should do more to encourage those Section members who are able-bodied to spend at least a half day per year on trail or shelter work. (Many older members have earned a retirement, but the Section cannot rest on their laurels forever.) People can also help by raising funds or doing Section or Main Club office tasks, and in other ways. I think Section members are supposed to do such things, at least while they're able; At-Large are only expected to pay dues.

Also a propos of Organizational Review, the GMC must decide if it is supposed to maintain only the LT and its side trails, or if it is a statewide trail maintainer. For example, should the GMC, either through adopters or through a Section, maintain some of the essentially unmaintained trails listed in the Day Hikers Guide, such as the one up Birdseye?

The GMC faces some conflict with the Mt. Mansfield Corp. over its expansion plan despite recent compromises. Now might be a good time to take that hike up Mt. Mansfield you've thought about, so you have some idea of what the issues are, especially around the Haselton Trail -- and so you can tell me and Wally what to do.

The main club's Killington-Pico Committee has been dormant, and it's partly my fault. I'm the local member. Would anyone care to join? In the meantime, the recent Rutland Herald report is accurate: because S-K-I, Ltd. won't give more protection for the LT, the National Park Service will condemn a generally 1000' wide swath. The reroute around the west of Pico may depend on the City of Rutland's willingness to sell the Park Service part of the City Forest. Another factor may be the Town of Mendon's (un)willingness to see land in Mendon transferred from the City of Rutland, which pays real estate taxes, to the U.S. Government, which pays a lesser sum.

QUECHEE GORGE

by Roma Pulling

A day that started cloudy and threatening turned into a gorgeous afternoon. Three people met me at the park, and we drove to Quechee in two cars, parking near the picnic area.

After eating, we followed a path north along the Ottauquechee River as far as the falls. As May 7 was Green-up Day, I carried a large plastic bag, and we picked up trash as we walked along. By the end of the hike we had the bag half full with cigarette butts and plastic and paper products including two soiled baby diapers. Ray Catozzi filled on and a half shopping bags with cans and bottles.

Near the falls Bob Piper, who is an electrical engineer, walked down to the power station and could hear dynamos turning. Power generated here used to run woollen mills when the area was known as Dewey's Mills. When our inspection was complete, we retraced our steps and followed a path under the Rt. 4 bridge. In the days of the Woodstock Railroad, a railroad bridge crossed the river at this same spot from 1875 to 1933. We had seen pictures of the original bridge, constructed of wooden trusses reinforced with iron rods. It was replaced with a steel bridge in 1911.

The path we were following paralleled the river, descending as we followed it in a southerly direction until we were on a level with the river itself. Several people were sunning themselves on rock outcroppings in the river, and we joined them for a picture-taking interlude. On our walk we had seen several spring wild flowers including lovely white bloodroot and round-leaved (yellow) violets.

We met at the White Cottage Snack Bar in West Woodstock for some of their delicious ice cream. It was a pleasant way to end a very pleasant outing.

SOUTHERN WALK THROUGH

14 May 1994

by Sue Carey, Leader

Rob and I were unable to attend this work party, but Rob managed to meet people at the fire station, distribute tools and send people on their way. From the reports that I received all of the southern half of our section was done except for two miles south of Minerva Hinchey.

We received some free material from a friend of mine who likes to keep her property neat and tidy. Her picket fence was starting to show signs of rot along the bottom. I picked up the upright pickets that she had removed, cut off the bottoms and repainted them, and they made dandy arrows for along the Long Trail. They were nailed on trees at several problem intersections including the spur trail to Minerva Hinchey, the Lower Cold River Road and the Three Camp Road north of the Upper Cold River Road.

The only major problem area is between the Cold River Roads. The stream is washing away the bank leaving a dangerous 40 feet dropoff along the Trail. This area has been temporarily rerouted, but a permanent reroute cannot be accomplished until approval is received from the U.S. Government.

NORTHERN WALK-THROUGH

by Sue Carey

Normally the northern part of our section is Tim Welch's responsibility, but he had to go to a wedding. I didn't attend the southern walk-through and was feeling guilty because I am Southern Trails and Shelters Co-Chairman. Jumping at the opportunity to redeem myself, I led the charge up Killington.

Two people started at Route 4 and headed south. The rest piled into my Toyota pickup at Killington Base Lodge and we drove up the service road. Now before we started up the road, the truck was a little noisy because of muffler problems. After we started up, it definitely became LOUD. We parked the truck close to Cooper Lodge and headed down the path. Much to our chagrin we discovered that Killington has moved its ski trails to include Cooper Lodge. There were two huge metal signs warning skiers about leaving the ski trail. These signs do not meet ATC standards. Don't you need an Act 250 permit to move ski trails?

The workers headed south along the Trail with clippers, chainsaw and paint. Seth and I clipped the trail to the top, then we drove down the mountain. Trail bikes passed us on the way down. We didn't have to worry about surprising them; by this time the truck was so loud that you couldn't hold a conversation inside the truck. We picked up the work party at the Three Camps Road in Shrewsbury and returned them to Rutland.

MT. ASCUTNEY MELT

by Herb Ogden, Jr.

Hot and hazy were the hours as we clumb through woody bowers on the scenic Brownsville Trail.
Languidly we clumb the tower noting thunderheads did lower.

Once upon the Weathersfield Trail came assaults of rain and hail.
On we slogged with soggy shoes till Crystal Cascade gave us views.

DEDUCTIBILITY OF DUES

by Lisa Hughes, Business Manager, GMC

GMC Headquarters has received several calls recently regarding the tax deductibility of dues paid to the Green Mountain Club. Dues paid to GMC Sections are a little unclear. Headquarters has conferred with our auditor about this, and she has made the following recommendations.

For Section members, only the amount of the assessment paid by the Section, less the cost of the Long Trail News, is deductible. Only contributions made to an IRS-determined 501(c)3 organization are deductible. The assessment fits this category. However, because the Long Trail News is considered to be a benefit of membership, it is not deductible.

In other words, an individual member who pays dues to a Section could deduct $9, which is $12 for the Section assessment less $3 for the cost of the LTN. [Ed. note: Because the Section pays the GMC $18 for a family membership, those paying a family membership presumably can deduct $15, which is the $18 assessment less the $3 for the LTN. Because the GMC has no separate assessments for junior or senior members, they can also deduct the $9.]

DEER LEAP LOOKOUT TRAIL RELOCATION by Herb Ogden, Jr.

The present Deer Leap Trail is shown by the dotted line on the map at the left. Although the Killington Section does not officially maintain this trail, the GMC sometimes consults us about it. As previous Smoke & Blazes have reported, the Section's Board of Directors recommended some time ago that the section from the Lower Lookout on Little Deer Leap down to Sherburne Pass be closed. Erosion had left big bare rocks where there was once some vegetation to cling to, and the Directors felt the trail had become too dangerous to be listed as a normal hiking trail any more. The GMC and the U.S. Forest Service finally agreed, and this southernmost part of the trail was closed. At the same time, there was discussion of opening a new part of the trail from Little Deer Leap to near Maine Junction, where the Appalachian Trail, a side trail to Mt. Katahdin, leaves the LT and heads east. I suggested the dashed lines on the map as a possible southern loop, and this was scouted.

On 6 June, Beth LeClair, the District Ranger for the U.S. Forest Service's Rochester District, wrote to the GMC suggesting a route from just north of Maine Jct. along the ridge of Little Deer Leap to the present trail at the top of Little Deer Leap. She also recommended closing the present trail north of there (as well as keeping the southernmost part closed) because it was too steep and wet. This would make the only access to Little Deer Leap the new trail from near Maine Jct., make Big Deer Leap trail-less, and prevent any loop hikes on either of the Deer Leaps.

I objected to the U.S. Forest Service's plan, and, on 2 July, the GMC wrote this letter to the Forest Service's District Ranger LeClair:

Dear Beth,

The Green Mountain Club would like to respond to the scoping letter on the Deer Leap and Appalachian Trail relocation projects dated June 6, 1994. The GMC has appreciated the opportunity to work with the Rochester District on the ground in formulating the two proposals that lie within our maintenance responsibility: Deer Leap and the A.T. relocation in Bridgewater. GMC would like to be more directly involved with the development of the scoping documents for Long or Appalachian Trail projects in the District such as this one. This enhanced level of cooperation will help to clarify specific details.

Deer Leap Trail Relocation

The GMC agrees that the current situation at Deer Leap is unacceptable for reasons of safety and resource protection. The southern approach to the ledges has become severely eroded over the years and the jumbled boulders present significant hazards to hikers. The GMC supports closure of the segment of the Deer Leap Trail from Route 4 to the lower ledge. Imperative in this effort should be the provision of a short, new route to the ledges along with sufficient signing that informs hikers of the new route and reasons for closure of the old route. The past popularity of this area with rock climbers and local tourism bureaus dictates that the USFS, GMC and Appalachian Trail Conference conduct extensive outreach to these groups to alert them of the change in routes.

The proposed relocation of the Deer Leap Trail needs some fine tuning. First, the trail should leave the Long Trail directly at Maine Junction to consolidate signing and resource impact. From this point, the trail would need to briefly slab the slope to meet up with the proposed route. The proposed route should also include a switchback as it ascends the old log road toward the top of Little Deer Leap Mountain. The GMC would like to work with District staff to finalize this route.

The GMC has not resolved the issue of the status and location of the part of the Deer Leap Trail north of the proposed relocation. In part, this decision should be placed in context of the ultimate location of the Appalachian Trail from Route 4 to Route 100. The GMC will also need to resolve the issue of ongoing maintenance of the current route. The GMC proposes that the effort that would be expended on closing this part of the Deer Leap Trail could be better used toward resolving some of the existing problems, for instance, the precipitous route that it follows coming off of Little Deer Leap. We acknowledge that there are problems with the current route, however the GMC does not recommend closing this segment at this time. We will continue to work with the USFS on this issue.

We appreciate the opportunity to comment on these proposals. We look forward to working with the District on these issues in the future. We are available should you have further questions or a need for further review in the field.

Sincerely,

Lars Botzjorns
Director of Field Programs

WHY

- does the GMC have Sections?
- does the GMC also have At-Large members?
- does a Section pay less to the GMC treasury for each member than each At-Large member pays?
- does each Section member have twice the representation on the GMC Board of Directors that an At-Large member has?

by Herb Ogden, Jr.

These are some of the issues the GMC's Organizational Review Committee is examining. Killington Section Director Wally Rogers and I are the two Killington Section members on this committee. Here is my personal attempt to answer the above questions and provoke some discussion. I don't pretend to speak for the GMC or our Section. If you have ideas, let me or Wally know, and write a piece for Smoke & Blazes if you feel like it.

First, I'd better review a few things about dues. The GMC Board of Directors sets the dues each GMC member pays the GMC Treasurer. It calls At-Large members' dues simply "dues." It calls the money a Section sends the GMC Treasurer for each Section member the "Section assessment." Each Section can charge whatever dues it wants to, as long as it is able to pay this assessment. Some Sections own or lease camps used by their members, or pay the GMC for services like having the Long Trail Patrol do their trail work for them. These Sections tend to charge high dues, sometimes totaling over $40 per individual. Other Sections do all their own work and have only small expenses. They charge even less than the Killington Section does.

Presently, a single At-Large member pays the GMC treasury $24; a family At-Large pays $32. For an individual member, a Section pays the GMC only $12; it pays $18 for a family. This assessment is not all the dues a Section member pays. In our Section, for example, an individual adult pays $18 to the Section. Only $12 of that goes to the GMC Treasurer, so $6 stays in the Section. That $6 pays for things like the newsletter you are now reading and (especially in Sections that lack something like our Kirk Trails & Shelters Fund) maintenance tools, paint, signs, and other things volunteers need to do their work.

Sections exist primarily to maintain a section of the Long Trail and its shelters. Hence the name "Section," rather than "Chapter." Most also maintain side trails leading to their section of the LT. As far as the GMC is concerned, these are a Sections's key functions. If a Section maintains trails or shelters, the GMC need not pay the Long Trail Patrol to do this work, nor try to find other volunteers to do it, nor pay a Field Supervisor to work with them. As far as the GMC is concerned, a Section's secondary role is to make the GMC more visible to the public by publishing notices of its activities, and to educate the public about hiking trails and the GMC. This is likely to attract members and donations. The more the Sections do this, the less the parent organization has to. Sections have at least one more function: to let hikers with similar interests enjoy activities together through things like outings and potlucks. This third function has the least direct benefit to the parent GMC.

At-Large membership is available for those who want to support the GMC and the Long Trail but are either unwilling or unable to do any work for the GMC. Someone who wants to help the GMC but lacks the time or ability to do volunteer work like maintaining or blazing a trail, repairing a shelter, serving on one of the GMC's many committees, organizing outings, or helping with paperwork -- and who are neither spouses nor children of active volunteers -- should be At-Large members. Former volunteers should be allowed to rest on their laurels, however: a senior member who used to volunteer should not have to become an At-Large member when he or she can no longer work to help the GMC.

Section members pay less to the GMC treasury because part of their contribution is the physical or mental work I just described, along with what the Section itself spends on tools for maintaining trails, building materials for shelters, paint for blazing, and some shelter and peak caretakers. (For example, the Killington Section pays part of the Cooper Lodge caretaker's salary.) How much less do Sections pay? As I said before, an individual At-Large member pays the GMC treasury $24; a family At-Large pays $32. For an individual Section member, a Section pays the GMC only $12; it pays $18 for a family. The difference is $12 for an individual member and $14 for a family. This should mean that, on the average over the years he or she is a Section member, a Section member gives the GMC $12 worth of work per year. The difference of $14 for a family should mean that, on the average over the years while the family are Section members, the family gives the GMC $14 worth of work per year.

A different interpretation is that the GMC Treasurer simply charges each Section the cost of the Long Trail News and insurance, and that this comes to $12 per single member and $18 per family -- which is the "assessment" each Section pays the GMC Treasurer. I do not know whether the above are the real costs, however. More importantly, if this is the sole reason for the Section assessment, there is no reason to charge At-Large members any more. After all, if the lower Section assessment does not reflect any work by Section volunteers or trail materials bought by Sections, why should At-Large dues be any higher than the Section assessment per member?

Ideally (but not practically), I suppose the Section assessment should be set by a complex calculation based on the whole Sections's contribution of volunteer work and materials. Because the GMC pays a Long Trail Patrol member about $4.40 per hour, and because LTP members probably work at least as efficiently as Section volunteers, I suppose we should begin by crediting a Section with no more than $4.40 for each hour its volunteers spend on trails and shelters work. For example, if the Killington Section had five people show up for each of four work parties and they were either on the way to the worksite or at the worksite for six hours each workday, (which may be typical for our Section) the Section would be credited with $5 \times 4 \times 6 \times \4.40 , or $528.

Next, we credit the Section with a year's worth of trail and shelter maintenance materials. This would vary greatly depending on the year's construction projects, so let's just assume $120 is average.

Then we credit the Section for the time its members spend on overall GMC activities. For our Section, since Wally Rogers and I have been almost the only ones to attend any GMC Directors or committee meetings or other overall club activities for the last few years, and since I attend perhaps 15 such meetings each year and Wally attends perhaps 8, and since going to and attending each meeting takes perhaps an average of 6 hours, the Section would be credited with another $(15 + 8) \times 6 = 138$ hours work. Putting a value on it is much harder than putting a value on trail and shelter work, however. We might to estimate how many hours of paid staff time the GMC would have to add if Wally and I did nothing. But most of what we do is governance work that it is inappropriate for staff to do. The recent Membership Survey showed Section members do more of this than At-Large do. If no one did it, the GMC would collapse. But how can we put a dollar value on it? Maybe we should guess what the GMC would have to pay At-Large members in the way of mileage and lodging to persuade enough of them to take over from the Section Directors and committee members to keep the Club running. (This assumes, however, that none of the section members who presently sit on the Board or on committees would become At-Large and continue their work.) But let's say the requisite stipend to attract enough At-Large people for this Board and committee work were \$35 for overnight and 200 miles @ 22¢ per mile, per meeting. That comes to \$89 per meeting, and Wally and I attend perhaps 23 meetings per year between us. The total would be $23 \times \$89$, or \$2,047.

The final calculation is also hard: we have to reckon the financial consequences to the GMC if the Section stopped having outings and publishing a newsletter. How many present Section members would simply drop their membership and not become At-Large members? I have no idea, nor do I think anyone has researched this, but assume the number is 40. We multiply this by the individual assessment, minus the $3 for the Long Trail News the GMC would save by not having to send it to the former member. That means the GMC would lose assessments of $40 \times $9 = \360 . So $360 would be the worth of our outings and publicity to the GMC.

The total is $3,055. Divide by 90, which is about the Killington Section's recent membership. That comes to $33.94 per member. If we disregard the Board and committee work, the total is only $1008, which comes to $11.20 per member. But the difference between the Section assessment per individual and the At-Large dues is only a little more: $12. Therefore, it might appear that the Killington Section, at least, is paying an appropriate assessment.

Section members have twice as many Directors as At-Large because they've always had more and the Board would be too big if they elected Directors in the same proportion that Section members do. But I think a Section does not need more than one Director and an Alternate to represent its views.

BIRDSEYE FROM THE EAST

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

Eighteen hikers showed up for this one, including one all the way from Newport! Maybe we should schedule more short hikes up modest mountains on Sunday mornings. The crowd was most convivial.

We parked on the Ira Birdseye Road a few hundred feet south of the "trailhead," which was, in turn, not far south of the junction of the abandoned road to Ira with the longer-abandoned road to Poultney. A short walk up the road, past an old woodroad that led west uphill, and over a bridge, led us to the "trailhead." I put that in quotation marks because this is not really a trail, but simply a woodroad apparently frequented by hikers and all-terrain vehicles but not formally maintained or marked.

On the way up, the three young boys who were with us caught toads and other creatures. The rest of us simply caught our breath. There is one particularly steep stretch after one crosses a brook. Then there is a stretch where the woodroad does double duty as a small brook. There are few obvious junctions. Fairly far down, one bears right where a less-used woodroad angles up toward the great south cliff; and one does not take a less-used woodroad that angled down to the right. Eventually, one comes to a T. The right bar leads to a good eastern lookout. The left leads into a col that runs north-south and then trends around to the right. It is still faintly marked with Keewaydin Camps' pinkish blazes. This leads through pretty hardwoods to an east-west col where the trail from the old ski area enters from the west. From here, the ATVs go straight up to the north lookout. A faint hiking trail, blazed pink, angles up more gently to the right and leads to an eastern lookout over the whole Coolidge Range and Blue Ridge, as well as West Rutland and Rutland. From there, an even fainter path leads to the north lookout and hang-glider takeoff ramp, where we had lunch and enjoyed the view of Lake Bomoseen. A few of us also followed the faint trail to the west lookout for a view of the top of the mountain. The old Keewaydin trail toward the real summit is gone, however.

This pleasant hike took only a little more than two hours, counting stops for lunch, views, and a few blueberries. It is nicer than the route up from the old ski area. Everyone seemed to enjoy it.

CAMEL'S HUMP

6 August 1994

by Roma Pulling

If Alfred and I could have planned the weather ourselves, conditions on the day of our hike wouldn't have been more perfect. We had sunshine, low humidity and cool temperatures. One hiker even wore gloves while sitting on the summit.

We had met eight other hikers at the park and another at the trailhead in Huntington Center. After a rest stop in Bristol on the way, we were ready to hit the trail at 10 a.m. Our plan was to climb to the summit via the Burrows Trail and Long Trail, a total round trip distance of 5.8 miles, but this wasn't enough of a challenge for three of the fellows. They decided to ascend the Forest City Trail to Montclair Glen Lodge, climb to the summit using the Long Trail up the nearly perpendicular south face of the mountain and descend via the Burrows Trail. They were still .7 mile from their van, which means they hiked a total of 7.7 miles.

The Burrows Trail is a strenuous climb but apparently this doesn't discourage many people. The parking lot was full and cars were parked on both sides of the road for at least a quarter of a mile. When we returned to our cars about 3:30 p.m., hikers were still starting up the mountain, many with dogs and small children. I wondered if they knew what they were undertaking.

The 360 degree view from the top of Camel's Hump is unbeatable on a clear day. This mountain is 4083 feet high and ties with Mount Ellen as the third highest in Vermont. We lingered after eating our lunch, expecting the three men to join us there. But several hikers had plans for later that day, and we had to get back. A call the next day confirmed that the men had arrived home about half an hour later than we did and that they also had a good hike.

HIKING TO OLD CEMETERIES

by Roma Pulling

Hidden in the woods in many parts of Vermont are cemeteries reached by what are now abandoned roads. As members of the Vermont Old Cemetery Association, Alfred and I have often been inspired to search out an old burial ground hidden among the trees.

Our first venture was in search of the Kellogg-Bassett Cemetery, which is a mile from any presently travelled road in the town of Bridgewater. It was badly overgrown with sizable trees and brush. The grave of Reuben Palmer interested me because there are Palmers in my family tree, but I haven't been able to make a connection. No one had been buried there since 1865.

Of the four cemeteries in Mt. Tabor, three are not on travelled roads. Two were relatively easy to locate, but the Greeley Cemetery was a real challenge. We knew it was in the Big Branch area, but in spite of much criss-crossing of the woods, it eluded us. Eventually Ira Hawley led us to it. We had been in the right spot and had passed within a short distance of it, but it was hidden by trees and a stone wall. There are three burials, the latest being in 1861. The Greeleys owned a sawmill near Big Branch which later passed to Silas Griffith.

Also in Mt. Tabor, the Baker Cemetery - in the woods east of Rt. 7 - is visited by relatives regularly, and the Burton Cemetery, off Forest Road #10 near Devil's Den, is maintained by the VFW.

While we were surveying cemeteries in Shrewsbury for VOCA, we were directed to the Bullard Cemetery. Following instructions given us by Churchill Scott, we located it in the woods between Rt. 103 and the Lottery Road. It is in remarkably good condition with an iron fence still surrounding the graves of Mr. Bullard and his wife, who were buried in 1831 and 1855. While we were bushwhacking in search of the two burials, we saw another couple out in search of old bottles. It turned out to be Alfred's sister and her husband! It's a small world.

The Killington Section has hiked to the Hawk Hill Cemetery in Brandon on two occasions. This can be reached by following a logging road through the woods back of Otter Valley Union High School. Some of the very first settlers of Brandon are buried there, including David June and his wife, Prudence, and her parents, John and Sarah Ambler. John's was the first burial in town in 1776.

If we decide to continue our search for abandoned cemeteries, we should be busy for a while because we have the whole state of Vermont through which to explore.

MANSFIELD-ON-THE-WINOOSKI

10 September 1994

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

Sue Thomas and I were surprised to find ourselves the only people who showed up at the park on a sunny morning. We were less surprised when the view north from Duxbury to the Worcester Range and Mt. Mansfield ended in thick clouds at a fairly low elevation. By the time we reached the trailhead of the Haselton Trail, which was our chosen way to ascend Mt. Mansfield, we chose not to ascend. By then, the thick and very damp-looking clouds were only a few hundred feet above us.

Along with a former Killington Section member who had joined us, we headed south to the stretch of the LT between the West Bolton Road and Jonesville. I liked this because I finished my End-to-End in 1964, before the LT was moved west to go through Jonesville, and had never hiked this stretch.

Though this part of the LT is not high, it is pretty. We lunched at a beautiful little pond and enjoyed views south (where we could still see a little sun) from various rocky knobs. We found descending the knobs a little tricky in light rain, but felt much more dry and comfortable when we thought about where we were supposed to be, way up in those wet and windy clouds. Discretion was the better part of valor.

EDITOR'S LETTER TO ANOTHER EDITOR

Sylvia Plumb, Editor
Long Trail News
Green Mountain Club, Inc.
RR 1, Box 650
Waterbury Center VT 05677

Dear Editor:

At their meeting on 24 September, the Directors began to move in a direction that would change a unique feature of the GMC. By a straw vote of about 2 to 1, they agreed that the Organizational Review Committee should draft a By-Law change that would require uniform dues for every GMC membership category. This means that an individual membership in a Section would cost the same as an individual membership At-Large, for example. It also means that a Section could no longer set its own dues according to its own needs. There might be an exception for a Section which wanted to charge higher dues than At-Large, if the Section set up a dues collection system that duplicated the system Headquarters would use.

Presently, most Sections charge lower dues than At-Large members have to pay. They can do this because, for example, they must send only about $13 or $14 ("assessment" plus insurance contribution) to Headquarters for every individual member. In contrast, individual At-Large members pay $24. The historical reason for the dues break for Section members is that, taken together, Section members make up for paying less dues by doing more volunteer work than members At-Large. In fact, no one expects members At-Large to do anything but pay dues, though some do volunteer and their efforts are appreciated. Some of these At-Large volunteers are doubtless members who have joined since the Club changed its policy and made people who joined through Headquarters members At-Large unless they specifically asked to join a Section. Their work would certainly entitle them to membership in the Section responsible for their area of the trail.

Granted, the present system is not perfect. Perhaps some Sections no longer contribute enough volunteer work to justify the Section members' dues break. But the GMC should encourage and enable them to work harder, not simply give up on them. Doubtless, some people belong to Sections and never do any volunteer work for the GMC although they have the ability. This is no great evil as long as the Section as a whole makes up for its lower dues payment through volunteer work, however.

"If it ain't broke, don't fix it" applies here. This is the only instance where the Organizational Review Committee recommended a change despite overwhelming opposition from GMC members. As reported in your Fall 1994 issue, p. 10, the scientifically conducted 1994 membership survey said about 70% of members favored allowing Sections to charge different dues from each other. Just as important was the unpublished finding that about 70% of members favored allowing Sections to charge their members different dues than At-Large members pay.

The Directors need members' input on this issue before their January meeting. I hope that, elsewhere in this issue, a full list of the Directors and their addresses and phone numbers will appear. Of course, I also hope that members will tell their Directors not to take an action which ignores Section members' volunteer efforts and threatens to destroy a unique and valuable feature of the Club.

Sincerely yours,

Herbert G. Ogden, Jr.

DON'T KNOW WHAT TO DO WITH OLD ISSUES OF SMOKE & BLAZES?

Don't just throw them out. Leave them in a waiting room where non-members can see them. Maybe they'll like what they see and join up.

Sharon, Wallace, Victor and Sargent. Sounds like a new accounting firm? No! These are the names of streets we followed on our way to Combination Pond and back to our starting point at the park. As we promised, we abandoned our cars and proceeded entirely on foot. "We" included nine Killington Section members who turned out for this slightly different "deer season special."

The weather was ideal -- mostly sunny and mild. Besides walking to the pond, we explored Healy Lane, with an unfamiliar view of the new high school, and sauntered along Ridgewood Lane east of the pond and at a higher elevation.

At the pond we took a gorp and lemonade break. On our return trip we took another route and delivered Bernie to his front door before returning to our cars.

This was a variation on our usual hikes, providing a diversion to tide us over until hunting was finished and we could return to the woods.

right and left to reach the Poultney River at the South end of Lake Champlain. This area has the water level controlled by the lake level, though it's narrow and quiet as a river. The head of navigation is up river about 15 miles at Carver's Falls. This region of the lower Poultney River has been designated an outstanding resource water. We drove along Galick Road and parked at the Nature Conservancy parking lot. Just north and above the parking lot is an old cemetery with 20 or so stones in various repose. Voca could spend some time and money here.

The trail leads east along the top of the cliffs and then north skirting the meadows to a branch point. We went northwest past the old barn and soon it began to rain. Three people turned back and the rest went on to the Stewart homestead site for lunch, high above the narrow lake and a view to the south of South Bay. The rain had stopped and the afternoon was warm and overcast. While we were looking for a northern route to the base of Bald Mountain, the rain began again and a shorter route back carried us along the base to the slopes below the raven and peregrine nesting area. This area is also the den site for timber rattlesnakes, but the November date reassured us that they would be tucked in for the winter.

The woods road we followed here is a good ski or snowshoe trail. After reaching the branch point we retraced our route to the cars. Bill Kuehn and other West Haven friends were also out hiking that day and we saw them in the parking lot. We spent about 3.5 hours and walked 4 miles using time to discuss the history of the site and the Conservancy plans for the preserve.

FIRST SENIOR SHUFFLE

October 9, 1994

by Roma Pulling

We forgot again that a hike scheduled for the second week end in October would conflict with Art in the Park. Parking space near our usual meeting place by the fire station was nearly non-existent, but six people joined us there. The weather was ideal -- sunny and warm.

I had been intentionally vague about the destination for our hike, not wanting to stray far from Rutland because of time restraints when doing an afternoon hike but hoping to pick a place we had not visited recently. Clarendon Shelter seemed to be such a place. Killington Section members have over the years built, remodeled, repaired, and cleaned the shelter, but three of our hikers had never been there. In compliance with our promise to lead an easy hike, we used the old trail following an abandoned town road.

Along the road we paused at a marker identifying the route of the Crown Point Road, and Churchill Scott told us some of the history of the road, which was built in 1759 to accommodate men hauling supplies from Fort No. 4 in Charlestown, New Hampshire, to the fort at Crown Point in New York. It is said to be the first road in what is now Vermont. Churchill also showed us a cellar hole at the home site of the Bullard family. John Bullard and his wife are buried off an abandoned road between Route 103 and the Lottery Road.

On arrival at the shelter, we had a snack of cookies and lemonade and chose our afternoon's activities. Our two youngest hikers decided to climb Beacon Hill for the view, two relaxed at the shelter -- with the lemonade and cookies! -- and the other four hiked past the shelter until the old road intersected the Long Trail relocation, which we followed south for a short distance.

If there is an interest in this sort of easy, half-day hike, we will repeat it next year to a different destination. But NOT during Art in the Park!

BIRDSEYE REPORT - LETTER TO THE EDITOR

by Jean Davies

November 25, 1994

I was interested in your Birdseye report in the Smoke & Blazes of October 1994 in that you mentioned the Keewaydin Camp blazes [on Birdseye]. I never realized that they had done any trail work up there. I know that in 1980 George Pearlstein worked with me at Camp Betsey Cox to mark out a trail and help our campers, those from Camp Catherine Capers and from Camp Sangamon to cut the trail. Soon after it was done, the snowmobilers "improved" it to their own needs. Perhaps Keewaydin worked with the above three camps. They certainly helped us a lot on the Ice Cave Trail. But I hadn't remembered that they worked with George Pearlstein and us on Birdseye. Not a momentous question ... just interested.

EDITOR'S GOODBYE

by Herb Ogden, Jr.

As the Killington Section's Directors know, this is my last issue of Smoke & Blazes. I took over the editorship at some point in the 1980s which is lost to memory. Back then, I could handle the job in my spare time. Now, between commitments to my family, the demands of partnership in a trial law practice, and the meetings and paperwork required of me as Secretary of the Green Mountain Club, I just do not have the time to do the editor's job right. I used to have someone hound hike leaders for articles and felt disappointed if we did not have an account of every excursion. Now I am almost glad that most hike leaders forget to send in articles, because I am not sure I would have the time to edit them despite Larry Dodds' generous help with the word processor.

Many people have helped make Smoke & Blazes one of the best Section newsletters. Before Larry Dodds helped with the word processing, former Section President Phil Johnson did. Sue Thomas, who has been Illustrator longer than I have been Editor, has not only graced our pages with fine art but also helped take copy to the printer. Roma Pulling has called the production crew to get the newsletter ready for mailing, and, when I have been unavailable, she has taken over the production altogether. Irene and Lorraine Hawley, Virginia and Churchill Scott, and Ray Catozzi have collated the newsletter, addressed it, and stamped it, and Churchill Scott has taken it to the post office. Others have helped from time to time, also. I thank you all and hope you will help the new Editor as well and as often as you have helped me.

Finally, a word to the hike leaders: many thanks to those of you who have faithfully documented your outings, especially Roma Pulling and Rob and Sue Carey. Your reports are the envy of a number of other Sections as well as being an important historical record of the Section's doings.

JANUARY GREEN MT. CLUB DIRECTORS MEETING

by Herb Ogden, Jr., G.M.C. Secretary

This meeting approved many amendments to the GMC By-Laws. The Organizational Review Committee had thought most of them were not controversial, but even some of the supposedly noncontroversial ones generated much discussion. They generally reflected changes and growth in the GMC, eliminated the U.S. Forest Service and Vt. Dept. of Forest, Parks & Recreation representatives as voting Directors, strengthened the Nominating Committee, and simplified the committee structure.

The really controversial proposals were to change the way Directors are elected, change the size of the Board, have the Board tell the Sections what dues they could charge, and make each Section member pay the same dues to the overall GMC that each At-Large member does. Please attend the Annual Meeting on Saturday, 3 June (probably in Bennington); the controversial proposals will come up for a vote by the membership then.

"Snow Shoe" Hike January 14, 1995 by Roma Pulling

When we schedule hikes three months in advance, some strange things happen. And that's why on the day of our snow shoe hike the temperature was 54° and there was mud underfoot. But as usual we made the most of it and our group of eight people enjoyed a walk in the woods.

It could almost be said that Alfred and I led two hikes the same day. At 10 am we met the hikers who relied on the information on our hike schedule, and at 1 PM we were back at the park to meet a hiker who got her information from the announcement in the Herald.

A few years ago we discovered how much fun it was to walk or snow shoe through the woods from our son's house on the East Pittsford Road to our daughter and son-in-law's house on Blueberry Lane. So for Hike #1 we drove to Cynthia and Randy's, parked a truck and continued on to Steve's. Parking in his yard, we walked across the dam that holds back the water in his pond and proceeded by logging roads, an occasional short bushwack and a trip across an open field to Cynthia and Randy's, where we were invited inside to sit in front of the fireplace. After eating lunch there, we left three hikers lounging in front of the fire while we made our way back to the park for the second installment of our hike.

With one more hiker in tow we returned to Blueberry Lane, and six of us walked back to Steve's for the conclusion of Hike #2.

We want to thank Steve Pulling for allowing us to park on his property and start our hike there and also to thank the Robertses for letting us walk on their land and enjoy the comfort of their living room. Thank you, Randy, for ferrying us to the park and back after lunch. The leaders had a great time.

Killington Section Annual Meeting April 8, 1995 minutes by Jean Davies Secretary

After the Potluck supper, President Sue Carey opened the business meeting. She introduced our visitor, Lars Botozajourns, the GMC Director of Field Programs.

The Secretary's report of the Sept. 8, 1994 Board Meeting was approved as read.

The Treasurer's written report was handed out. A copy is attached. Wally Rogers pointed out that although our income from dues were lower, we still were within our budget. Herb Ogden observed that the GMC thinks we only paid $78 for shelter insurance, but it is actually $138.15. We currently have 30 adult members, 15 family members, 20 seniors, and 4 life members.

Trails & Shelters Committee report was given by Rob Carey. He commented that they were still there. There were some minor repairs. The wash-out between the Cold River Roads still needs a minor re-route. Approvals are still pending.

Smoke & Blazes report was given by Herb Ogden. He is retiring as editor. The Carey's will take over as editor. Larry Dodds will continue to help with typing, and Sue Thomas with artwork. Roma Pull ing was good about getting her hike reports in on time. Not all hike leaders got theirs written up. Perhaps an official "hounder" is needed.

Outings Committee report by Herb Ogden. Bernie Donahue observed that fewer folks were turning out for hikes and meetings. Delight suggested more interesting descriptions of upcoming hikes be included in Smoke & Blazes. Herb moved that the Outings Schedule be adjusted so that they can make the hike schedule printout of the Long Trail News. Seconded by Delight and passed. The popularity of Mystery Hikes was questioned. Sugar on snow parties have been losing money recently. [There was none held this year, and several members remarked that they missed it. It was also suggested that an outdoor location would be desirable. Unfortunately Doc Howard's sugarhouse is no longer available! - Editor]

GMC Directors report by Wally Rogers. Members are urged to attend the GMC Annual Meeting in Bennington, June 3, 1995. Many important items will be voted on. Other items of recent GMC Board Meetings: Headquarters planning relating to the various barns and buildings at the Waterbury site. The Pioneer Valley Section ran out of members and voted itself out of existence, which was confirmed by the Board. The total GMC budget is about $700,000 which is up about 16% from last year. There are two new part-time employees, bringing the year-round total up to 8 employees. There is a proposed dues increase and section assessment increase of $3 to take effect on 1/1/97. The Long Trail System National Scenic Trail Act of 1995 is being written to present to Senators Jeffords & Leahy. Eminent Domain can be used on the Long Trail itself in cases of necessity, but not on side trails.

Uniform Dues. The idea is that At-large and Section dues would be the same, and all dues would go into the main club which would refund 20% to the individual sections. Dues for all would go up. Herb and Wally were against uniform dues, feeling that they would weaken the Sections.

GMC Membership List. The number of at-large members are increasing while those in the Sections are decreasing. Sue Carey has the list of Rutland area GMC members who are not Killington Section members. They will be contacted and given information about the Section. There were many proposed Bylaw Changes. Wally handed out copies of these.

It was hoped that the Manchester Forest Service would take over the care for the Clarendon Gorge Bridge. Planking was needed for the 1995 season. A better design for Long Trail bridges is needed. There are many problems with the Gorge Bridge.

Wally Rogers moved that $500 from the Kirk Fund go to the caretakers program in Vermont, seconded by Herb Ogden and passed.

It was proposed that the old buttons, postcards, etc. still in stock be sold at the Bennington Annual Meeting, possibly at reduced cost, and as "collectibles".

New Business

Question regarding raising dues. Herb felt that the membership should know that we are currently running a deficit by not raising our dues, so that when/if we have to in the future, they will be more aware of the reason why. It was noted that we currently make $6 per member. With uniform dues, it would be about $5. Wally moved to hold the dues as is for another year. Rob Carey seconded it, but with the observation of operating deficit (see above). Motion passed.

Rob Carey moved that the Killington Section go on record as strenuously objecting to uniform dues. The secretary was to communicate this to the Main Club. The Directors were urged to do what they could to support this stand. Roma Pulling seconded it. The motion passed with a unanimous vote.

Herb brought up the subject of the number of blazes on the trail. Bob Vale was in favor of being able to see the next blaze from the one you are at. While it was recognized that in some places blazing was overdone, the closer blazes are necessary for winter hiking and for novices. Lars suggested getting our comments to Dave Shepherd on the Trails Committee. There is some thought about Outing Guidelines to be developed. The Killington Section is NOT interested in such. Wally spoke against having Standards or Guidelines.

Officers

Directors: Sue Carey, Sue Thomas, Jean Davies terms expire in 1995. Elected in 1994 were Phil Smith and Roma Pulling.

Directors Meeting was held after the business meeting. Present: Larry Dodds, Sue Thomas, Sue Carey, Wally Rogers, Ray Catozzi, Roma Pulling, Jean Davies. Missing: Tim Welch, Linda Pellerin. Herb Ogden gets through as Main Club Director in June 1995.

Nominations: Roma as Treasurer; Larry Dodds as Vice-President; Sue Carey as President (provided that Wally Rogers will keep the record of Directors straight. Wally agreed); Director - Sue Thomas by Wally Rogers; Secretary - Jean Davies by Sue Thomas. Slate passed.

Sue Carey wants to write a cover letter to send to at-large members in our area with our hike schedule. Motion seconded and passed. Sue Thomas will write what will be an official letter to the Forestry Service suggesting that they should buy the CVPS land at Chittenden Dam in Chittenden. Jean Davies will type it up and send it. It was noted that the president has the power to appoint or re-appoint committee heads. The main club wants to have a trails committee meeting in this area with us, the Ottaquechee Section, or both.

Craigie Perkins

It is a great sense of loss that the Killington Section has with the passing of Craigie "Pinky" Perkins. He was in his 90's and in failing health. But for many years he, his wife Mary and his sister Vera, who predeceased him in 1994, were the life blood of the Killington Section. During the war years, Craigie, Gale "Brezzer" Spaulding and Dr. Gaskell kept the trail open and the section running.

Tall Timber his home in Mendon was a favorite spot for Section activities, especially the Washington's Birthday Winter Weekend. One summer he built Buffum Shelter almost single-handedly for the Section. This was a closed one to replace an earlier open front shelter, south of Button Hill.

Every member of the Section wants to express the most sincere sympathy to Craigie's family for his recent passing and also a heartfelt "Thank you" for all the labor of love he gave the Section. [The above tribute to Craigie Perkins was sent to Smoke & Blazes by a longtime Section member - Editor]

My memory of Craigie Perkins comes from a later weekend event at Tall Timbers. He had an old Franklin Stove in the big room of the rec hall. The fire he had going in it was just right to take away the chill and provide a cheery spot to visit. We noticed a slight crack in one part of the stove and Craigie allowed that his old stove had a crack, but it would still work just fine. He was right. Since it was not an "airtight" stove, it drew just fine and didn't smoke at all. He and the stove were a couple of old-time Vermonters who belonged together. By Rob Carey.

Mystery Ski & Hike February 12 by Rob Carey

This was listed as a four mile, moderate trip, so we could have gone a lot of places. Fortunately this was after one of the few snowstorms of the winter. There was just enough snow for skiing on a new snowmobile trail near our house in Wallingford.

We started at a pull-out on Rt. 7 just north of the double bridges south of Wallingford village. From there we followed the railroad tracks a short distance before joining the trail and going into the woods. There were good views along the way, as the trail used open fields in several places. Sometimes the skiers got ahead of the walkers, but in other places the walkers caught up while the skiers negotiated a few spots that could have used a little more snow. We stopped at our house for a snack, conversation and relaxation by the fire. The trail continues on to South Wallingford, and we had scouted it out the evening before. The fire was very relaxing, and we had covered our 4 miles (well 3.5) so we decided to call it a day.

Jim Frink by Rob Carey

Jim Frink recently passed away at the age of 90. When I joined the Section he was Outings Chairman, and one of the most active members. It was a rare hike or work party that he was not on. Like many section members, he had nothing to do with the main club. He didn't camp, so he didn't go to the Intersectional, and as for Annual Meetings, the Section's was enough. One of his reports as Outings Chairman consisted of the words "We had 'em". On a hike he was always at the front of the group. At the lunch break, Jim would have the fire going before the rear-guard had arrived.

Tamarack Notch March 4, 1995

by Roma Pulling

On a truly beautiful, sunny day, Alfred and I met two hikers at the park and headed for the hills. The day started somewhat chilly but warmed to about 40° for ideal hiking conditions.

After parking in the area across from the old Girl Scout camp, which was otherwise empty, we walked east on the Notch Road to visit the Wilkins Cemetery. Three people from one family are buried there: Ezra Wilkins and his wife Anna, in 1838 and 1861 respectively, and an infant daughter of L. &

L. A. Wilkins, in 1856. The cemetery is in need of maintenance.

The most interesting walk to take from our location is the one over an abandoned road to the Brown covered bridge in Shrewsbury. The same hike was scheduled for April 24, but as there were only four of us we wouldn't reduce the turnout on the next hike very much. So we decided to go in that direction. The road was snow-covered, but packed and crusty, making easy walking.

The first points of interest were two cellar holes not far apart on opposite sides of the road. The maps I consulted did give the names of the former residents. We followed the North Branch of the Cold River until it joined the Cold River, which was with us for the rest of the hike. Near the end of the trail we passed a bird feeding station which was patronized by chickadees and squirrels and then came to a log cabin in the woods. Just before the road descended steeply toward the bridge we encountered a pick-up truck and two people gazing off into brush several rods away. We were amazed when they pointed out to us a moose nibbling on the bushes! We watched it for several minutes, and it mostly ignored us. It was the first moose any of us had ever encountered while hiking.

On reaching Brown Bridge, we built a fire on the edge of the road a short distance away and ate lunch. Brown Bridge was built in 1880 by Nicholas Powers and restored in 1978.

On our return hike we noticed that the moose was still there and in fact learned from the log cabin resident that it had been there for about a week.

South of Brandon Gap by Ski and Snowshoe March 11, 1995

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

This outing was under-attended, possibly because the newspapers said nothing about this part of the Long Trail being suitable for skis. The Leader showed up on skis anyway, but the other two participants, thinking no one would ski since the newspaper made it seem one could not, brought snowshoes.

In any case, there was plenty of snow. The going was good, since many people had snowshoed or skied south to Sunrise Shelter over the winter. Some had gone south to Bloodroot Gap, as the Leader found out on a reconnoitering trip earlier. We went only to the top of the Chittenden Brook Trail, had a nice lunch at Sunrise Shelter, and enjoyed the view of the Great Cliff of Mt. Horrid before returning to Brandon Gap

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

Now, we all know Jarvis Snodgrass was once Lieutenant Governor of Vermont because a plaque on the sanitary annex of the Governor Percival W. Clement Memorial Shelter in Shrewsbury says so. Surely there wouldn't be a Jarvis Snodgrass Memorial Gazebo if there were no such person to remember. The fact that the hike thither began at 1:11 PM on 1 April is sheer coincidence. With that in mind, let me tell of the outing that honored Mr. Snodgrass.

About a dozen snodgrassophiles and others walked north from the Upper Cold River Road along the old town road, soon passing a long abandoned town road that leads northwest to a cellarhole. The Leader explained the house that used to stand here was significant in that Jarvis Snodgrass did not sleep here. (In his itinerant days as a seller of wild onions, the Leader explained, Snodgrass slept anywhere the householders could stand the stench.)

Soon, a still-used town road headed north from our road. From its end, a snowmobile trail leads to Brewers Corners on the Wheelerville Road. A few feet farther, an abandoned town road led north to the former Haley Farm, mentioned in old Long Trail Guidebooks as a source of provisions. We stayed on the valley road, briefly joined the Long Trail at the first bridge, then continued on the old LT route up the old town road past a few camps.

Before we reached our destination, we inspected two other historical sites. The first was the cellarhole of a house where Jarvis Snodgrass did spend the night. In fact, one hiker pointed out the rusty remains of the bedframe that probably accommodated him. The second was in the spirit of the day, originally identified as earthworks hastily throw up by the Green Mountain Boys to defend North Shrewsbury after the Battle of Hubbardton. Actually, it appears to be a millrace; the 1869 Beers Atlas shows a mill at the site.

At our destination, the Gazebo was rededicated with fresh rolls of toilet paper. We returned via the Long Trail, crossing the excellent bridge designed by a Killington Section volunteer and built by him and others, then enjoying fairly dry footing as we walked along the rim of the valley. We inspected the remains of the Haley Farm, had a snack in the spring sun, and returned refreshed by our efforts and full of the spirit (though thankfully not the smell) of Jarvis Snodgrass.

Killington Section Presidents Message

by Sue Carey

There are several important issues that are going to be discussed at the Annual Meeting on June 4. Please attend if you can.

There have been several changes proposed by the Main Club that will have a major impact on the Killington Section. Foremost among these is the proposal to have uniform dues that are collected by the office in Waterbury. At our annual meeting in June there was a consensus among members present that this would result in fewer members and more volunteer jobs being taken over by paid staff which would result in an even higher dues increase.

Another change is one in the Trail and Shelter Maintenance Manual which proposes fewer blazes along the trail. I personally feel that this is elitist. The Trail is used by many different types of people including children and adults who are not "woods wise". The Trail can be quickly obscured by falling trees, leaves, and snow. As Trails and Shelter Co-Chairman of the Killington Section I recommend to our maintainers that blazes be kept as they have in the past so that all types of people can use the trail and it can also be used in the winter.

During the past year the work parties have been concentrating on Trail maintenance. Besides our usual walk-throughs, work has been done on the Blue Ridge Trail and Bucklin Trail. Also, there was a Brownie troop from Mendon who helped clip a section of Trail.

In the future we may soon get permission to reroute the Trail away from the dangerous cave-ins between the Cold River Roads. In anticipation of Federal approval we have scheduled a work party for the weekend of October 21. Also, The bridge over Clarendon Gorge has gotten to the point that rotten boards make it hazardous. Let's pray that the Main Club sees the need to fix this situation before someone is seriously hurt or killed.

Birdseye Mountain by Jerry Parker

I did not believe in ESP or any of the powers of the mind, until Jan. 29, 1995. I went to the park thinking I was going on a Sue Thomas hike to Birdseye Mountain. When I got there I noticed Sue was not there yet. Roma asked if I could take them hiking to the Birdseye area if Sue did not show up.

That's when it happened. Sue might not have been there physically but in spirit she was. I was going to lead this hike as Sue's medium. The thought of a trail that was in the Birdseye area went through my mind. I had been on this trail once about 4 years ago when I was hunting in the area. I told Roma I would lead this hike. If they only knew that my mind was being controlled by Sue. Every one there who knew me, was not concerned because of my cool, cautious and safe approach to hiking. But they did not know my mind was possessed by Sue Thomas.

Six unconcerned hikers and myself started off. We were on the NE side of Birdseye Mtn. Shortly after we got started I saw a partridge standing on a log. I tried to get the attention of the rest of the group but it flew off along with about 6 others. They just heard the wings beating as they took off. Then we came to the trail. At the top of the ridge there was a cellar hole, near by was one of the biggest clumps of lilac bushes I have ever seen. Too bad it was not spring so we could have seen them in full bloom. To the right of the cellar hole was Birdseye Mountain's rock face towering over us.

This was the farthest I had ever been on this trail before. So this meant the rest of the trip would be lead by instinct and Sue's ESP. As I said, if we get lost, it's Sue's fault. As we proceeded down the trail there was a frozen puddle of water. This puddle had frozen crystals of frost that looked like bird feathers in it. They were incredible looking. Some of them even had veins running down the middle, like a real feather. Not one of us had ever seen anything like them before.

The trail joined a town road that was not maintained in the winter. I felt there was something to the right that Sue wanted us to see. Not knowing what that was, we headed down the road. There we found a campground, with an old cemetery in the back. The view of Birdseye was unbelievable. A long meadow cleared the way to the rock face and the bright blue sky made the perfect background. It looked like a postcard, but of course no one had a camera.

At the cemetery one small slate marker caught my eye. It was in very good condition. The date was 1807; the little girl died at 9 months of age. Two stones to the right was another child's grave. This gave me a sense of how hard life was back then.

It was 11:30, so we decided to eat lunch at the campground. Al wanted a fire so everyone collected firewood. I could not quite figure out why. No one was cold, we did not have the club pack; no coffee pot, no food to cook. Was Sue controlling Al's mind too, telling him to start a fire? Or does Al just like playing with fire? Maybe it was the fact he had some old Rutland Herald's and he believes the only thing they're good for is starting fires. After lunch we continued down the road. Sue seemed to be trying to get me to make a loop, but where and how? My eyes were drawn to a notch in the mountain just to the left of the rock face of Birdseye's highest point. Did Sue want me to go that way? Was there a trail? We got off the town road and headed up a logging road toward the notch. The logging road ended shortly. Sue, this reckless attempt to get back to the cars could tarnish my reputation as a cool, cautious and safe leader

There was not a trail, so we zigzagged our way to the top of the notch. At the top there was a steep slippery trail that went down the other side. The group used many different methods to get down. Eventually we made it to the road not far from the cars. Everyone thought it was a great hike and we all wish Sue had made it in person.

Editors Message by Rob Carey

As noted in the Annual Meeting write-up I am now editing Smoke & Blazes. As I sit here at the computer trying to do the final layout, I have an increased appreciation for all the work Herb, Carol and other editors have done. If this issue does not find you before the first hike on the new schedule, I apologize. Those of you who have been promptly sending your hike write-ups and other articles in, please keep up the good work. For the rest of you, please send the articles soon after the hike. It's easier for you to remember what happened, and gives me time to have it typed before the last minute rush. The next issue will contain the complete membership list and officers list including directors term expiration dates. Please send copy to Rob Carey, RR1 Box 340, Wallingford, VT 05773.

Smoke & Blazes

Vol 48 Number 3

Killington Section Green Mountain Club

August 1995

Highland Walk-through May 27, 1995 by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

For our spring inspection from the Upper Cold River Road in Shrewsbury to Sherburne Pass, enough people showed up so that we could form three parties.

Three people did the stretch from the Upper Cold River Road to Governor Clement Shelter. They noted two bad wet spots about 0.25 miles south of the shelter, which seemed a good place to add rocks, and a need to refresh the blazes.

The other two groups rode up the Killington Chairlift, courtesy of the Killington Ski Area. The ride may not have been a lot faster than the traditional truck trip, but it sure was smoother and more scenic. Cooper Lodge was clean and in good shape, considering the abuse it takes in winter. Alas, all the signs except the lodge sign itself and a LT north sign (on a short abandoned stretch of the LT just below Cooper) were either smashed or taken over the winter. They will not be replaced until some Killington Section member volunteers to make new ones. (To volunteer, contact me or President Sue Carey.)

The lift riders split up at Cooper. Four worked south on the LT. Jerry Parker took care of all the chainsaw work to about half a mile north of the Gov. Clement Road, while three others cleared the trail thoroughly to Consultation Point, noting that the signs there and at Shrewsbury Peak Jct. have also disappeared, and that blazes need renewing. We also noted a quasi-Indian, Little Chief Hide-in-Woods, who tricked us into walking right past him a number of times. The stretch from Consultation Point to Gov. Clement Shelter needs at least a day's brushing work by at least two people. The worst is in the steep, rocky stretch near Consultation Point, which has not been cleared properly for at least three years.

The third group walked north from Cooper Lodge to Sherburne Pass. Bill Robichaud had already brushed from Sherburne Pass to south of Pico Camp, easing their task. GMC Southern Field Coordinator Dave Hardy took care of the chainsaw work and some temporary drainage on the Bucklin Trail and the LT north of Cooper. Pico Camp was in good shape, except six 7 x 9" panes of glass were missing. The first incline on the LT south of Sherburne Pass is more eroded than ever, but we hesitate to commit much labor to it because it may be moved once Pico builds new ski trails and lifts. Headquarters has been asked to get Pico to define the parts of the LT that will not be moved so we can work on them, anyway.

It was good to see some new faces along with the old regular trail workers. If you've never done trail work, try it! It made for a leisurely walk in beautiful woods. It's also a way to fulfill the work obligation that comes with Section membership.

Cold River Relocation Scheduled by Sue Carey

After three years of seeking Government approval we will be relocating a dangerous section of Long Trail in October. The work party is scheduled for 9:30 am Saturday, October 21.

There are two short sections of trail between the Cold River Roads which are along a bank that is being washed away by the Cold River. The drop offs are over one hundred feet and are dangerously close to the Trail. We hope that as many people as possible attend this work party so this problem can be fixed.

Lead Mine Mountain June 11, 1995

by Jean Davies

On Sunday afternoon, June 11, . . . would it rain or shine? Nineteen of us decided on sun and headed for Lead Mine Mountain. We were delighted with the eight kids in our party. They made a real addition to the group. Hope they come again! Jerry Parker helped them hunt for polliwogs and toads.

As we neared the top of the mountain, fractured outcroppings of dark rock (graphite) could be seen in the roadway. Paper was produced and everyone found some graphite to mark on it. This was the lead of Lead Mine Mountain. Apparently the mines were surface outcroppings rather than deep pits.

Vance and Jean Gee live a few hundred feet below the mountain's top, and we were welcomed by their "watch goose" and dog. Jean gave us a bit of history of the Gee family. The mountain has been in the family for generations.

We continued to the top where snacks were broken out. Mist blowing over hid the views, but the prevailing sentiment was, "I want to retrace when the sun is out." Newcomer Al Zoesik liked the beauty and isolation. "You ought to camcord it." The kids liked the graphite, toads, trees, flowers . . . and snacks.

Vance was draining his man-made pond, so we saw the old logs and tree stumps that had once been covered with water. But on the other side of the lane, the mist wafting over a lovely bog created a proper feeling of wilderness.

Three families, all related to the Gees, live near the top. The children are home-schooled since getting up and down the road in the winter would present too many problems. While there is phone service, Vance produces his own electricity. His machine shop has modern tools, and is where he produces his well known civil war cannons. The old machinery nearby is for parts to keep the other World War II vintage trucks and tractors operating. The Gee men folk seem to like the challenge of keeping the fine old machines running.

Lead Mine Mountain is a mix of the wild and the settled. The Gees are hospitable folks who like to share the love they have for their mountain with those who can appreciate it.

Lowland Walk-through May 9

by Rob Carey

I was unable to actually get out and do any work this time, so I just prepared tools and coordinated the effort. I am thankful for the work done by Bill Robichaud, Herb Ogden Jr., Tim Ward, Mary Ward, Sue Thomas, and Jerry Parker. They were able to deal with the usual mix of spring blowdowns, clipping and other work needed to get the Trail in shape. Between what they did on, before, or just after this scheduled event, the Trail was worked on from Rt 140 to Gov. Clement Shelter by mid-May.

Trail and Shelters Workshop July 22

by Sue Carey

On Saturday July 22 the Killington Section sponsored the GMC Trail and Shelter Workshop. Around 40 people attended. We met at the Maple Valley Grange in South Wallingford and then headed to the Sherburne Pass.

At the Pass we received a lecture on safety and heard about the latest beauracratc procedures for trail maintenance. Afterwhich we split into groups and headed for the Trail.

One group did brushing, another did chainsawing, a large group put in rock waterbars between Rt. 4 and Pico Camp and others inspected shelters.

The Killington Section saw a lot of maintenance work that day. The day ended at the Grange with a spaghetti supper put on by the Ladies Aid Society of South Wallingford. The group had obviously worked up an appetite. We finished a 2 gallon tub of chocolate chip ice cream donated by Seward's Dairy.

I want to again thank the many volunteers and LT Patrol members who worked on the Killington Section that day.

Birdseye Experiment a Success

by Sue Thomas

Thanks to Jerry Parker and 5 other hikers for participating in my first experiment with telepathic hike leading last January. It went so well that I'm now expanding my range - even as I write this I am mentally guiding a group on Mt. Mansfield, and have plans next week for a Brownie Troop in the Grand Canyon. There are still a few glitches to work out but I'm very encouraged with the results so far, tho I do plan to attend at least a few of my scheduled hikes from time to time too. Oh, the answer to Jerry's question in the last issue is; b) Al likes to play with fire.

Cavendish Gorge March 26

by Sue Thomas

This hike report was left out of the last issue of Smoke and Blazes - possibly because I never wrote it. I'm trying to mend my ways and send one in occasionally now.

Cavendish Gorge is a great place to be if you like spectacular falls, rushing water and boulder-hopping. We started out near the power station and followed trails along the bank and down into the Gorge itself, picking a lunch spot on the rocks downstream. The fast moving water has carved the rocks into interesting shapes, hollowed out holes and rounded the pebbles.

After lunch we explored the power station and hiked along the much calmer downstream portion of the river until we were halted by beavers, who have flooded a large area with their dams. We examined their carefully built dams and the many chewed trees, then it was off to see some man-made constructions. We visited an old mill building downstream where the giant wheels and pulleys can still be seen in the basement, tho the course of the river has been changed you can see where it once ran under the building to power the mill wheels.

The Cawoods came prepared with information about a lime kiln upstream, they took us to see the ruin of the chimney which still stands almost 20 feet high. It all made for an interesting day of hiking, history and beautiful scenery.

Appalachian Trail - Rt 11/30 South to Prospect Rock - August 12 by Sue Thomas

The weather was downright ugly on the morning of this hike, so I was pleasantly surprised by the turnout - 14 hikers altogether. It was especially nice to have Rob and Dylan Badger along. Longtime members will remember that Rob and Carolyn were active members before moving away years ago. Dylan was our youngest and most energetic participant, at age 5. This was his first long hike and he ran much of the seven miles, making the rest of us feel very decrepit!

It seemed to grow steadily darker and more gloomy as we went along, but the predicted thunderstorms never came, so we had a very enjoyable hike. We stopped for lunch at Spruce Peak Shelter, which I remember correctly was brand new the last time our Section visited it. It's held up very well, even has chairs on the porch and an intact picnic table, a rarity up in our area.

We lingered at Prospect Rock only long enough to watch Manchester completely disappear in the clouds below us (some of us think Manchester disappeared years ago with the coming of the outlet malls!) and made it back to our cars just in time to miss a rain shower.

Please send the articles soon after the hike. Deadline for the next issue is Friday October 13. Please send copy to Rob Carey, RR1 Box 340, Wallingford, VT 05773.

"Moonlight" On Pine Hill

September 8 1995

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

In hindsight, I should have billed this as a flashlight hike, not a moonlight hike. The overcast sky let only a little light through. At least we had some nice views of the city lights from Pine Hill.

From the end of Evergreen Avenue, we hiked up to the concrete hulk of the rock crusher and walked a little further to enjoy the view from the power line. We then followed one of the few remaining parts of the Pine Hill Park trail system through a ledgy area back to the road to Rocky Pond, which we reached in the dusk. Bernie pointed out sites from the time, about 40 years ago, when the beach at Rocky Pond was an official city swimming area. Some then used flashlights to follow a path to the end of Watkins Avenue. We then enjoyed a walk through the Pine Hill neighborhood back to our cars.

Appalachian Trail (Senior Shuffle #2)

September 24, 1995 by Roma Pulling

Conditions for this hike were superb - comfortable temperatures, blue skies and no bugs. Eight people (not all senior) met Alfred and me at the park, and another joined us in Sherburne. We welcomed two hikers from abroad who were on an extended world tour, one each from England and Wales.

When erroneous information was printed in the Herald as to the starting time, I went to the park at 9 AM and met two people who had relied on that information and encouraged them to return at the scheduled time of one PM. They did.

For this hike we spotted cars on River Road and returned to Route 100 by Kent Pond, where we started east on the Appalachian Trail. The trail was level or downhill with a few very gradual climbs. The beginning was very scenic as it curved around the pond. Where the trail joined Thundering Brook Road, four of the younger hikers decided to make the hike more of a challenge by walking back to the starting point. The rest of us followed the road to our cars and returned home.

by Herb Ogden, Jr.

The Juggernaut hiking trail used to lead from West Bridgewater (more precisely, South Sherburne) up the Falls Brook valley and then up onto the ridge between Bear Mountain and Killington Peak, ending at what is now Cooper Lodge. According to Forest and Crag, the excellent hiking history by Laura and Guy Waterman published in 1989, this trail dates back to the 1880s. The 1891 U. S. Geological Survey Rutland 15' quadrangle shows it in almost the same route as the 7' quad which replaced it in 1961 and later revisions. It evidently was poorly kept up after the Killington summit hotel (slightly downhill from Cooper Lodge and toward the spring) was abandoned. The Watermans write that "by 1913, when Woodstock money built what became known as the Juggernaut Trail from West Bridgewater, the trail-builders had to start from scratch, so little remained of the old trail from that side." Presumably this applied only uphill from the Juggernaut Farm, which was at the end of the public road 1.2 miles up from the present end of the maintained public road that branches south from the Hadley Hill Road in South Sherburne. See page 5

Delectable Mountain Road July 2 1995

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

On this hike, after years of trying, I finally joined the great tradition of Churchill Scott and Sue Thomas – I took a group of hikers where I had no intention of going. In other words, I got us lost. But I think I actually surpassed the achievements of Churchill and Sue, because I got us lost despite two scouting trips I took in the spring especially to prevent what happened from happening! After all, anybody can get lost where he's never been before, but it takes real talent to do it when you've been there just months before.

The start of our hike was at an unoccupied house on the Stony Brook Road in Stockbridge. Just north of it and a bridge over a tributary to Stony Brook, an old public road leaves the Stony Brook Road and follows the tributary up a valley that is at first little better than a ravine, soon crossing the tributary at a snowmobile bridge and climbing up its south side.

According to modern town road maps, the public road ends near the Barnard town line. From then on, we relied on the 1869 Beers Atlas of Windsor County, which showed a 1499 rod (4.0 mile) public road from the Stony Brook Road in Stockbridge over Delectable Mountain to the Chateaugay Road in Barnard. The 1966 U.S.G.S. Delectable Mountain quadrangle shows most of this road as a trail, except that it places it too far south between the 2180' elevation on the west side and the 2120' elevation on the east. There are old logging roads where the U.S.G.S. map shows a trail, but they do not provide a through route, as I learned in an April scouting trip.

Our first stop was an active log landing just over the Barnard line. Hidden in an island of vegetation lay a sizable cellarhole. The 1911 U.S.G.S. quad shows a house there.

Passing south of the cellarhole, we left the recent logging area and followed the old road to Perkins

Brook. Above the road was another cellarhole, which was on the 1869 map but not the 1911 one. We crossed the brook and headed south past another farm site and, at a height of land, found the cellarhole of the old Barnard School No. 2.

Just after we crossed another brook, the good path ended. The grassy woodroad headed south to another cellarhole northeast of Notown, but we had to head east up the valley on the overgrown old road in a dugway. Farther on, in places, only a slight grade showed this was once District No. 2's link to the rest of Barnard.

After inspecting a mysterious drymasonry structure about 60' north of the road, we forked sharp left to cross the brook. Then, in a brambly clearing, I turned left where I should have turned right uphill. After an unintentional and intensive exploration of various logging roads (several of which the Leader mistakenly identified as the old road) and a some pure bushwhacking, we came out in the Perkins Brook valley and had to follow a snowmobile trail back up to the old road about 0.1 mile west of the 2330' pass over Delectable Mountain.

Descending on the road, which was also a snowmobile trail, we noted a small cellarhole that does not show even on the 1869 map, passed through an enigmatic set of stone walls, and joined a woodroad that came in from the south. This shows on the U.S.G.S quad where the old road doesn't. Following an increasingly better road, we passed six more cellarholes before reaching our cars on the Chateaugay Road. By then, it was so late that I had to cancel a return hike that would have taken us past the long-abandoned little Chamberlin Cemetery and over the Smith Hill Road back to Stony Brook. We'll do that some early spring or late fall day when the leaves are off the trees and the weeds aren't waist-high, so we can visit the cellarholes and other sites without feeling like Dr. Livingstone – and so the Leader can find his way.

Raspberry Heaven August, 1995by Jerry Parker

The day before my hike there was a bad thunder and lighting storm. My power was out for 19 hours and my telephone was still out Sunday at 12:30 when I was getting ready to meet people at the park. I was surprised to have such a good turn out.

We parked at the beginning of a fire road in the Plymbsbury State Wildlife Management Area in Shrewsbury. First I lead 20 hikers, half of them children to the stone shelter. It was built back about 1935 by the CCC (Civilian Conservation Corps). Churchill Scott said it was built to house the caretaker of the ski area that was started on the ski of the Shrewsbury Peak, one of the first ski areas in Vermont.

After that we went back to the fire road. This summer has been so hot and dry the raspberry crop was poor at best. But thanks to the rain Saturday, this hike was very interesting.

As we started down the fire road it didn't take long before the kids, including myself, started catching toads and red efts. I also caught a garter snake. All the children got a good look at it as my niece Andrea held it.

Some might not approve of my hands on approach of getting children interested in hiking and the outdoors. I believe if you keep their minds off the walking part of hiking, children enjoy hiking and the outdoors. When I see Hannah Ogden, a little girl that does not like hiking at all. Seeing her get all excited because a toad was talking to her, I know I am right. I think if a child wants to hold a toad, snake or whatever, it's all right. If they just want to look, that is all right too.

We also saw all kinds of animal tracks, most of them in excellent condition. There was a doe and her fawn tracks, raccoon, coyote, bobcat, moose and partridge. At one point we saw some young partridge in a tree. I walked to about 5 yards away before they flew.

Shortly after was a ditch that had never dried up. We spent about 20 minutes there catching frogs. I caught 3 tadpoles in different stages of development to show everyone. A short hike farther was the logging header, the end of the trail.

The trip back was a little faster. To compensate for the lack of raspberries, I had brought a watermelon. This made a refreshing end to the hike.

Bald Mountain, Woodford July 29, 1995by Roma Pulling

If I had had a closer relationship with the weatherman, I would have ordered different weather for this hike. It occurred during our heat wave, and toward the end we were caught in a heavy shower. But everyone was a good sport; I heard no complaints.

Six people besides Alfred and me assembled at the park for the ride to Bennington and the start of this hike off Branch Street there. Our original plan had been to spot cars in Woodford at the eastern end of the Bald Mountain Trail, but on a dry run several weeks earlier we found a sign giving dire threats about towing and fines if anyone parked there, and unpleasant surprise since we had parked there overnight in 1989. This sign, by the way, was in a picture in the Herald when an elderly man disappeared in that area and a search was under way.

One goal of hikers on this trail is White Rocks, a lookout with a view of Bennington. We stopped there but then continued on to a junction with the West Ridge Trail, which leads north and east to Goddard Shelter on the Long Trail. As long as we had to retrace our steps to the cars, we turned back at the intersection.

As I had covered the eastern end of the Bald Mountain Trail on a previous hike, I had now completed another side trail. The ride home, with an ice cream break, was uneventful.

Dear Editor:

Trail maintainers should use great caution in implementing the new blazing standard of the Trails & Shelters Committee. It allows blazes on "clearly defined trails" to be as much as five minutes walk apart, thus as few as six blazes per mile assuming one hikes two miles per hour. It generally requires such infrequent blazing in federal Wilderness.

This standard is fine — if the hiker is experienced and attentive. Many LT users are neither, however. What may be a perfectly clear footway to a seasoned hiker can be confusing to the novice. Moreover, the new standard can be a hardship for even the experienced hiker. Some of us like to lose ourselves in contemplating nature, or in a conversation with a hiking partner, rather than constantly keep an eye out for the proposed one blaze in every five minutes that would reassure us we were still on the trail and not on a woodroad from which the trail had diverged. (Perhaps, to make matters worse, someone stole the arrow that marked the junction.) It used to be that, if we were in any doubt that we were still on the trail, we could just look for a blaze. If none appeared very soon, we would retrace our steps to the last one. Now, however, the last one may be as much as 1/6 mile back.

The new standard also unrealistically assumes that trail maintainers respond instantly to major blow-downs, but we don't always. In the meantime, consider what happens when a tall tree falls lengthwise along the trail, obscuring many feet of path with branches and foliage. I know from looking at the "herd paths" hikers make as they wander around looking for the trail that some of them have considerable trouble finding it again. The new standard will, on the average, provide no blazing at all at the blowdown, and not only novice hikers will curse the GMC as they tramp around looking for the unmarked trail.

Finally, the new standard makes no allowance for snow or leaves obscuring the path. To be sure, I don't advocate marking the trail so that, even in winter, one can always see the next blaze. To do that, we would have to allow for snow drifting against our summer blazes. We would often have to blaze so high that we could blaze only when we had a foot or two of snow to stand on. But I do advocate giving the winter hiker a decent chance at following the trail. Even now, for the experienced hiker who has become familiar with a trail in the summer, following it in winter is often difficult because the footway is buried and snow hides many blazes. Imagine what happens when there are only six blazes per mile to begin with, and several of them are hidden by snow.

In the Cooper Lodge register, I recently read an entry from an Appalachian Trail End-to-Enders who signed himself "Trudger": "I would like to say to the GMC how nice it is to be back on blazed trails after New Hampshire." Let's keep it that way.

Sincerely yours,

Herbert G. Ogden, Jr.

Scaling Lassen August 31, 1995 by Roma Pulling

Alfred and I were standing at the 10,000 foot level on Lassen Peak, looking back the way we had come to this point. The actual summit was a few hundred feet higher on top of a pile of boulders with no marked trail, and we felt we had gone far enough. Besides, it was a cold and windy spot, time was passing, and soon we began our descent.

What were we doing in this rather unlikely spot? We were on the second day of a two-week trip to California and parts of western Nevada and southern Oregon, during which we would visit such places as Crater Lake, Yosemite and Death Valley. Lassen is a volcano which erupted last in 1915.

Thermal activity is still visible in the area in the form of steam vents and mud pots.

We approached Lassen Volcanic National Park from the south after an overnight in Sparks, Nevada. Arriving at the foot of the mountain, we discovered several dozen children cavorting in the snow - an accumulation from past seasons. The trail to the mountain top beckoned. The lower sections were snowy, but most of the mountain was windswept. The approximately 3000-foot ascent was made easier by many switchbacks but was still strenuous for Easterners not accustomed to those heights. There were many climbers, and as we neared the bottom, others were just starting up.

We were pleased to have sampled California-style mountain climbing but perfectly content to return to home trails.

Mendon Peak October 15, 1995

by Mara Carey

On Sunday we went to Mendon Peak orienteering. First we went on a road for about a mile and a half. I noticed that there were several forks in the road. At the end of the road was a river and we crossed it. I didn't get my toes wet at all. Then we orienteered south to Mendon Peak. At 10:13 we stopped and sat on a rock for a snack. I had half of a Friehofer's chocolate cookie bar. It was good. After about two hours of bushwacking we started climbing through pines and it was steep. Seth, my little brother and I kept asking Mom and Dad when we were going to get to the top. They said soon.

When we stopped for lunch we heard some geese. We kept climbing and got to the top. It was sort of misty, but we saw some big birds. I thought that they were some geese, but they did not look at all like geese. Then Mom said "They're hawks!" They were hawks, migrating hawks, doing acrobatics. My toes were starting to get cold so we went back down through the pines and birches, across the stream and on the road. Seth ran on ahead.

When Mom, Dad and I got to our car (Izzy Isuzo) we couldn't find Seth. When we found him by walking back down the road he said he had gone onto one of the other roads, got confused and turned around. Then we went back to Izzy and home to have pizza.

I first became acquainted with the Juggernaut in 1965. I had finished my End-to-End the year before and felt I owed the Green Mountain Club's trails some work. I lived in Hartland then. The Ottauquechee Section was not formed until 1979, so I joined the Killington Section. I decided to tackle the Juggernaut because it was the closest Killington Section trail. I soon realized that the Killington Section had not paid much attention recently to its only trail on the east side of the Coolidge Range. It was faintly blazed and obviously used, but that was about all. The steep stretch up from the Falls Brook bridge was particularly bad. Luckily, my father had just retired from farming and volunteered to help me bring the Juggernaut up to snuff. That led to his becoming Killington Section Trails and Shelters Chairman, making all the signs for the Killington and New York Sections and the GMC's part of the Appalachian Trail, and then founding the Ascutney Trails Association, but that is another story.

By 1982, as reported in the April 1982 Smoke & Blazes, the upper part of the Juggernaut "was swallowed up by a new downhill ski area on Sherburne Corp.'s new Bear Mountain Area." This must have happened sometime after the spring of 1978, for an article in the March 1978 Smoke & Blazes tells of a good ski and snowshoe hike complete with a lunch stop at Ghost Camp, then consisting of two fallen-down sheds of the old logging camp. I had last hiked the Juggernaut in July 1980 and found parts obscured by ski trails and maintenance roads. The Timberlake Trail had disappeared. Smoke & Blazes doesn't say when the Juggernaut was formally abandoned. Does anyone know the date? It looks like the Juggernaut was abandoned a few years short of its centennial.

Abandoned – but not gone! It is still possible to follow almost the entire route of this old path. In August, I went up Hadley Hill Road from Route 4, took the switchback south, and was soon at the old trailhead. The first few hundred feet of the former trail is now a decent road to a new house, located north of the trail. There are still a few dark blue blazes left, and even a few light blue ones I probably painted at least 25 years ago. After the promising start, though, the trail is overgrown with saplings, badly eroded, and soon crossed at right angles by a woodroad that makes it hard to follow. It's hard to imagine this was passable even thirty years ago, but it was. My father and I once drove our VW pickup all the way to Falls Brook Bridge, albeit it with the help of some planks and rocks above the Juggernaut Farm site, which is where the public part of the road ended.

At elevation 1660', the old road disappears under the bouldery embankment of the Sunrise Ski Trail, which continues on down to the Northeast Passage Ski Lodge on Route 100 in West Bridgewater. Heading uphill, the Sunrise Trail generally follows the grade of the old Juggernaut to the Sunrise Village condominiums. Blazes are scarce because most of the blazed trees were felled when the wide ski trail replaced the narrow old Juggernaut Road.

The public Juggernaut Road ended roughly where the condos now stand. I found a cellarhole, probably that of the Juggernaut Farm, in a brushy area in the middle of the condo development. I also lost the old trail there, but I picked it up again before reaching the site of Ghost Camp, which is now on the Falls Brook Ski Trail. The remains of the tarpaper shacks can still be seen, bulldozed over the edge of the ski trail, if one knows just where to look. I saw no trace of the former Farm and Wilderness Camps' Timberlake Trail (once known as the Juggernaut Cutoff) however. This trail used to lead from the north end of the Woodward Reservoir in Plymouth northwest across the North and South Forks of Madden Brook and join the Juggernaut 250' east of Ghost Camp.

From Ghost Camp, which is 2.3 miles up, to the Falls Brook Bridge, which is 2.8 miles up, the Falls Brook Ski Trail follows the route of the old Juggernaut. Above the bridge, though, things get confusing. From the base station of the South Ridge Triple Chairlift, the expert Roundabout Ski Trail follows the old Juggernaut steeply uphill. The Roundabout is so narrow that several blue-blazed trees remain. After the Roundabout ends, the much wider Wanderer Ski Trail occupies the route of the old Juggernaut for a ways.

Now begins a long stretch that does not look a lot different from the old hiking trail, except that it crosses various aspects of ski development. Leaving the Wanderer, one climbs up a narrow path with an occasional blue blaze, crosses, then follows, Mountain Bicycle Trail 3, and comes out on the ridge between Skye Peak and Killington Peak. On the ridge, one eventually follows a short unmarked road from Trail 3 to Trail 4. Trail 4 follows the old Juggernaut until it diverges downhill where Killington's northeast flank is crossed by several ski trails and lifts. Between some of these cleared areas, the old trail has disappeared in brush. It is, however, very visible, and indeed cleared, from the last ski trail west to where it hits the Long Trail just north of Cooper Lodge, despite our efforts to discourage casual strolls to Cooper by people who may abuse that lodge. The LT follows it for a few feet and then heads straight for Cooper. As one can see from a nice LT North sign a little farther west on the old Juggernaut, the LT used to follow the Juggernaut just a bit further before heading up to Cooper. The final few feet of the old Juggernaut, which I don't think were ever LT, lead to the site of the Killington Hotel. There it used to connect with the Killington Carriage Road up from Brewers Corners on the Wheelerville Road in Mendon. Now it just ends in the brush about 50' east of the Bucklin Trail.

This may be anathema to some, but I found the hike pleasant although most of it was on ski trails, maintenance roads, or mountain bike trails. Except for a few stretches that the bikes have eroded, the footing is better than it was before. Then there are the views! It used to be the only views till one reached the old Killington Gondola were a few glimpses through the trees above the Falls Brook Bridge. The ski development has opened up many views. These include not only the nearby ski terrain (which I, for one, do not much enjoy except for the wildflowers that grow there), but also grand vistas over the hills eastward to Mt. Cardigan, Mt. Kearsarge, and the other New Hampshire peaks between them. Maybe, with Killington's cooperation, the old Juggernaut should be reopened, at least from Sunrise Village to the Killington Chairlift. From there, perhaps it should ascend directly to Killington Peak rather than provide too-easy access to Cooper Lodge. No trail clearing would be necessary, just blazing and signing. Killington could make it part of the Merrill Hiking Center trail network, simultaneously improving its recreational offerings and giving us back a little of our hiking heritage.

Please send the articles soon after the hike. Deadline for the next issue is Wednesday January 10, 1996. Please send copy to Rob Carey, RR1 Box 340, Wallingford, VT 05773.

We will need officers and Board members for the following positions; President, Vice President, Main Club Director, Trails & Shelters Coordinator. If you are interested in any of these exciting and challenging positions please let any Board member know. We will be happy to place your name on the ballot.

Lars Botzjorns and Greg Knoettner also attended the meeting. We learned that all of the land for the Rt. 140 relocation has been condemned. We hope to scout a new trail north of Rt. 140 and have the relocation work started in 3 years. It is hoped that the Forest Service can get the road to Gov. Clement Shelter gated. Some beams on the Clarendon Gorge Bridge have been replaced. More decking work and cribbing work is needed. More land has been bought for the Pico relocation, but the route has not been finalized.

I would like to thank Bernie and Martha for their hospitality.

Cold River Area Work Party November 4, 1995 by Rob Carey

There were two goals of this work party. One was to clear a minor re-route around the washout between the Cold River Roads. The other was to put in puncheon on some wet spots on the re-route and in the field just south of the Cold River Road.

Ruth Hare, Seth Carey and myself started working on the puncheons in the field, after a rather complicated transfer of materials in Rutland by Herb Ogden, Sue Carey and others. We were able to carry lumber across the field and build several puncheons by mid-morning.

It took us a while to get to the re-route, including a short, steep uphill. We carried in lumber for one puncheon, and built it at the worst wet spot. We were able to drain several wet spot by digging drainage ditches.

Later in the day we were joined by Mara and Sue Carey. We hope to complete this work in the spring, possibly the weekend of the GMC Annual Meeting.

Pico Camp Work Party October 29 1995

by Herb Ogden, Jr., Coleader

The weather was worse than forecast, and the forecast wasn't very good, so it was a pleasant surprise to see seven people turn on this outing. Actually, once we gained some altitude and the rain changed to snow, the woods were pretty and no one got very wet. On the way down, we could even enjoy good long-distance views once we got out of the cloud that enveloped Pico Peak.

With the kind permission of the Pico Ski Resort, we were able to drive up their service road almost to Pico Junction, where Sue Carey left out supplies. For a change, the rest of us rode up in comfort in a Blazer that handled the waterbars and mud very well.

From Pico Junction, we each carried something and no one had to make a second trip. Once we arrived at Pico Camp, two of the party opted to hike down to Sherburne Pass and the rest continued the work at the camp. We lag-screwed a 14' 2x6 across the front of the camp just under the windows, thus removing the forward bulge that had developed in this middle-aged camp. Then we installed a windowsill to prevent the rain and snow from getting inside the wall, repaired the inside windowsill, tightened up the top of the door, and installed six 7"x9" Lexan panes where glass was missing. We also tried with some success to route the spring flow across, rather than down, the LT. Planned roof repairs had to wait for better weather.

Six days before, on a beautiful Indian summer day, I had reblazed the Pico spur to the summit and cleaned out or created numerous waterbars on the LT between Pico Camp and Sherburne Pass. Rains just before had changed perhaps a quarter of it into a series of brooklets and even made the Sinkhole overflow! This stretch of the LT still needs much erosion control work, though it's not as bad as the first mile or so north of Cooper Lodge, where the LT often moonlights as a brook.

This work party was notable for the participation of my neighbor Channing Bickford, age 9. He is the youngest person to come on a work party without being taken by a parent in years as far as I know.

Shrewsbury Peak Shelter

November 5, 1995

by Roma Pulling, Leader

The last thing I would have let concern me the morning Alfred and I left for Shrewsbury Peak was icy roads; so of course that's what we encountered. After passing the old picnic pavilion site on the CCC Road, as we reached the bottom of a hill, we looked up and saw Sue Thomas's car crossways of the road. After maneuvering it to the side of the road and parking it, Sue got in our car, equipped with all-wheel drive, as did Pat Hannegan. Besides ice on the road, there was about an inch of snow on the ground.

Arriving at the start of the Black Swamp Road, which is now gated, we pared and began our hike up the Black Swamp Trail, which is at first level but becomes gradually steeper and rougher. The side trail to the Shrewsbury Peak Shelter is badly overgrown, and on a previous hike we bushwhacked in. But Sue knew where to find the trail, which was shorter and easier.

Alfred had packed dry wood in and soon had a cheery fire going, which we welcomed in what seemed like bitter cold temperatures although my thermometer showed 26°. It takes a while to get used to it! We got out hot dogs, rolls, ketchup, mustard and relish, to which Sue added potato chips, and we had a hearty lunch, then topped it off with toasted marshmallows. I was glad the return hike provided exercise. No one decided to hike the last 0.8 mile to the summit and back, leaving that for a warmer day, and better visibility.

As we walked out we had discussed various ways of rescuing Sue from her predicament, which ranged from simple to drastic (calling a tow truck). In the end it proved simpler than expected. With Alfred steering and the help of one of our hikers, Bob Piper, and a stranger who stopped and offered his assistance, Sue's car was turned around and eased down to level ground. Our return trip was made without further incident.

Wallingford Area Cross Country Ski

January 13 by Rob Carey

We had perfect snow conditions for this trip. In the weeks before there were several snowstorms of light, fluffy snow. We carpooled from Wallingford, taking only 4 wheel drive vehicles due to the fresh snow. There was almost a foot in the parking lot at Wallingford Pond.

We first went to one of the three lobes of the pond. We stayed off the ice. On a scouting trip there was just enough water to ice the bottoms of Seth's skis. Next we doubled back and took another trail (we hadn't been sure it was the right one at first) that started a loop. With Seth continuing in the lead we set a brisk pace. The loop went through an open area, and then joined another trail north. We passed a trail that leads to Aldrichville and the Long Trail. It looked nice but we saved it for another time. While we were out, we saw several people from Wallingford who had seen the article in the Herald.

Moonlight Meander January 6

The Editor has received an unofficial report that part of this trip was cold and dark (the moon was a late arrival) and part was cold and light.

Please send the articles soon after the hike. Deadline for the next issue is Wednesday April 17, 1996. Please send copy to Rob Carey, RR1 Box 340, Wallingford, VT 05773.

Killington Section Green Mountain Club

April 1996

Annual Meeting April 13, 1996 by Jean Davies, Secretary

President Sue Carey opened the meeting after the potluck supper. The Secretary's report was read and accepted with one correction: The mortgage on the GMC Waterbury headquarters should read $90,000 rather than $9,000 as was recorded. M/S/P Herb Ogden and Rob Carey

Roma Pulling, treasurer passed out a printout showing that the Killington Section's accounts were still in the black by a small margin. [The report is on file with the secretary]. Rob Carey moved to accept the report, Ray Catozzi seconded, passed.

Tim Welch gave a Trails and Shelters committee report. He had been able to do some maintenance work on the Pico and Bucklin Trails. Herb Ogden noted the need for new or repaired trail signs. The Kirk Fund can supply materials. Charlie Davies has a router that Ray Catozzi can use to make signs. Sue Carey reported for the southern part. After three years, permission was at last given in November to repair the washouts on the Cold River Road, but it was a poor time of year to do much. Hopefully a June 8th work party with the GMC in Wallingford can do more. The main club is supposed to take care of the Clarendon Bridge, but hadn't done much. They are apparently looking into a non-suspension type bridge. In the meantime boards will be replaced. Sue Carey is keeping an eye on the bridge. Boy Scouts and other groups are helping in various places on the Long Trail.

Rob Carey continues his work on Smoke and Blazes. He still hopes hike leaders will get their articles in promptly - right after hikes, even if they didn't go for some reason. Any reports sent to him on diskette are appreciated.

Linda Smith gave the report from the March meeting of the main club. She attended as the alternate director from the Killington Section. One 75 year old man and his son planned to hike end-to-end to raise $75,000 to go towards paying the mortgage on the Waterbury headquarters building. The main club hoped that each section might give $1,000 towards their building fund. The have and interest-free loan until October, and would like to pay it off before then to avoid interest charges. All sections which contribute $1,000 will have their name on a plaque. The subject of uniform dues was not mentioned.

Sue Carey gave the Presidents report. The Annual Meeting of the Green Mountain Club will be on June 8, Saturday, in South Wallingford. The Killington Section will host the meeting and needs volunteers to help. Usually 90 to 110 people attend.

The secretary read a thank you note from the Craigie S. Perkins family acknowledging a memorial gift from the Killington Section in his name.

I move to donate $1,000 to the Main Club to go towards the mortgage on their building. Motion by Herb Ogden, seconded by Phil Smith. Discussion followed. Rob Carey felt that sum was "a bit rich for our blood." He preferred to have our name on a shelter or trail. He also resented the feeling that his arm was being twisted by the main club. Phil Smith: The purpose of the $1,000 is to reduce the building deficit, therefore it's good to reduce it as quickly as possible. It might affect our dues.

Sue Carey: Our dues aren't supposed to go towards the building.

Herb Ogden: Probably paying off the mortgage would reduce the pressure to raise dues. We might want to remind the GMC that they said it would be relatively easy to raise money for the building.

Rob Carey: Now there is a concentration of resources in the northern end of the state.

Herb noted that our Board of Directors could vote to send the $1,000. Maryellen Zizis wondered if a token donation might be in order. The motion was defeated.

"I move the membership authorize the Board to make a donation of up to $1,000 to go towards paying the mortgage, depending on events." Motion by Herb Ogden, seconded by Rob Carey. Passed with a vote of 10 to 6.

Nominations: Larry Dodds, Ray Catozzi and Wally Rogers were up for election for the Board of Directors. However, Wally had resigned as he is in Madagascar.

Herb Ogden nominated by Rob Carey, seconded by Linda Smith. Ray Catozzi nominated by Roma Pulling, seconded by Al Pulling. Ruth Gibbud nominated by Herb Ogden, seconded by Janet Martin. All were voted in.

The membership meeting was recessed for the Directors Meeting (see below) and then reconvened to report the election of officers. There being no further business, the meeting was adjourned on motion by Rob Carey, seconded by Sue Carey

Directors Meeting April 13, 1996
by Jean Davies, Secretary

Nominations: Herb Ogden for President by Linda Smith, seconded by Roma Pulling, Phil Smith for Vice President by Jean Davies, seconded by Sue

Carey. Jean Davies for Secretary by Roma Pulling, seconded by Sue Carey. Roma Pulling for Treasurer by Ray Catozzi, seconded by Linda Smith. All were voted in.

Director and alternate director for the main club nominations: Phil Smith for Director by Sue Carey, seconded by Linda Smith. Linda Smith for alternate by Sue Carey, seconded by Ray Catozzi. So voted.

A discussion followed as to who might be willing to take on various tasks and responsibilities. Sue Carey planned to lead a work group to Clarendon Gorge. Sue Thomas will be asked about chairing the Trails and Shelter Committee as long as tools could be stored elsewhere. Linda Smith was willing to continue as Outings Chair. Rob Carey will continue with Smoke & Blazes. Publicity - Bernie Donahue has been trying to get items into the Rutland Herald. Ruth Gibbud and Rob Carey will work on getting news to other publications. "I move to adjourn the director's meeting." Motion by Jean Davies, seconded by Sue Carey. Passed

Pine Hill, Rutland February 11, 1996
by Roma Pulling, Leader

So you thought this was the date of the hike around Lefferts Pond in Chittenden? You're right. But your leaders know that Wildcat Road, where the pond is located, is in a different climate zone, and what fell as rain in Rutland was probably freezing rain or snow in Chittenden. So we made a last-minute change and decided to save Lefferts Pond for another hike schedule.

Alfred and I were joined at the park by Jerry Parker and Pat Hannegan. We breathed a sigh of relief to see Jerry and gladly turned over leadership responsibilities to him. Jerry is familiar with the various trails, some of which are not on the map, whereas with us it would be like the blind leading the blind.

This area was new to Pat: so we started by walking to the old stone crusher, in recent years a teen-age hangout but operated for about 20 years leading up to World War II to process rock used in construction of concrete highways. From there we walked to Rocky Pond and then Muddy Pond, where we saw a beaver lodge. We traversed other trails, finishing our hike on a branch between Watkins Avenue and the end of Evergreen Avenue, where we had parked our car. This trail was icy in spots whereas conditions throughout the park were generally good.

We spotted on other hiker and his dog, but most surprising, on the old auto road we met two young fellows on trail bikes! As there was two inches of soft snow on the ground, I thought walking was the better choice.

Thanks, Jerry, for your help. We couldn't have done it without you.

Deepfreeze in the Dark January 6 1996

by Herb Ogden, Leader

When I billed this as a Moonlight Cross Country Ski, I envisioned a leisurely ski in the dusk along the old Shrewsbury town road to Governor Clement Shelter, a long, convivial snack in front of a roaring fire in the shelter's big indoor fireplace, and a nice ski out in the light of the rising moon. As readers may note from the title, and as at least one hiker repeatedly noted at the time, it didn't work out that way.

The problem was the temperature, which had sunk into the teens below zero by the time we started. It gave the eight hikers and walkers a strong -- indeed, overpowering -- incentive to hurry along to keep warm. To be sure, I tried to slow us down some by getting the Saab stuck in a ditch while parking just off the Upper Cold River Road and trying to avoid backing over one of the group. Alas, even the diversion of hauling my car out of the ditch did not last long enough to delay our arrival at Governor Clement until the promised moon rose.

At Governor Clement, we tarried just long enough for a brief snack. No fire: we concluded we'd freeze before we could get one going. Since it wasn't getting any warmer, we marched or skied back very briskly. Consequently, we were almost all the way back to the cars by the time the moon rose. At least it was a pretty sight on the drive home.

Next time I'll have to start late enough so that we'll have moonlight no matter how fast we go. Apologies in the meantime!

Bingo Brook Ski Trip January 20 1996

by Herb Ogden, Leader

Although the weather was beautiful for this cross country ski trip, no one except the leader showed up for it. The January thaw and rain had eaten away most of the fine snow cover we had had since early December, and what remained was crusty. Up in Rochester and Hancock, Bingo Brook gets enough snow so the skiing would probably have been decent, at least with Blue Klister, but no one wanted to find out.

Pine Hill Top February 24, 1996

by Herb Ogden, Leader

The day of this excursion dawned miserable and rainy. One person called to ask if we were going anyway. I said I would go if anyone showed up but hoped no one would. No one did. I thank all those who didn't.

Pico Camp "Snowshoe" Hike March 30, 1996

by Herb Ogden, Leader

Only one other person showed up for this outing, but we had enough fun to go round for several more. The weather was clear and seasonable: cold and crusty for the morning ascent, but warmer and almost slushy on the afternoon descent. So many others had snowshoed up to Pico Camp that snowshoes were not needed; we rarely broke through the crust.

We thought we saw hare tracks and, above the first switchback, one moose track. Though the snow was only half a foot deep at Sherburne Pass, there was around three feet at Pico Camp, where we lunched after a two hour ascent. The camp was in fine shape except that the roofing sheet that had pulled back still needs fixing. Despite this winter's high winds, there were only one large blowdown and a few small ones. A fine outing!

Please send the articles soon after the hike. Deadline for the next issue is Monday July 15, 1996. Please send copy to Rob Carey, RR1 Box 340, Wallingford, VT 05773.

Lefferts Loop May 18, 1996

by Roma Pulling, Leader

After postponing our Lefferts Pond hike in February because of wintry driving conditions, Alfred and I decided on this date in May. It proved to be a good choice. Although it was mostly cloudy, it was dry and warm. Six other hikers met us at the park at 1PM and we were off.

From Wild Cat Road we parked our cars where the road to Lefferts Pond is gated. It's possible to drive a short distance on this road to a recreation area near the dam, but the road is rough and we chose to walk. Beyond the first dam is a second, where the waters of Chittenden Reservoir can be seen to the west. In this area Central Vermont Public Service Corporation used to maintain a vacation cottage. Only the chimney now remains.

From this point the road continues north some distance out of sight of the pond, and they swings east and south until the pond is again visible to the west. We had expected this part of the road to be churned into mud up to our ankles due to recent rains and logging activities, but it was surprisingly dry and the walking easy.

Although this outing had not been listed as a wildflower hike, we found many lovely ones: red and painted trilliums, spring beauties, dog tooth violets, purple and white violets, Dutchman's breeches, wild oats and gold thread. One painted trillium, in spite of its name, had four leaves and four petals. We dubbed it a quadrillium. This was the second time I had seen this variation. The elusive moose which has been spotted at the pond did not put in an appearance.

The logging road connects with Wild Cat Road east of where our cars were parked, and we followed it back to our starting point.

Mystery Hike July 27, 1996 by Jean Davies

Mystery Hike up Beaver Pond trail in the Chittenden Brook Campground.

Eight of us met by the fire station to car pool over Brandon Gap to the Chittenden Brook Campground. Leaving our cars we hiked up the 2.3 miles of dirt road to the camp sites. Picking up the Beaver Pond Trail there, we had a fine hike along the brook. Surprisingly, we weren't bothered by bugs.

We ate lunch at the pond while watching an aerial display by cedar waxwings catching insects on the wing. They missed some, since we did need some bug repellent here. While some of the group were pleased to discover moose tracks at the pond, they were equally pleased not to see the owner. Neither did we see any beaver - just their excellent dam.

Our return route went parallel to the road on a pleasant trail through the woods near the brook. We counted the blowdowns on this trail as suggested by one of the Forest Rangers who told us that their staff has been reduced to three, so they haven't had time to walk all the trails, much less work on them. Our part of trail maintenance, therefore, consisted of a phone call rather than saws/shovel work - a much easier method. Correction: Sue Thomas did do some trail work, hacking down enough nettles on the trail to make hiking easier for those of us in shorts.

Even though some trail work is needed, it is easily passable. This is a very pleasant hike, even on hot days.

Abandoned Barnard May 4, 1996 by Herb Ogden Jr. Leader

This outing took us to an area of Barnard which began to be abandoned earlier than most of mid-Vermont's hill farm areas, probably because it suffered from a combination of unusual remoteness and a short growing season caused by high elevation. The Leader is no expert on soils, but maybe fertility was a factor also.

Leaving the road from Barnard to Chateaugay in the upper valley of Locust Creek, we headed up Delectable Mountain on an abandoned public road. This used to lead over the mountain to Barnard School District No. 2 and on down to the Stony Brook road north of Notown, in Stockbridge, and it is shown on the 1869 Atlas of Windsor County, by F. W. Beers. We passed four old cellarholes on the north and a couple on the south. Only two still show on the 1869 atlas and the U.S. Geological Survey's first quadrangle of 1911. More surprisingly, even the oldest map, from 1856, does not show all of them.

Maybe some of the farms were abandoned in 1816 ("Eighteen Hundred and Froze to Death") and had fallen down by 1856. Apparently District No. 2 was cut off from the rest of Barnard by 1911, because the 1911 map shows only a dead end road leading up from Stony Brook to School No. 2 on the west side of Delectable Mountain and another up from Locust Creek dead-ending at the one farm left on the east side of the mountain. As participants in a 1995 hike know, and as the Leader rues, the old road is obscure where it crosses Delectable Mountain in a 2320' pass.

At a clearing just under the 2000' elevation, opposite an old school bus once used as a camp, we turned just about due north from the old road, following a woodroad that is now a snowmobile trail. After a little climb, we passed west of a sizable cellarhole, probably the one the 1856 map shows as "J. Tully" and the 1869 map shows as C.C. Simmons." From there on the path became so steep we assumed that Tully and Simmons would not have used it much for wheeled traffic, preferring the road we had followed in. Enormous hoofprints showed moose had used it recently, though.

Around 2240' we crossed an east-west ridge. The present U.S.G.S. quadrangle shows a trail leading northeast from there, but we saw no sign of one, even though the trees were not leafed out at all. Descending gently, we saw our first sign of civilization since the Tully or Simmons place: a short stone wall east of the road, leading from nowhere to nowhere. Immediately crossing a stream at 2050', we passed just west of the highest cellarhole on the trip. The 1869 atlas shows it as the "C. Hathan" place, at the end of a poor road off the Smith Hill Road. It did not lie in the Smith Hill school district, however, but rather in the district whose school stood near where our hike began. If Hathan had children, they must have had a very backwoods walk to school indeed.

At about 1900', maybe 300' north of another stream, lay the sizable remains of what was the A. Aikens place in 1869. Neither this nor the Hathan place show on the 1856 map, thus casting some doubt on my idea that the highest farms were abandoned first. Here, we turned almost due east on a road that no map shows, walking through an almost flat area. After we crossed a stream, stone walls reappeared, and soon we passed just north of a cellarhole shown on no map. Descending easterly, we soon found ourselves just north of a second cellarhole. The 1856 map appears to show this as the H. Chamberlin place but does not show the road to it. The 1869 map shows neither the place nor any road to it. The 1911 map shows both. A history of Barnard published around 1930 calls this the Lemuel Chamberlin farm. Jerry Parker pointed out plaster and lath, so the place must have stood till fairly recently. Maybe whoever owned the place in 1869 was an unfriendly recluse whom the Beers Atlas surveyor eschewed.

The Chamberlin Cemetery was the last highlight of the hike. It lies about 300' south of the Chamberlin foundation, next to a north-south stone wall, at the edge of a deep ravine. The Vermont Old Cemeteries Association says there are four marked but unfenced graves. We found only three: an old couple and apparently a child. Sue Thomas was equipped to take a rubbing so we could read the child's inscription, but rain was falling by then, so we never did read it. At least we did better than the last hike that was supposed to reach this cemetery, which, thanks to this Leader, did not come within a mile of it.

After a short dip in the old road, we reached a modern home at the end of a barely passable road, with a nice view south over a man-made pond. We tramped down the road in the rain, passing a single very recent memorial stone, reached the Chateaugay Road again, and walked south to the car. Mild weather, a little sun, and a lot of history made this a nice outing despite the rain at the end.

Lowland Walk-through June 1, 1996

by Herb Ogden Jr. Leader

Eight people turned out on a beautiful day to ready the southern part of our section of the Long Trail for the hiking season. After much milling around and trying to figure out how to get people to the trail with the minimum of driving, we finally formed three groups. One handled the trail from Wallingford Gulf (Vt. 140) to Minerva Hinchey Shelter, one did from Minerva Hinchey to Vt. 103, one did from Vt. 103 to the Lottery Road, and Jerry Parker got rid of all the larger blowdowns from Wallingford Gulf to Vt. 103. The southernmost 7.2 miles of our section is now in excellent shape, except for missing trail signs and a few wet places, notably near Spring Lake and south of the Lottery Road.

Rutland Herald reporter Kristin Bloomer helped not only by clearing some trail but also by writing a fine article about the GMC and the Long Trail. It was complete with a silhouetted photo of the Leader, pick-mattock and saw in hand, surveying the view from Clarendon Lookout. Many thanks to Kristin and the Herald!

At Clarendon Shelter, we were happy to see that shelter adopter Max Carleton had the place in good shape and had reopened and glazed the back window, shedding more light on the table and reducing the cave effect. He even built a sheltered box to keep wood dry outside the shelter. A family was about to spend the night there and enjoy the fruits of Max's labor.

This day's work party covered only a total of 7.2 miles out of the 12.1 we meant to cover. The remaining 4.9 miles from the Lottery Road to Governor Clement Shelter went begging that day. Moral: WE NEED MORE HELP! If you're an able-bodied Section member who hasn't done anything for the Section but pay dues – which are much less than At-Large dues – please help the Section earn the dues discount it receives for maintaining a section of the Long Trail.

Annual Meeting Work Party June 9, 1996

by Herb Ogden Jr.

On the day after the Killington Section hosted the GMC Annual Meeting in South Wallingford, several Section members and others showed up to reroute the Long Trail at a bank cave-in overlooking a branch of the Cold River between the Lower and Upper Roads in Shrewsbury. Once the group discarded the bog-besotted plans of the U.S. Forest Service and GMC Headquarters and relocated the relocation to terra firma, the work went smoothly. The trail is now safely back from the edge of the abyss. The group also installed some needed puncheon south of the Upper Road.

On this day and later, a couple of informal work parties cleared and brushed the trail all the way between the Lower and Upper Cold River Roads and did some drainage south of the latter.

Of the lowland part of our section, that leaves only the stretches from the Lottery Road to the Lower Cold River Road and from the Upper Cold River Road to Gov. Clement Shelter not accounted for.

Pine Hill, Rocky Pond, Muddy Pond

June 15, 1996 by Herb Ogden Jr. Co-Leader

This outing was planned and co-led by Channing Bickford, our youngest Junior Member. I forgot to nab him to write this article before he left for camp, so this is an abbreviated account.

Eight members and guests started into the City of Rutland's Pine Hill Park the usual way, from Evergreen Avenue. Soon, however, we turned to the right off the road to Rocky Pond and went under the power line to the World War Two era stone crusher. After admiring the view south to White Rocks, we started up the old white-blazed trail just south of the stone crusher, but then turned off to the right and, after a short climb, emerged on the rim of the stone quarry. And there was the view Channing had told about: a fine panorama of Rutland and, behind it, the Coolidge Range. This is the best view I know of from Pine Hill.

We then did a very short bushwhack to rejoin the white-blazed trail, which led up to the Rocky Pond road. Older hikers told the younger ones about the days when the city maintained a bathing beach at Rocky Pond, complete with parking lot and changing cabins. The pond seemed unusually full. There was probably some connection with the beaver lodge we saw near the east end.

From Rocky Pond, we followed the woodroad past old fireplace sites to a junction above Muddy Pond. The left fork eventually leads to Proctor; we took the right. After descending to the shore of Muddy Pond for a view of that actually very pretty place, we crossed its outlet with some difficulty and hiked down the woodroad to the power line crossing above the country club. There, we faced our greatest challenge: re-crossing the Muddy Pond outlet brook and negotiating the muddy mess beyond. Fortunately, we found some things to use as stepping stones, including part of an abandoned ATV. After a hike up a skooshy track, we were back at the stone crusher and near the end of a good outing.

Parkers Gore Work Party June 30, 1996

by Herb Ogden Jr. Leader

Only four people showed up for this one, but that was just enough to get the job done on the Long Trail between Gov. Clement Shelter and Shrewsbury Peak Jct. Jerry Parker with chainsaw and clippers, Dave Gilmore with new heavy-duty bypass loppers, Eric Deutschbein with new (at it turned out, not-so) heavy-duty anvil loppers, and I with bow saw and axe got the whole three mile stretch properly brushed out and cleared of blowdowns for the first time in at least ten years. The Section had done a decent job with most of the stretch before, but the mile or so south of Shrewsbury Peak Jct., being the most remote, always eluded us and never got a proper brushing out. We didn't fix the wet spots near Government Brook, but they are at least tolerable.

We were delighted by the fine work that shelter adopter Roy Arthur had recently done at Gov. Clement Shelter. He gave it a whole new roof, new rafters, new pillars in front, and a couple of rustic benches, too. Hikers who had spent a rainy night there reported no leaks. Since hats are no longer needed indoors to keep the rain off our heads, hats off to Roy for a beautiful job!

The whole day was foggy at best and rainy at worst, but we all concluded it probably was more comfortable than if it had been hot and sunny. As it was, we stayed reasonably cool and encountered absolutely no bugs. The next time a walk-through is scheduled and it looks like rain, come anyway -- you may enjoy it!

About a dozen hikers passed us, most headed north. At least one was on his way from Georgia to Maine on the Appalachian Trail. Several thanked us for our work.

The Few and the Muddy Sept. 14, 1996 by Herb Ogden, Jr., Leader

The turnout for this work party was disappointingly small, but its accomplishments were not. Killington Section members Herb Ogden, Mark Pettrone, Al Pulling, and Bill Robichaud (listed in order of alphabet, not of accomplishment) were joined by GMC Director of Field Programs Lars Botzjorns and GMC Coolidge RangeCaretaker Melissa Smith for a day of work on about a half mile of the Long Trail north of Cooper Lodge. Thanks to the Killington Ski Resort, which again let us use the Killington Chairlift free of charge, we rode up and down in comfort and could spend almost all our time at work rather than traveling to work.

As far as I know, this part of the trail had seen no real drainage work for at least the last ten years, and it showed. What few waterbars we found were totally silted up, and little brooks made the trail a Footbath in the Wilderness. We dug ditches and built rock waterbars to persuade most of these brooks to flow across the trail rather than down it. To build one waterbar, we had to move a huge rock that three men had trouble handling. We also became immersed in our work, hence the title of this article.

Appalachian Trail, Hanover Sept. 28, 1996 by Roma Pulling

A popular conception of a trail is a foot path through a roadless area, and this is often true. But the Appalachian Trail is sometimes blazed along a roadway or even through the center of town. This technique is demonstrated in Hanover, where after crossing the Connecticut River over the bridge connecting it with Norwich, the trail follows West

Wheelock Street up a gradual rise, rounds a corner past the Hanover Inn, parallels North Main Street, turns left on Lebanon Street and finally enters the woods after skirting an athletic field.

We had left Rutland with four other hikers who met us at the park, took a wrong turn when reaching Norwich and executed a complete circle before leaving one car in a turnout on the New Hampshire side of the bridge. We took another car and left it in a parking area at the other end of our route on East Wheelock Street and returned to the bridge to start hiking.

We had hoped to stop for lunch at Velvet Rocks Shelter and turned off on the loop trail supposedly leading there, but after several minutes of fruitless searching we admitted we weren't going to be able to find it and settled down near Ledyard Spring to eat. At this point one hiker had to leave us to keep a commitment.

From the spring the trail ascends very steeply over a knob, crosses ledges and follows a logging road before crossing through a swamp on an elevated path and bridge. The last of our route was a straightaway through a very scenic stand of evergreens.

The weather was cloudy when we left Rutland. A few rays of sun shone through on the drive to our trailhead, but during our hike it was cloudy and threatening. Our luck held, and no rain fell until we were in our cars and headed home. On the wooded par of the trail we met three other hikers.

Deadline for the next issue is January 2. Send to Rob Carey; RR1 Box 340; Wallingford VT 05773.

Irene May Hawley

November 3, 1911 - July 31, 1996

Dedicated homemaker, devoted wife, caring mother, helpful neighbor and kind friend. Irene was all of these, and to us in the Killington Section she was a longtime member, enthusiastic hiker and hard-working volunteer with our Circulation Committee. When she passed away last summer after being ill in the hospital for ten days, she left a void that will be difficult to fill.

Irene is survived by her husband, Ira, also a Killington Section member and leader of many popular hikes; her daughter Lorraine, Killington Section member and Circulation Committee volunteer; a daughter Sharon, an occasional hiker; a son, Norman, three grandchildren and three great grandchildren. A daughter Lucinda passed away in 1961. Granddaughter Charlene McGill is, along with her husband, Chuck, also a Killington Section member.

We will miss you, Irene. [Editor's note - This obituary was provided by Roma Pulling.]

Please send the articles soon after the hike. Deadline for the next issue is April 20, 1997. Many articles were received after the deadline for this issue. Some have been included. The rest will be in the next issue. Please send copy to Rob Carey, RR1 Box 340, Wallingford, VT 05773.

Third Annual Senior Shuffle

November 3, 1996

by Roma Pulling, Leader

For our third senior outing, we chose to walk to Big Branch Shelter in Mount Tabor. The route over the Long Trail is rough but only 1.2 miles, and we consider it one of the prettier spots in this area.

Nine people and one dog met us at the park at 1 p.m. Driving south on Rt. 7 and picking up FS #10 in Mt. Tabor, we were soon in the Big Branch parking area. As we made our way in a leisurely manner down the trail on this mostly cloudy day, Alfred disappeared and when we reached the shelter, he already had the fire going. With the temperature hovering near freezing, relaxing by the fire seemed like a great idea. But Ray led a few more adventurous souls on an exploratory trip, showing them the foundation of an old water wheel from the days when this area was an active community, and walked as far as the suspension bridge.

When the hikers returned, we were roasting marshmallows over the fire and invited them to join us. Some people hadn't enjoyed a marshmallow roast for a long time, and one gentleman was trying his first toasted marshmallow! Everyone seemed to enjoy the trip.

See you on next year's Senior Shuffle!

Dues are Due

The Killington Section collects dues on a Calendar Year basis. Accordingly, everyone's membership needs to be renewed by sending your 1997 dues to our treasurer Roma Pulling. The membership application is included in this issue.

7th Annual Taconic Mountain Ramble

by Kit Davidson, Leader

Well ... turnout for this one proved to be a touch unnerving. We have an old friend who writes a Weekend Events column for the Rutland Herald. On August 9 she chose to do a lyric piece about the upcoming Ramble. The result (depending on whose count you took) from 86 to 104 contenders, all eager to conquer the heights.

Not all, it turned out could. But 21 stalwart souls actually finished the whole thing, right the way up to Zion Major. The rest wilted onto the front lawn at widely spaced intervals, receiving succor in the form of wine and cheese.

Anyway, come on out for next year's Ramble. No more big-time publicity anticipated, and so no more mob scenes.

[Editors Note - Either of the above counts give this event the attendance record. The editor believes the previous record was about 50 on a hike Churchill Scott lead to the Bridgewater Gold Mines.]

Herbert G. Ogden Sr.

by Churchill Scott

It is with a great deal of sorrow and sadness we learned of the recent passing of Mr. Ogden Sr. The Killington Section has been indebted to him for many improvement projects beginning in the late 1960's.

First there was the Carry-In, Carry-Out policy for shelter dumps and his organization of groups to eliminate the existing dumps. Next he spent many hours making routed trail signs. Later he replaced the entire system of bunks, repaired chimneys and roofs.

Along in the mid 60's our section was a rather loose-knit group but Mr. Ogden worked long and hard to hammer out a set of By-Laws for the Section, which helped so very much. In addition to all this, along with Herb Ogden Jr., he was able to reopen the Ascutney Trails Association's system of trails plus construct a shelter on the Windsor Trail.

The Killington Section of the Green Mountain Club wants to express the deepest sympathy to the Herbert G. Ogden family at this time.

Two More Sad Farewells

by Roma Pulling

Ben Rolston and Wilbur Weston were both former Killington Section members and made valuable contributions to section activities during their time here.

Besides his work on our trails, Ben was president of the Main Club, and the editor of the 18th, 19th, and 20th editions of the Guide Book of the Long Trail. In recent years he worked summers as ranger at Wilgus State Park in Ascutney and spent his winters in Mission, Texas. He passed away recently at his Texas home.

Several locations on the trail provide reminders of Ben; Rolston Rest Shelter, built by the Long Trail Patrol in 1966, is a little over 5 miles north of Rt. 4 in Sherburne. Ben's Balcony is a lookout just north of Sherburne Pass on the Appalachian Trail. And a favorite swimming hole in Mt. Tabor has for years been known as Ben's Bath Tub.

"Wes" Weston was a leader of popular hikes and an energetic worker on our trails and shelters. In his later years he lived in North Carolina and died there last fall. He had not been a KS member recently, but kept in touch with friends in this area.

In leaving the Rutland area, each of these men left a void not easily filled.

Section Directors Meet Jan. 9, 1997by Herb Ogden Jr., President

This is compiled from minutes by Acting Secretary Sue Thomas and from my notes. It's not official, but I think it's accurate.

Section Directors Ray Catozzi, Herb Ogden, Roma Pulling, Linda Smith, Phil Smith and Sue Thomas met at the Ogden home from 7:30 until 9:45 p.m. Directors Sue Carey and Ruth Gibbud missed the meeting because of conflicting appointments, and Secretary Jean Davies missed it because of illness. GMC Director of Field Programs Lars Botzjoorns attended most of the meeting at Herb's invitation.

Minutes of the 4 June Directors Meeting were approved.

The Section brochure that Sue Thomas and Jean Davies are preparing will be distributed to chambers of commerce, sporting stores, the U.S. Forest Service, libraries, motels, the Godnick Senior Center, and the Diamond Run Mall, among others. It will be sent to those inquiring about membership or joining for the first time. Copies will be kept with the hike register to give to those interested in joining. Sue Thomas will get prices for printing. Orders will be at the discretion of Treasurer Roma Pulling.

Sue and Jean are also preparing suggestions for hike leaders, since the last minutes said they were. (Herb was really supposed to do this but gladly yielded.)

As Trails and Shelters Co-Chair, Herb will see that shields are bought for all saws and axes, as well as two more first aid kits. The latter are primarily for work parties.

Herb called the U.S. Forest Service about moving the outing meeting place to its parking lot on North Main Street in Rutland, but got no answer. He will try again.

Jean and Phil have made no progress on setting up programs at the Fox Room of the Rutland Free Library.

Phil reported on the meetings of GMC Directors, where he represents the Section, and on a $80,000 donation to the GMC from a donor whose name, but not motivation, are known to the GMC.

Directors discussed the GMC Membership Committee's proposal for uniform dues, which will probably have been voted on by the time these minutes are published in Smoke & Blazes. Directors again voted to oppose uniform dues, preferring lower dues for Section members than for At-Large. Directors also voted unanimously in favor of adding to the GMC Bylaws a provision that gave a substantial discount to members over 65 years old. (At-Large members can receive a senior discount, but the Directors could change this any time because it is not in the Bylaws.)

Lars Botzjoorns described possible trail and shelter changes. Unless an exception is made to easement standards (it sometimes can be), the Bucklin Trail will have to be moved, at least where it is the same route as a logging road. Directors preferred to keep it where it is. Lars's present preference is to follow precisely or roughly the route of the Killington Carriage Road once it reaches the ridge south of Brewers Brook. Question is how to get there from Brewers Corners while staying on state land. Herb said the original proposal of slabbing that ridge was impractical because of numerous seeps and urged Directors to scout around.

Pico Camp will have to be demolished or moved because the Killington-Pico Interconnect ski trail is to go where it is. State law prohibits an overnight site in the Rutland City watershed. Killington's new management is open to using a helicopter to move it or contributing to build a replacement, as Herb found out at a recent meeting between the U.S. Forest Service, Vermont Dept. of Forest Parks & Recreation, American Skiing Co. (Killington and Pico), GMC, and Appalachian Trail Conference.

Directors voted to move Pico Camp to the southwest, just outside the city watershed.

The cow pasture south of the Lottery Road needs a gate. Herb will see if Jerry Parker will handle this.

Directors approved the GMC's trying to get permission to put a gate on the Governor Clement Road at the second brook crossing.

Directors voted to disclaim any responsibility of the Section for Tucker-Johnson Shelter. It is not on the part of the Long Trail we maintain. The old Tucker Lodge, south of Willard Gap, was on the LT as long as the LT went west of Deer Leap Mountain, and the Section used to maintain the LT as far north as Willard Gap. That is probably why we have maintained Tucker-Johnson until now.

Lars Botzjorns passed along a GMC request that the Section increase its present $500 per year contribution to support the Coolidge Range Caretaker. Because the GMC's Business Manager left on fairly short notice, the GMC has not billed the Section for the 1996 contribution yet. After some discussion, Directors voted to contribute a total of $1,000 in 1997 ($500 for 1996 when the bill arrives, and $500 for 1997), to the extent this can be done with income from the Kirk Fund.

Lars described the process by which the U.S. Forest Service is revising the Forest Plan and collected Directors' suggestions for elements to keep or improve.

Ray reported he had visited Mary Perkins, who is 93, at Eden Park Nursing Home. She is no longer a Section member. Directors voted unanimously to grant her an honorary life membership in the Section.

Letter from Herb Ogden to Section Presidents

12 January 1997

Dear GMC member:

I am sending you this because you appear on the last list of Directors, Section Presidents, and Executive Committee that I received from Waterbury Center. Unfortunately, it appears to be a little outdated. If you no longer hold one of the above positions, could you please pass this on to whoever replaced you, so that person can read it before the Directors' Meeting on 18 January?

This letter has three purposes. First, to tell you the Killington Section continues to support a two-tier dues structure: one level of dues (At-Large) for those members who do not want to assume the obligation to do some sort of work for the GMC, and a significantly lower level of dues (Section) for those who do. See my enclosed memo on Organizational Review and Len Carpenter's enclosed 26 November 1996 memo on dues. At a meeting last week, the Killington Section's Board of Directors therefore continued to oppose the proposal to establish uniform dues. We hope you will join us in opposing the proposal. We hope you join in continuing a membership structure that has worked well for almost ninety years, fostering autonomy and initiative among groups of GMC members who do not require constant oversight by professional trail managers.

The second purpose of this letter is to make you aware of how the central GMC leadership has wittingly or unwittingly hindered the Sections' legitimate effort to gain members. Please see my enclosed 19 August 1996 letter to President Paul Hannan -- to which I have received no written response. (When I reminded him of this at a meeting, he did say I had a point but there was no conspiracy.) Furthermore, I have heard from at least three new GMC members who live around here that, when they told the Waterbury Center staffer who answered the phone that they wanted to join a local group if there was one, they were given no information. One of them did manage to get signed up for the Killington Section, but only after specifically identifying it and insisting on being signed up for it rather than for At-Large membership. Of course, At-Large members yield much more revenue for Waterbury Center than Section members do, but this is no excuse for Waterbury Center to discourage people from joining Sections.

The third purpose of this letter is to suggest adoption of a By-Law that would guarantee a discount for members over age 65 and under age 18. Particularly if uniform dues are imposed at the level in the Membership Committee's motion, the burden of the increase will fall especially hard on these age groups because they usually have low or fixed incomes. Like others, the Killington Section has a number of elderly members who have devoted hundreds of hours to Green Mountain Club work. Now some of them can do little or nothing to help out any more, but they would like to receive GMC publications and continue the Club affiliation they have enjoyed for years. By a unanimous vote of its Board of Directors last week, the Killington Section endorsed the senior discount.

This issue is particularly important if uniform dues are imposed. So far, the Killington Section has been able to protect senior and junior members by limiting their dues to $12 and $6 respectively. By comparison, regular individual dues are $18. (The Membership Committee's $21 figure is wrong.) Our Section has subsidized junior and senior members, for good reason. Especially if you vote to abolish our ability to protect these members, we hope you will at least vote to change the By-Laws to give them lasting protection and show the GMC recognizes economic reality.

Thank you for your consideration.

Pico on Snowshoes (Mostly) Dec. 14, 1996 by Herb Ogden, Leader

This was a beautiful snowshoe hike on a day of rotten weather. How do I explain that? Easy: the weather was rotten (cold and drizzly) only below Sherburne Pass. Above it, light snow was falling. The trees shone with an old coat of ice, on top of which a dusting of new snow had fallen. The woods were beautiful, and, once we left Sherburne Pass, the only sound was the swish of snowflakes. The only fresh wild animal tracks we saw came from one partridge, though we startled another up near Pico Camp. The camp was in good shape, though listing somewhat to the east. We'll have to fix that, and clear the one sizable blowdown north of the Sinkhole, next spring, assuming the Pico-Killington fusion spares those parts of the trail.

We were amazed to encounter three people hiking up the LT with snowboards to get on the Pico ski run at Pico Junction. Because Pico was closed, they had the place to themselves, except for two others we met with a sort of roll-up toboggan, also headed for the same launching place.

Why did I say this hike was mostly on snowshoes? Two reasons: first, there wasn't enough snow for the first mile or so to warrant putting them on, especially since a lone skier had broken a trail. Second, fully half the participants in this outing had trouble keeping their new high-tech bindings on their boots. That wasn't such a catastrophe, though, since the total outing roster numbered two -- the same as on my last snowshoe outing up Pico. Where were the rest of you on this beautiful day?

Killington Section Green Mountain Club

April 1997

Killington Section Annual Meeting

April 27, 1997

by Jean Davies, Secretary

President Herb Ogden opened the meeting after the potluck supper. The Secretary's report was read and accepted. m/s/p Ray Catozzi/Al Pulling.

Roma Pulling, treasurer, passed out a printout. She had to take $200 from savings to pay the Main Club assessment, and took money from the CD to beef up the savings. She explained the Kirk Fund, a $10,000 Trust set up by Dorothy Kirk in memory of her husband. The interest from it can be used for trail maintenance. The report was accepted, and Roma was applauded for her fine work for six years as treasurer.

Rob Carey still would like hike leaders to get their articles in promptly for Smoke & Blazes, right after hikes- even if they didn't go for some reason. It is especially important to get the news out before the date of the first hike of a new hike schedule. Any reports sent to Rob on diskette are appreciated. Rob's work on the Smoke & Blazes was applauded. Herb said that our newsletter was one of the best among the Sections.

Herb Ogden gave the trails report. He claimed that Jerry Parker did most of the physical work while Herb did paper work. The Pico shelter needs jacking up. Trail re-locations near it are unsettled, making the future of this shelter uncertain, but jacking it up seems a logical temporary step. A gate is needed on the trail to Clarendon Shelter. This shelter is on land that does not belong to the government, and therefore it may need to be moved eventually. It is approximately 1/10th of a mile off.

All Pulling wondered if there was any chance of buying the land. Herb planned to investigate that.

The GMC Section President's meeting is scheduled for Saturday. Herb called for interested persons who might like to go with him.

The GMC Annual Meeting in Wallingford went well, thanks to the work of Rob and Sue Carey and Sue Thomas.

Bernie Donahue puts the hike notices in the Rutland Herald.

Old Business:

Motion - Members of the Killington Section express their dismay at the adoption of the uniform dues policy (i.e. Section elimination policy). We ask the GMC Board of Directors reconsider that policy. We view the continuation of vibrant Sections as questionable under the current policy. m/s/p Rob Carey/Al Pulling.

Main Club proposed dues are $27 for adults; $35 for families. A $7 discount is available to some. It was noted by Herb that the other Sections voted approximately 2 to 1 against Killington's stand on this in the past. We keep more money under the new dues system than in the past setup. [Our existing dues were set to operate at a slight loss in order to preserve the existing membership - Ed]

Glen Dam March 9, 1997 by Ray Catozzi, Leader

This was a short afternoon walk from Churchill Scott's house on Chasanna Drive in Rutland Town; up a snow packed road to CVPS's Glen Dam. About 12 or so showed up and we left our cars at the Scott's front yard. Three put on their cross-country skis and skied up the road.

It's only a mile or less to the dam so we voted to continue walking up past the ice covered pond even though the snow wasn't packed down very well. We managed another 1/2 mile or so and then opted to turn back. The three skiers decided to go further on, and they didn't come back to the Scott house until an hour or so after the walkers returned.

We had scheduled a wine and cheese party after hiking, but a few canceled that and went home. Even one of the skiers went home after returning. I'm mentioning the split up of our total number, to remind those who went home early what they missed. Something I had not seen or hear happening after any of our hikes in all the many years I've been hiking with the Section. Oh yes the wine, my homemade elderberry, plus other drinks and loads of different snacks was wonderful. But when a lull took place in the conversation, Bernie Donahue told a joke. Which one I don't remember, because he's got so many to tell, but after his joke, someone else threw in a joke, then another, then another. Out of the 8 or 9 who were present, only 2 or 3 kept quiet and just listened and laughed. Around and around the group we went for about an hour and a half. It was hilarious, and many who were there probably hadn't had such an after hike time in their whole lives, like me.

Michigan March February 16, 1997 by Eric Dietschbein, Leader

Our snowshoe hike did not send us all the way to Michigan, of course, but rather we went to Michigan Road in Pittsfield. The first part of the hike was along the road, which was packed down pretty well and hardly required snowshoes. Myself, Jerry, Sue and Pat were accompanied by Connie Youngstrom, a friend of Sue's. We met a skier right at the start, and though the road was packed, hers were the only legible tracks. I was surprised not to see fresh snowmobile tracks, and within the first mile we did see two snowmobiles coming up towards us.

We chose to continue on the main road, and since I had no planned route we took our first available right turn, which was close by an old stone foundation we wanted to inspect anyway.

We proceeded to wander up a long ridge line, finding the snow to be very soft and the going difficult in spots, while in other places we stayed up on top easily. We found many animal tracks after leaving the main road, including a lot of moose prints and even some chewed trees. Mount Carmel loomed large on our left, until we reached the end of the log trail we were on and headed off to our right (north and east) through the woods.

After a short lunch stop (it was rather cold, and when the wind kicked up a little, it was time to go), we continued on through the woods a ways, until we came upon a logging trail headed back down. We came out on our own track, not far from where we had turned off the main road. Other snowmobiles had traversed the road by this time and the trail was even more packed down, but we kept our snowshoes on for the trip back.

We saw an unusual sight on our way back. A man was walking his dog, who it seemed was pulling a sled of some type. When they got closer, we saw that the dog was paralyzed in the hindquarter, and his master had rigged up a harness to support her pack end. The mechanism had wheels on it, but he had added a small pair of skis beneath them, and his dog was motoring around quite well with its front legs. Such obvious devotion was truly heartwarming, and made for a happy end to a good outing.

Excursion to Eagle Rock

by Eric Dietschbein, Leader

A beautiful day for a hike, it was - seeing as how there was not enough snow cover to justify snowshoes. We had a good size group, including several non-members. As I have a horrible memory, and Jerry had to take the register when we were done, I cannot give names except for the regulars; Jerry, Mary Ellen, Sue Thomas, and myself and Frank.

We parked at the "end" of Ganson Hill Rd. and began our hike along the old road. After 1/2 mile, we veered left and crossed 2 hayfields, spooking two deer (only Jerry got a good look) and then entering the woods. The ground was fully covered with snow but there was an icy glaze almost everywhere. We followed log trails for less than a mile, then cut through some dense upland bog (frozen over) to come out on the ridge above Eagle Rock.

The rocks here were very icy and we were unable to climb down as I had expected, but we worked our way along until we were able to descend the short distance and avail ourselves of the fine view off

Eagle Rock. After obligatory picture taking, we began a hazardous, but first descent of the steep slopes toward Rt. 30. To my surprise, no one whined or complained about this route, which can be tricky even in best conditions. I'm sure there were privately held reservations concerning my sanity, but everyone maintained great humor.

We found the normally active brook and waterfalls at the base of the slope to be frozen over and not as spectacular as usual. We returned the 1.5 to 2 miles back to our vehicles via the farm trails that used to be a through road between Rt. 30 and Monument Hill Rd., finding a ramshackle cabin and a couple of old wrecked autos along the way. We paused only briefly in all our travels, as we (I) wanted to see the football conference championship games. Many thanks to those who attended

Bingo Brook Trail February 1, 1997

by Herb Ogden, Leader

Four Killington Section stalwarts met in Rutland on this fairly inviting Woodchuck Eve. Up in Bingo, we were joined by two more GMCers. Except for the lone snowshoer, we skied all the way or almost all the way to the end of the Forest Service road that follows Bingo Brook from Rochester up into Hancock, aiming vaguely at Romance Gap until it ends at a big turnaround just south of the brook.

Bingo is or was a neighborhood of the Town of Rochester, northwest of the hamlet of Robinson on the Brandon Gap Road. There was once a Bingo School (we passed it) and a Bingo Cemetery (we almost passed it too but were too tuckered out to explore on the way back). Does anyone know the origin of the name?

We parked at the last house, where the Pine Bend Brook Trail comes across a bridge from the north. We followed easy grades on the wide USFS road. Soon, we noticed the tracks of some at least medium-sized animal that seemed to have checked out the inside of every culvert on the road. We saw no four-footed wildlife, but we heard red squirrels scolding in the pines, and we were treated to a variety of bird songs. By afternoon, when the temperature had risen to well over freezing, we also saw some tiny flies winging over the snow.

The snow started off great but turned into a problem. As the temperature rose, the snow became amazingly wet — great for snowmen but bad for skiing. The people with the waxless skis had the worst of it, but even those with waxables had trouble finding the right wax. Some had trouble by the time we passed the upper end of the Pine Bend Brook Trail. By the time we climbed past the last old house foundation, high over Bingo Brook, everyone was having trouble. For the last third of a mile or so, while the Leader kept assuring people that they were almost to the point where one might begin to say that they were nearly on the last stretch, and kept making other hopeful noises, we struggled mightily with wet snow that sank a foot under our skis and stuck to the bottoms and even the tops of the skis, making them very heavy. The wet snow plagued us on the way down, too, though, curiously, it sometimes seemed drier as we descended. The combination of the snow, the elevation, and the weather did strange things that day.

There were inviting side trails to the south and north. We already took one of them, the Pine Bend Brook Trail, a few years ago. Maybe next time we'll try the one that goes over the ridge to the West Hill Road -- if the snow is not like cement!

KNOW A TRAIL THAT SHOULD -- OR SHOULDN'T -- BE IN THE DAY HIKER'S GUIDE
TO VERMONT? by Herb Ogden

The Green Mountain Club is preparing a new edition of this popular guide to trails that are not part of the Long Trail System. It should include hiking trails, nature trails, recreation paths, and any ski trails that make pleasant walking. It should NOT include any trail that cannot reliably be followed even with a guidebook, nor any trail where trailhead parking or something else will cause a problem with the landowner.

If you want to recommend a trail for inclusion or exclusion, or if you are willing to check out or measure a trail, please contact the GMC's Managing Editor, Sylvia Plumb, at the main office, RR 1, Box 650, Waterbury Center VT 05677; telephone 244-7037; gmcsylva@sover.net.

Wheelerville Area April 5, 1997

by Herb Ogden, Leader

Spring had finally come when we had this somewhat muddy excursion in the hinterlands of Mendon. One of the thirteen hikers even wore shorts! We drove as far as the snowplow turnaround at the girl scout camp site on the Tamarack Notch Road, then continued east. Soon an old road branched downhill to the right. It used to lead to the north-south road from McLaughlin Falls in Mendon to the Brown Covered Bridge in Shrewsbury. We continued on a road that is passable in summer, leading to a four corners at a two-grave cemetery. Sue Thomas made a snow rabbit there, complete with pine needles for whiskers. It was, of course, a Snow Bunny.

From the four corners, we headed north on the old town road to McLaughlin Falls, unfortunately widened just recently for logging. Soon, on the right, we passed the cellarhole of what was the P. Quirk farm according to the 1969 Beers Atlas of Rutland County. Farther uphill, about 300' off in the woods and at the edge of a steep slope, was a smaller cellarhole. The house was also in the Beers Atlas but, unlike Quirk's, had apparently fallen down by the time the 1891 U.S.G.S. map was made. Near the crest were the remains of a farmhouse that had apparently fallen down even before 1869. We saw no wildlife bigger than a chipmunk, but did notice some melted moose tracks on the old road. Thoughts of melted mousse led to the noon break. We lunched on a stone wall in the sun, with a nice view of the back side of East Mountain. There also, we were joined by two hikers who had looked in vain for us at the part of Main Street Park that has the bandstand. They then set out to track us, and succeeded thanks to the Snow Bunny and muddy footprints leading north from it.

Heading downhill, we passed yet another cellarhole before hearing the roar of McLaughlin Falls. This icy spectacle was just before the old road joined the Wheelerville Road. We returned along the Wheelerville Road, pausing to inspect the old cemetery and another cellarhole. This was a fine spring walk.

The Icebreakers (Poultney River Canoe Trip) November 16, 1997
by Eric Deutschbein, Leader

They said it couldn't be done - and it almost wasn't. Despite a clear, sunny day, low temperatures over previous days had covered much of the river with ice. Indeed, Frank and I found our intended exit point completely iced over, which shortened our trip by over a mile. But such intrepid adventurers are not so easily thwarted. Sue Carey and son Seth, both sporting exceptionally fashionable hats, led most of the way. Myself and Mary Ellen, who by the way drove from Massachusetts at 5:00 am (locals, for shame!) followed and Frank, in a solo canoe, paddled ceaselessly to keep apace.

We had to plow through a lot of ice, perhaps 10% of our approximately 4 mile paddle. This was actually a great deal of fun, with only one spot having ice thick enough to slow us down seriously. Indeed, Seth made sure his canoe went through as much ice as possible, he and Sue often crossing the river to break up as much ice as possible.

We did see a blue heron as well as several ducks. Otter slides were also evident on the river banks, although the otters themselves declined to make an appearance.

The only problem with the trip was the failure of the trip leader's Jeep to start at the end. As it is a Jeep, this is hardly surprising, and in truth the vehicle is still not running, though it did start the next day and travel almost a full five miles before the ignition module completely melted down.

All Participants were insistent that future canoe or tubing trips be planned next summer, and you can be sure that they will be (if my Jeep is running by then!)

Grandpa Knob February 22, 1997
by Gordon & Helen Cawood, Leaders

This was a joint Bread Loaf/Killington Sections hike. Due to the weird weather, we did not expect the hike to happen. Two weather reports said it was raining that morning. However, those of us who look out windows could see patches of blue sky amongst skittering clouds. We got no calls from Bread Loafers. But, we went to West Rutland on the off-chance that some Killington members might show up. Five did, probable because they had less travel time and could make up their minds later.

The hike started at the gate to the service road at the end of the northern spur off the Belgo road. The service road was icy, but passable without snowshoes or crampons. The summit had been blown clear of snow. We stopped briefly for the views, and to examine the foundation of the 1940's wind generator. Although warm, it was too windy to stay for lunch. We lunched in the shelter of trees near the "funny rocks." These rocks are geological oddities, the crowns shaped by normal weathering, while their bases were undercut by running glacial ice melt. The weather held until the trip down, when a brief thunderstorm urged us along with rain and hailstones. Landowner permission from Beth Friese, 468-2466 in summer, 864-5264 in winter.

Please send the articles soon after the hike.

Lake Ninevah

by Churchill Scott, Leader

Just a few days after one of the largest snowstorms of the season a group of 11 hikers visited the grave of Vermont's "Unknown Soldier". Due to the snow the leader had doubts about going up to Mount Holly and Lake Ninevah, but Parker and other 4-wheel drivers said "No problem", so we went. Walking conditions were very good and everyone enjoyed the short hike.

The early account of the area tells of two colonial soldiers returning home stopping at a nearby spring where one of them had a fatal heart attack. His companion buried him on a nearby knoll and no record was kept.

In the early 1900's a group of Boy Scouts and leaders excavated the site and found this tale true. Around 1994 the Vermont Legislature passed a bill naming this spot Vermont's "Unknown Soldiers Grave".

PS - The leader would like to apologize to Charlie Edger for not being more certain as to the destination of this hike. I did have cold feet about the area but was finally told we could make it

Hamilton Falls, Jamaica

by Sue Thomas, Leader

The club's old enameled coffee pot got some exercise at the state park campground, where we began our trip with a cook-out. It was a chilly spring day, so hot chocolate was just the thing, and hot dogs are at their best cooked over a campfire. Once stuffed, we walked along the river to the base of the Hamilton Falls trail. Along the way we spotted eider ducks and got a demonstration of skillful white water kayaking, and found many wildflowers, including a "quadrillium" (Hopefully this had nothing to do with proximity to a nuclear power plant or superfund site. No eight legged frogs were sighted.)

Spring run-off made the falls spectacular, we climbed up to the top where there's an interesting series of pot holes, smoothed out by the running water.

Everyone opted then to hike on to Ball Mountain Dam, where we climbed up the gravel side to the top, expecting to see a lake on the other side. Unfortunately the lake had not had time to refill after the most recent release, so our view was of mud flats. Turkey vultures were making good use of it though, snapping up stranded fish. We saw several soaring by at our eyelevel which was great, made the climb worthwhile.

On the way back we unfortunately managed to dunk one of the kids in the frigid river. He was an awfully good sport about it and had recovered by the time we reached Rutland. Thanks to Eric, who crossed back over the river to retrieve a lost pack, and to Carol who came down from Burlington for the hike and identified warblers for us.

Please send the articles soon after the hike.

Deadline for the next issue is December 11, 1997.

Spring Wildflower Wade

by Sue Thomas

The weather for our annual spring wildflower walk was to say the least, uninspiring! I was amazed to find a good sized group assembled at the park, decked out in slickers and rainpants and ready to brave the elements.

It had taken me several scouting missions to find any wildflowers at all, it being an unusually cold, wet spring. We started out from Inman Pond in Fair Haven, here I'd seen large stands of hepatica in many colors just the day before. This day however, they had wisely folded themselves up to wait out the rain, proving once and for all that plants are smarter than hikers! We did find lots of trailing arbutus though, fragrant flowers and larger and more abundant than usual. We found a fairly good variety of flowers all in all - trillium, wild ginger, saxifrage, coltsfoot, Solomon's seal, spring beauties and violets among them, and were able to get in out of the rain for lunch at a very chic establishment - namely inside an abandoned tractor trailer. Somewhat lacking in atmosphere, but dry!

The question of the day was, where were we? We studied maps of the area and I have since spoken to several people we live around there. No one can figure out what lake our cozy lunch spot overlooked. A mystery ...

Otter Creek Canoe Trip

by Ruth Gibbud, Leader

On a sunny June day with just enough breeze to chase the black flies away, twelve intrepid boaters gathered to explore the northern reaches of the Otter Creek, between West Salisbury and Middlebury. These included five canoes, one with a fisherman, and two kayaks, skittering about visiting and encouraging those in the larger boats. There was a bit of racing on the smooth water, a luscious picnic lunch by the bridge and an unexpected dip in the river by two of the party; they dried quickly in the sun. At the pull-out, all agreed we should do it again.

Old Job Trail to Baker Peak

by Sue Thomas, Leader

In the midst of a summer heat wave, I managed to schedule this long trek on a cold and windy day. The thermometer on my jacket read 52 in the middle of the day! It felt pretty good to us after several days in the 90's, that is until we got to the summit, where the wind on the exposed rocks was really frigid. Seemed like we'd fast forwarded right through July and August and on into November!

We were glad we'd stopped at Griffith Lake for lunch and didn't linger long at the top, though the view was great. While there we were joined by a dog who'd had a porcupine encounter along the trail, poor thing. Pat, who is a vet, tried to help the owner yank a few quills out, but pliers were needed, and probably anesthesia, so she administered dog biscuits instead. We also shared our cookies with a couple who were doing trail maintenance. All of us who do that work ourselves know it should be rewarded!

White Rocks Scramble & Picnic Aug. 16

by Ray Catozzi, Leader

This outing was a daring attempt to entice a few adventuresome climbers to do what I had done four times in the past, with only a few joining me then. Once I went up the talus slope alone. It's not easy, and one has to use caution as one approaches the looser and smaller rocks near the top.

But we had eight who wanted to do it, including 9 year old Seth Carey. Seth was having so much fun we had a tough time holding him back to stay with the gang. We got boxed in up under the near perpendicular cliff and too quite some time to find our way out of the box, and get on top. Therefore we were late in getting back down so we didn't go up to lookout rock to join the supper people. They went up, waited, then came back down so we ate at the picnic area. T was quite a trip, but I don't think I'd care to do it again.

December 1997

Historic Rutland November 15, 1997

by Roma Pulling, Leader

With the first day of deer hunting we arranged an outing that avoided areas overrun with hunters. We concentrated on landmarks from the earliest days of Rutland's settlement. Alfred and I met nine other hikers at the park, and two ferrets!!

Leaving our cars at the park, we walked down Main Street as far as Washington Street, down the hill to Depot Park, along Merchants Row to West Street, up West Street to Main Street, north on Main Street for a way, after which we retraced our steps to Center Street and explored it.

Along our route were the homes of four Vermont governors: John Page, John Meade, Israel Smith and Charles Williams. We paused at the home of George Chaffee, now an art gallery, and that of Nathaniel Chipman, a judge and senator. The founder of the Rutland Herald, Samuel Williams, had a house on Main Street as well.

Downtown we stopped to read the new historic display across from City Hall and went into the Opera House, a former theater. Along West Street stands the former store of Nathan Osgood, now a law office, and markers at the location of Vermont's first state house and Fort Rutland. Our last stops were at the old Bank of Rutland on Center Street, the old post office and jail (now the library) and the bank building across the street, in recent years the Recreation Center.

I want to thank Bernie Donahue very much for his assistance on this hike.

Uniform Dues Now in Effect

The Uniform Dues Policy, enacted by the Main Club Board of Directors on January 18, 1997, over the objection of the Killington Section, is now in effect. Dues are now $27 for and individual, $35 per family. 20% ($5.40 of an individual membership) will be returned to the Section. There is a $7 discount available for volunteers or those of limited income. Use of either discount is on the honor system. [The above information is from The Long Trail News Spring 97, page 16].

The editor believes that all memberships and renewals will now be handled by the Main Club office. They will probably send out one or more renewal notices.

Editor Resigns

This is the last issue of Smoke & Blazes that I will be doing. I have enjoyed putting out the newsletter, but now have difficulty finding the time to put in the concentrated effort required to make the deadlines. Also due to several considerations, my interest and time to participate in Club functions has dropped to a minimum.

[The following is reprinted from Smoke & Blazes Vol. 24 No 3. July - Sept. 1972. The letters were written by Herb Ogden Senior. They were very prophetic, and express my feelings very well]

Here is a copy of a letter I have sent to Ray Secor [then KS President]. Can you include it in the next issue of S&B?

Quimby November 8, 1997

by Herb Ogden, Leader

The pervious day's weather forecast for the day of this hike was rain, rain and rain. Instead of that, we got a mild Novemberday with even a little sun. The only hint of rain lay in the magnificently braided clouds we saw near the end of the day. Moral: don't give up on an excursion until you see what the weather actually is on the chosen day.

Seven of us headed up the Appalachian Trail from the River Road in Sherburne toward Quimby Mountain. The woods on the first ascent were very pleasant, as was the Ottauquechee Section's well-maintained trail. From below, the slope looks steep and continuous, but there are actually little shelves on the way up, some with huge boulders. Some may consist of part of the Taconics that slid over the Green Mountains and were separated from the rest of the Taconics by erosion that brought the Greens to the surface again. With the leaves off, there were also good distant views toward Killington, Pico, Deer Leap, and Kent Pond. From our lunch spot atop a 2523' summit, I think we could see Spruce Mountain in Plainfield.

We crossed under a power line, admired the views there, and soon turned off the A.T. after about 2.2 miles to walk down a wide, well-built logging road. Where it hit the older Quimby Road, a log landing gave expansive views of the Coolidge Range. We then followed a woodroad south. Partly blocked by logging slash, it was soggy and obscure -- yet, as recently as 1995, it was easily passable by four wheel drives and was the only north-south route I found then. (The main route is now the wide logging road that leads south, crosses the ridge, then leads north to Notown.) In about 500', just after passing a left turn that leads up to a 2480' gap that may once have had a primitive road to Stockbridge, it passed about 60' east of a well-preserved 35' x 25' stone cellarhole with a 13' x 9' chimney platform in the middle. It was about 6' deep. A few old apple trees, a big retaining wall, and other stone walls are evidence of what seems to have been a substantial farm.

About 500' farther south and 150' west of the old woodroad lies the Woodard Cemetery, surrounded by a stone wall. There are only two headstones and footstones, though there is room for two more. Asa Woodard's stone says he died 11 July 1845, at age 74. Mary Woodard's says she died 16 February 1845, at age 72.

(Madeline Fleming's History of Sherburne says the ages are clearly 24 and 22, but Ray Catozzi and I say the first digit of both is a "7," and he's a professional signmaker, so that's that.) Because there is no reference to her being anyone's wife and her last name is engraved "Woodard" rather than the maiden name that usually followed a married woman's first name, we concluded Mary was probably Asa's sister, not his wife. Our final historical stop was a smaller, shallow foundation about a tenth of a mile farther south, also just west of the old woodroad. Does anyone know of any other signs of 19th century habitation up there? It is not clear (to me, anyway) when the houses whose foundations we visited were built. They are both in Right No. 38. (All the original Rights show on the 1869 Beers Atlas of Rutland County.) Sherburne land records show Asa Woodard, then of Stockbridge, buying land in 1824 that may have included at least the southerly house site. He bought the west third and easternmost sixth of Right 38. He sold it in 1831. In the meantime, in 1829, he was listed as "of Sherburne" and bought land that probably included the cemetery and the northerly house site. This was the south half of the middle third and the southwest quarter of the east third of Right 38. He bought the north half of the middle third and northwest quarter of Right No. 38 in 1834. This left him with none of his original purchase in Right 38 but also with the entire middle part of Right 38 that he did not originally buy. Maybe he first built the southerly house after his 1824 purchase. Then, when he sold the 1824 purchase, maybe he built the more substantial northerly house.

Asa Woodard's son Asa, Jr., may have hung on up in Quimby for only one winter after his father died. In the fall of 1846, he sold to John Woodard, who was probably his uncle, his property in Right 37 (at least 50 acres of which he had acquired in 1833; the book of the Sherburne Land Records that may have shown the rest was lost in a fire). The land records do not say what became of the Woodard holdings in Right 38, where we were. John Woodard may have inherited them when Asa died in 1845. By then, however, John no longer lived in Sherburne, having moved back to Stockbridge. John Woodard disposed of his last Sherburne property in 1851. Neither of the houses whose sites we visited appears in the 1869 Beers Atlas, nor even in a 1858 map. Perhaps Asa, Sr., was the last to live in the big northerly house and it fell or burned down after he died in 1845.

After ruminating some about what mountainside farming must have been like for the Woodards, we started down the Quimby Road, soon passing the camp that Madeline Fleming says is on the site of a camp a Mr. Erwin built in 1944 from an old logging shack of the International Paper Co. The really good road ends at a log landing west of the camp. The Quimby Road then took us along a very steep, narrow valley. The lower section was formerly the route of the Appalachian Trail. We descended it to the River Road by the courtesy of Section member Charles Edgar, over whose land it passes.

Quimby has a neighborhood, a mountain, and a road named after him, but who was Quimby? The late Madeline Fleming's history says Archie Baker's grandfather knew a Mr. Quimby. The 1869 atlas shows a "R. Quimby" house at the end of a poor road leading from about the Town Office on the River Road up into Right 40. This is almost a mile south of the foundations we visited. Has anyone found a trace of Mr. Quimby's house? Maybe we'll look for it next year.

Middlebury Gap LT to Burnt Hill Trail January 17, 1998 by Karen W. Cartier

On Saturday five of us discovered first-hand the awesome destructive forces of nature. After conferring for a short while about the possibility of an alternate hike due to the recent ice storm which had affected Addison County, we decided to go ahead with the original plan. We were delighted by the sun and intense blue sky by the time we arrived at the Middlebury Ski Touring Center, where we dropped off one car. We started at the trail head on Rt. 125, where we entered another world of the crystal forest.

Recent television coverage of the ice storm did not prepare me for the awesome spectacle we found north of the Lincoln Gap. It was simply indescribable. The amount, and quite frankly, sheer weight of the ice was incredible. Passing under tree limbs (actually stooping under tree limbs) was met with the loud clanging of wind chimes wrought from ice. As the sun began to warm up the forest, the crashing of ice chandeliers could be heard all around. We had to be very careful of where we stopped to take breaks, or simply to take stock, lest ice daggers impale our heads (there were jokes of making hard hats mandatory on GMC hikes!)

Alas, the wretched beauty impeded our progress enormously. It was more like a search team than a hike, as we spend most of our time just trying to locate the trail (although I spent a considerable amount of my time falling down!) At about 2:00, we had been out for 3 1/2 hours and realized we hadn't made it half-way, and were still bushwacking our way, inch by inch. A difficult decision was made to retrace our steps back to our starting point to avoid the prospect of spending the night in the woods! As we returned the way we came, it became painfully obvious that we had only gone about two miles as the crow flies! We all vowed to return in the summer and complete the LT-Burnt Hill Trail Loop

Rails to Turnpikes December 20, by Herb Ogden, Leader

This was supposed to be a ski tour on the Delaware & Hudson Rail Trail from Castleton to Poultney. The day before the excursion, the Castleton end appeared pretty bony; almost all the snow had melted. When only three people showed up for the trip, two had skis, and the one without skis was glad to go home, I changed the plan to a short ski tour on the Old Turnpike Road in Mendon.

Otherwise known as the Elbow Road, this old road once was the main route over the mountains, from Mendon to NorthSherburne. We skied it from the trailhead on the Mendon side to the last camp before the old beaver ponds. There is one old foundation and an old kiln on the pretty route, which has easy grades. Snowmobiles had flattened but not ruined the snow, and Mike O'Neill and I had a nice trip.

Where are You?

During the work parties in the spring of 1997, two new pieces of our trail maintenance equipment disappeared. One was a brand new $19 heavy-duty garden hoe, used to clear out waterbars. The other was a $31 heavy-duty lopper, used to clear brush and branches. Probably someone threw them into a truck after a hard day's volunteer work and they are now forgotten in a shed somewhere.

If you have either of these tools, please call Trails & Shelters Chair Herb Ogden at 775-1350. If you plan to do trail work with them in April, before the first scheduled work party, you may as well keep them until then, but do let Herb know so he won't have to spend more of the Section's money on replacement tools.

Mt. Carmel October 19, 1997

by Gordon and Helen Cawood, Leaders

Twelve hikers mounted an assault on Mt. Carmel in Chittenden. From the center of Pittsfield we drove west on FR 35. About a mile of this is rough road which improves on entering the GMNF. We then followed FR 97 south for about 1/2 mile to a snowmobile trail which was the start of the hike. We followed this trail, stopping briefly at "Art's View" to take a look at Mt. Carmel and Bloodroot Mtn. Thank you, Art, whoever you are. On reaching the LT, we proceeded north to the cairn on the right indicating the abandoned fire warden's trail which is not difficult to follow up to the summit. No one climbed the tower. Since it is flopped over horizontally, it wouldn't do much good. Nevertheless there were limited views to the west and a good place for lunch.

One mishap to report: John Little's dog, Samantha, who thrilled at running on ahead, returned once with a faceful of porcupine quills. John tried to deal with this on site, but it became obvious that he should abandon the hike and take poor Samantha out for professional care. We wonder if the GMC might want to rethink its policy of allowing unleashed dogs on hikes. Hat Hanneghan's Omar was leashed through-out the hike and emerged unscathed.

Thank you for coming: Caroline Waldhauer, Mary Ellen Zizis, Ray Catozzi, Michael O'Neill and friend Helen, Bob Perkins, Bernie Donahue, Pat Hanneghan, Sue Thomas and John Little. We enjoyed your company.

New England's Largest Glacial Boulder

June 28, 1997 by Ray Catozzi, Leader

After failing to find my way into this really large stone a few years ago I once more inquired in the small town of Whitingham, near the Massachusetts border and found a person working in their post office who had been there. He told me where the trail was that led up to the rock, and I drove to it a few miles west of the village on Rt. 100. That was last year. So, even before I lucked into it, I put it on the schedule. Then I asked and received some assistance in hiking in to the boulder from Jerry Parker, back last spring. A short but very steep ATV trail led us to the rock in about 1/2 hour hike time.

After finding the rock and then taking pictures, we continued on as the trail to what looked like the top of the hill. It was, and the trail turned west and headed back down in a nice gradual decline, and lo and behold, we came back down to Rt. 100 about a mile west of our entering trail. I said this is the way we're going to hike in of June 25. Another advantage was parking for a dozen cars, against only 2 at the first trail.

So 8 of us made the gradual, but hot climb as we were in the sun most the way up. There it was, the rock, right where Jerry and I left it last spring. It is about 60 ft long, 35 ft wide, and 25 ft high, with a tree growing out of the top.

Then we rode a few mile to Harriman Reservoir Dam and had a late (3pm) lunch while watching all the motor boats on the water

Okemo Mountain October 26, 1997

by Gretchen Crowley

The rainy weather held off for seven of us to hike up to the fire tower at the summit of Okemo Mountain. Our fearless leader, Kinsman "The Wonder Dog" led us gradually up the trail that was covered with Autumn's quilt of colors laid down to blanket the Earth for the upcoming Winter.

As we neared the top we were greeted with patches of snow from the previous night's storm. The view from the fire tower offered a panoramic view of the surrounding ski areas which will be bursting to life by Thanksgiving.

On the trip down, Ray was tantalizing our tastebuds with his secret recipe for Elderberry wine. Once back at the car, Ray surprised us with a sampling of his Elderberry wine complete with wine glasses - which was a perfect ending to a pleasant hike! Thanks Ray!

I think it is important that members of the Killington Section should know that I am withdrawing because of Main Club action, not because of anything that has occurred in the Killington Section.

Sincerely, Herb Ogden Sr.; June 1972

Ray [Secor], I have concluded, after Saturday's Annual GMC Meeting, that I can no longer volunteer my whole hearted services for the Green Mountain Club as a member of the Killington Section. This is not a sudden decision. In recent years it has seemed to me that an unhealthy trend has been strengthening as Sections falter and Main goes "big time." I am inclined, in any such situation, to go either whole hog or get out. I find this trend so disheartening, over a period of years, that I can no longer go whole hog.

As I indicated in my "memo" on Saturday and sought to point up during the seminar, I feel that the present trend can lead only to the Vermont Parks Department. This trend involves standardization of too many facets of trail & shelter maintenance, directives from Main, permission from Main rather than advice, salaried executive secretary, the executive-committee-of-the-executive-committee (Advisory Board?), a stifling of individual initiative and responsibility in the Section, a position that Sections are creatures of the Main Club rather than the other way around-- and several other considerations.

I have, in recent years, spend considerable time and money on the Long Trail as an active member of the Killington Section, in hopes that my perception of the trend might be clouded. That hope no longer exists. I do not wish to play an active role in the dissolution of the volunteer organization once known as the Green Mountain Club.

Sincerely, Herb Ogden Sr.; May 1972

18 February 1998

Dear friend of the Killington Section:

Regrettably, the Smoke & Blazes that was mailed at the end of January contained misinformation about membership renewal. The GMC's Waterbury Center headquarters will not send out renewal notices for the Killington Section, because we have not asked it to and do not want it to. As it has for years, our Section will continue to send out its own renewal notices.

We prefer to collect Section dues ourselves and send the GMC's share to headquarters, rather than have the GMC staff collect the dues and send us our share. This way, the Section gets the money faster. Also, having our Section volunteers do the work ensures that the GMC need not hire additional paid staff to deal with Section memberships. This is good, because the more staff the GMC hires, the more the dues seem to increase.

If there is a "paid" next to your address label, you have renewed for 1998. If there is a "life," you are a Life Member and need not pay. Otherwise, please send your dues to the Section Treasurer at the address on the form that accompanies this letter. The GMC Bylaws give you until 1 May to pay, but your prompt renewal now will help us plan for the future at the 10 March Killington Section Directors meeting.

The second reason for this letter is to clarify an item in the last schedule: the scheduling meeting for outings from mid-May to mid-August will be combined with the Killington Section Annual Meeting at the Econo-Lodge on Route 4 in Mendon at 5:30 p.m. on 4 April. If you have an idea for an outing but cannot attend, please call Outings Committee Co-Chair Linda Smith at 265-4493.

The third reason for this letter is the urgent need to find a new Smoke & Blazes editor and assistant editor. I would have put a call for volunteers in the last Smoke & Blazes if I had known the editor was quitting. Editorial duties are (1) editing articles received, if necessary; (2) laying out the newsletter; (3) printing a master copy; (4) taking the master to a commercial printer; and (5) seeing to it that the final product is mailed well before the first outing on the new schedule. The Outings Committee prepares the outing schedule, so the editor should only have to have it printed commercially with the newsletter. This has to be done every three months. Contributors can be urged to send in material on computer diskette or E-mail. A couple hours' work can produce an acceptable issue. If you want something that looks more professional or includes artwork, it takes longer. If you want more information, please ask me. I edited Smoke & Blazes on a computer from 1988-94.

Because we need to get the next issue to the printer by early May, please contact me by the end of March if you are interested in helping with Smoke & Blazes or know of someone who might be. I would hate to see our newsletter end after 50 years of continuous publication.

We need other volunteers, too:

- ☺ Trail maintainers (work with clippers, saws, hoes, shovels, pick-mattocks, paintbrushes, brush scythes, and more)
- ☺ Shelter and outhouse maintainers (work with hammer, nails, roofing, wood preservative, and more)
- ☺ Sign makers (work with wood router)
- ☺ Trails & Shelters Chair to coordinate the above and link our work with that of the GMC as a whole (involves some paperwork)
- ☺ Outing leaders (lead hikes, snowshoe hikes, ski tours, bike trips, canoe trips, and more)
- ☺ Outings Committee co-chair (help find people to lead outings; compose the quarterly outing schedule)
- ☺ Publicity people (contact newspapers, radio, and community access TV to let people know about our outings and trail & shelter work; develop a Section brochure)
- ☺ Educators (speak at public meetings about the Section, the GMC, hiking, camping, and the other things we do)

If you are interested in volunteering, please note your interest on your membership renewal form or call me.

Finally, a personal note: I did not know my late father's 1972 resignation letter would appear in the last Smoke & Blazes. I respected his reason for quitting, but I disagreed. I joined the Section in 1962 (before he did), I have been a member ever since, and I intend to remain a member. As readers of Smoke & Blazes and the Long Trail News know, I have opposed the growth of some GMC bureaucracy and vociferously fought some main club initiatives like Uniform Dues. I have lost most of the fights. That is no reason to quit, though. The GMC's overall work is more important than my dissatisfaction with some aspects of that work. I hope those of you who are dissatisfied with some aspect of the GMC will work to change it, not abandon the organization that built and maintains the Long Trail.

Sincerely yours,

Killington Section of the GMC - Annual Meeting

April 4, 1998

By Jean Davies, Secretary

President Herb Ogden opened the meeting after the potluck supper. The Secretary's report was read and accepted. m/s/p Al Pulling/Roma Pulling.

Al Pulling's printed treasurer's report was accepted. m/s/p Jake Sherman/Eric Deutschbein.

The Section President's meeting will be held at the Vermont Law School on April 18. Herb Ogden is going, and will be glad to have other interested members go with him. Herb Ogden and Jake Sherman will attend the GMC May Sections meeting.

Rob and Sue Carey contributed over 20 years of service to the Killington Section, but disagreed so strongly with the uniform dues structure of the GMC, now in place, that they did not renew their membership. Motion: I move a resolution of thanks go to Rob and Sue Carey. m/s/p Madeline Sherman/Roma Pulling.

Trails:

Herb Ogden gave a trails committee report. He would appreciate someone to head up this committee, since he is also president of the Killington Section. Contact him if you are interested.

Before the ice storm, from Route 140 north was in good shape. The Bucklin Trail will not be moved for the present.

The Blue Ridge Cauty Trail was in fine condition. The Forestry Service bought land bordering the Old Turnpike Road (alias Old Elbow Road), and the Cauty Trail may be relocated somewhat to come out on Route 4, if there is the interest in doing so. It can be flagged, but probably clearing action will not take place for a year, anyway.

Pico camp was not jacked up last year since it appeared it might not survive trail relocation. Dave Hardy, GMC Trail Supervisor, said that there was a slowdown on the Killington development due to protests from a landowner on the Woodward Reservoir. This means that the Pico shelter can remain for now, and can be jacked up if we want.

Hardy reported that they will start cutting this year on the Killington/Pico relocation trail, but the new Pico trail will not open this year. The presence of the Bicknell Thrush holds back work high up on the Pico Trail until late August. The Long Trail Patrol is slated to work on the western Pico route to Route 4. There will be five weeks of volunteer patrol and five of paid patrol plus a couple of weeks of YCC work. The YCC workers stay at Gifford Woods. They will also relocate the Long Trail around the Juggernaut Trail and more.

On the Bear Mountain/Route 140 relocation: The White Rocks Trail will go down the Keewaydin Trail to Sugar Hill Road, put in a bridge over Route 140, and go up Bear Mountain. This trail should open this year. There are still a few places the Long Trail remains in the same location!

From the Editor . . .

I'm sure all of you are eager to get back out on the trails and hats off to all of you who kept hiking through the winter months. This is my first edition as editor of Smoke & Blazes, and I hope that I can follow in the footsteps of editors past. I am looking to become more active in the club as I am a fairly new member. My first hike of the season was just a couple of weeks ago, and it felt great to be out on the trails again! However I also saw that many of the trails in our section will need some clean-up after this winter's ice storm. Feel free to call, email or snail mail anytime with thoughts, suggestions and stories.

South of Route 4 there are approximately 15 blowdowns above the snow. As the snowmelts, a better idea of the underlying brush will appear.

Route 4 to the Appalachian Gap is the worst area, although most damage is under the snow pack. Chain saws can be dangerous in clearing ice damaged trees.

The GMC plan is to let the sections plan their own work and do what they can. There are around 180 unattached volunteers who Hardy will send out to help sections as needed. Hardy hopes the Long Trail will be all open by July 4.

Kim Armstrong planned to attend the Annual Meeting, but did not appear. She is the new Smoke & Blazes editor. Her address is HC70, Box 112A, Plymouth, VT 05056.

Based on Phil Smith's Director's report, Jake Sherman passed out a printout of the Killington Section's views. Eric Deutschbein moved that we adopt Sherman's draft. m/s/p Eric/Roma Pulling.

Sandy Tarbor is the membership and volunteer coordinator for the GMC. She fielded questions from the floor concerning the proposed expansion of GMC headquarters in Waterbury, and the make-up of the staff. She said that there is no GMC plan to go to the membership for money. Money appropriated by the Legislature for the GMC all goes to land projects. She said there were 10 full-time staff with the rest being seasonal. Those include shelter caretaker staff and the LT patrols.

Sue Thomas and Jean Davies went off the Killington Section Board, having served the maximum two terms. Davies took notes for the remainder of the Annual and the Director's meetings.

Nominations for the Killington Section Directors:

Connie Youngstrom by Sue Thomas, 2nd by Roma Pulling Jake Sherman by Al Pulling, 2nd by Sue Thomas
 Bob Perkins by Ray Catozzi, 2nd by Al Pulling
 Karen Cartier by Sue Thomas, 2nd by Eric Deutschbein
 I move the nominations be accepted.

m/s/p Madeline Sherman/Jake Sherman.

The election was by ballot with Youngstrom, Sherman and Perkins being elected to the Board.

A Director's Meeting followed: Nominations:

Herb Ogden for President by Jean Davies, 2nd by Al Pulling Phil Smith for Vice-President by Al Pulling, 2nd by Jake Sherman

I Pulling for Treasurer by Jake Sherman, 2nd by Bob Perkins
 Jake Sherman for Secretary by Bob Perkins, 2nd by Connie Youngstrom

It was decided that a copy of Sherman's proposal should be sent to Phil and Linda Smith and the secretary of the GMC.

Bob Perkins agreed to serve in the new post of historian. m/s/p Jean Davies/Jake Sherman.

It was suggested that the next Smoke & Blazes let members know that we are starting to collect GMC history, in case they have pictures, ledgers and other memorabilia.

The Directors' meeting adjourned at 8:12 p.m., followed promptly by the adjournment of the Annual Meeting. m/s/p Bernie Donahue/Al Pulling.

Have You Renewed Your Membership?

Remember Smoke & Blazes ends for you with this issue if you have not renewed your membership for 1998. Take a minute to fill out the membership form in this issue to renew today.

In Memory . . .

Arnold G. Bebee Sr.

Arnold Bebee passed away February 16 in Cambridge, New York, at the age of 77. Mr. Bebee was the father of Vivian Bebee Walter, a Killington Section member. Mr. Bebee worked in Bennington for the W.E. Daily co. and served as town clear and lister in Rupert. REP

Cornelia Mould Baker

Cornelia "Corky" Baker, of Forestdale, passed away recently. She was a former member of the Killington Section, known then as Corky Wilbur. She was the daughter of Fred Mould, who was a Sterling Section member and tireless worker on the Long Trail. Moulds Lodge, on the site of the present Beaver Meadow Lodge, was named for him. REP

Three Dog Hike

by Sue Thomas, leader

Having encountered an unusually belligerent porcupine on a previous trip to Moscow Pond, I was a little uneasy about the three dogs who enthusiastically joined us from an October hike. The 20 people were none too pleased to hear about it either. Luckily I'd waited to warn them till we were on our way so there was no escape for them. We took a trail built by the YCC (Youth Conservation Corps.) that connects Half Moon State Park with Bomoseen, by way of Moscow and Said Ponds, an area rich in wildlife, mostly harmless though we kept an eye out for "Spiney Norman" as I have named my attacker.

We had lunch on the rocks surrounding Moscow Pond and explored a newly flooded beaver pond where many trees had been chewed and removed. Perhaps we could enlist their help in clearing the ice storm damage on the Long Trail!

Our next stop was an overlook above Glen Lake, then the trail winds down and circles the lake, coming out on several points jutting into the waters, very scenic. All made it back un-spined and happy.

Quarterline Road

By Roma Pulling, leader

If you thought that the January 21 hike was to be crosslots to our house for a fireplace party, you were right. We devoted quite a bit of time to finding a route that would avoid the swamp because it had failed to freeze, but a few days before the 31st it became clear that even a bypass of the swamp wouldn't be satisfactory. We had several inches of snow on the ground with a thick crust, which broke with every step. An alternate route had to be found, as provided in the schedule.

Years ago Harold Rogers used to lead winter hikes on the Quarterline Road in Rutland Town, and we decided to go there again. Parking near where the paved road turned to dirt, we started walking. Immediately off to our left we had a lovely view of the Green Mountains in the distance. Soon the road forested on both sides until it crossed through fields further on. We walked until the road intersected a paved one, at which point we turned back. The weather was sunny and perfect for a winter hike, although the day had started out cloudy. We saw turkey tracks beside the road. One jeep passed us.

Elbow Road, Mendon

by Herb Ogden, leader

Which road between Shrewsbury and Duxbury crosses the Green Mountains at the lowest elevation? Which one has its highest point somewhere other than where it crosses the east-west watershed? I think the answer to both is the Old Turnpike Road from Mendon to North Sherburne. It crosses the watershed (and the Long Trail) at The Elbow, elevation 1951'. It reaches its highest point, about 2020', over one mile west of there. That's atop the first rise in the unmaintained part the road as one heads east from the snowmobile trailhead. It's near the old kiln that shows on the 1869 Beers Atlas of Rutland County.

Another interesting fact about the Old Turnpike Road, otherwise known as the Elbow Road, is that it used to be the main crossing of the mountains between Brandon Gap and Shrewsbury, after the Green Road (which crossed near North Pond in Chittenden) fell into disuse. After the 1927 flood, it was supplanted as the mail route by the road over Sherburne Pass, now US 4. For more information on the Old Turnpike Road, the Green Road, and other abandoned parts of Rutland County, see Faye Smith Moulton's Adventuring Into Vermont's Past, printed by Academy Books in 1990.

Ready to explore this road on a bright but cold morning were nine Killington Section members and guests. We left the cars at the Mendon snowmobile trailhead. The snowshoes that most of had brought were unnecessary. Even after the main snowmobile route diverged to the Wildcat Road, enough machines had traveled the route to pack it down and provide solid footing. The one skier did make some use of her skis, though she wisely took them off on the descent toward North Sherburne. We met one other skier, one other walker, and one snowmobile. Someone had skied north on the woodroad from The Elbow and one person had walked south on the LT. That was it for people tracks. We also saw the tracks of a bobcat, a moose, and a small deer descending into North Sherburne. East of The Elbow, we noticed considerable damage from the January ice storm. Many trees had no tops, and some of the tops had ended up in the old road. Luckily, all had been cleared away before we got there.

Mt. MoosalamooFebruary 21, 1998By Gordon and Helen Cawood, leaders*

Twelve hikers and dog Cuckoo assaulted Mt. Moosalamoo from Keewaydin Camp on Route 53, Salisbury. We followed the Summit Road to Keewaydin Trail to Oak Ridge Trail to the summit; in all, a 2,000 foot elevation gain. There were spring conditions (no snow, a lot of mud) at the foot and winter conditions (6" + snow) at the summit.

Snowshoes were not necessary but might have been helpful near the top if it had been worth carrying them all that distance. The Summit Road is well marked with blue blazes and easily followed to the point where the Campsite Trail goes off to the north. Beyond that, the Summit Road and Keewaydin Trails are poorly marked and maintained. They might present a problem for anybody who is either not familiar with the area or unused to following obscure trails. We had lunch on the summit and enjoyed an excellent view of the inside of a fog bank. Most of the group retraced steps smartly. However, a few of us took advantage of another viewpoint on the Overcliff Trail to check on scenery to the west, including Lakes Dunmore and Champlain.

Thank you for coming, Mike and Ginger Fiskio, and Jack Burbank (Breadloafers), Sue Thomas, Herb Ogden and Jerry Parker (Killingtoners), and Joe Menoff, Michael O'Neill, Patrice Clark and Susan Mulholland. We enjoyed your company.

Chittenden Brook Ski TrailFebruary 28, 1998by Herb Ogden, leader*

Who would have thought that we would need to find a shady place to have lunch on a winter outing? Not only was this a brilliantly blue and beautiful day, but it was downright warm! Fortunately there was plenty of new snow, so the lone skier (the leader) and a half-dozen or so snowshoers were not disappointed.

The gate just up from the Brandon Gap Road was closed, as it usually is in winter, so we began our tour there. Leaving the Forest Service road at the summer trailhead, we followed Chittenden Brook on the old woodroad that doubles as the summer and winter trail. The icicles on the ledges overhanging the trail had grown huge, and this part of the trail was especially pretty. We followed recent tracks as far as the pretty beaver pond. Beyond that, no one had ventured since the previous week's snowstorm, but the going wasn't bad in about two feet of snow. Some of the downhill in wet, heavy snow taxed the meager skill of the skier, but he only ended up in one embarrassing position. He made up for this by greatly outdistancing the snowshoers on the downhill leg of the ski trail circle. The only other problem was encountered by the only dog, who cut his paws on some crusty spots but didn't seem to mind much. There was only very slight damage from the January ice storm.

About the only wildlife noted were chickadees and a woodpecker. Despite the warmth of the day, there were almost no animal tracks. Maybe they had been out earlier in the morning before the thin crust melted and thus left no tracks.

Killington Section Board of Directors Meeting*By Jean Davies, Secretary*

The March 10, 1998 board meeting was held at Herb Ogden's home with the following present: President Herb Ogden, Jake Sherman, Ray Catozzi, Sue Thomas, Treasurer Alfred Pulling, Sue Carey, and Secretary Jean Davies.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved after correcting the dates. m/s/p Sue Carey, Al Pulling. Killington Section members pay their dues to Al Pulling, treasurer, who forwards the amount owed to the main club.

With the new dues system, the status of 30-year members who automatically became life-members, is cloudy. The following are exempt from paying dues as 30-year members: Raymond Catozzi, Rachael Charland, Ellen B. Russell, W. Churchill Scott, Ira/Lorraine Hawley, John/Janet Martin, Robert/Thelma Perkins.

Life members are: Herbert/Hannah Ogden, Catherine Thomas, Gerald Parker, Joan Sibley, and David Wright. To date, the higher dues have not had an apparent effect on the Killington Section membership. Motion: Anyone who was a member for 30 years at the time the GMC main club credited them as being a life members should be considered a life member for the Killington Section as of December 31, 1997. m/s/p Sue Thomas, Jean Davies. Motion: To establish the status of George Reynolds. He should be on the above list. m/s/p unanimously. Al Pulling, Sue Thomas.

Ray Catozzi will remain on the board until his term expires in 1999. Sue Carey resigned. Motion: I move to replace Sue Carey with Jake Sherman. m/s/p unanimously. Sue Thomas, Ray Catozzi. A discussion followed on filling other upcoming vacancies.

Membership. There were 34 members of the Killington Section at this time in 1997. As of March 1, 1998 there are 52 members, although some are families. There are many new people.

Finances. The cost of getting out Smoke & Blazes including stamps runs around $80 to $90 per issue. Finances seem stable for 1998 at this time. Motion: Phil Smith should urge the GMC directors to investigate ways people can belong to two sections without paying double dues. m/s/p Al Pulling, Ray Catozzi.

The Board went on record as thanking Sue Carey, Sue Thomas, Jean Davies, and Ray Catozzi for their service on the board, and Rob Carey for his hard work as editor of Smoke & Blazes.

Vice President Phil Smith sent his report for the Killington Section. It appears that less traffic will be around Pico this year. The blasting that hikers complained of last year was for the pipeline (probably snowmaking and sewage). Phil is a GMC Director. The GMC Annual Meeting will be held June 13. The GMC directors are considering a proposal for three expansion phases, including a staff of 30. Our board wondered if we wanted more paid staff in a volunteer organization. The initial GMC plan was for a big push to pay the mortgage on the new headquarters, then put energy back into the trails. Jake Sherman will write up our concerns for the Annual Meeting.

Governor Clement Road

Discussion of Gov. Clement Road landowner contracts dealt with the question of "throwing up" the road and installing a gate during the hiking season. This would allow landowners to unlock it, but keep out the problem pickup trucks. The snowmobilers are using it responsibly in the winter.

Jerry Parker contacted some landowners who seemed satisfied with the idea. Herb planned to contact others.

Dave Hardy is GMC's Southern Coordinator. He hopes to develop a new Pico trail this summer. Discussion: whether help from other Sections should be accepted. The Killington Section has always maintained the old trail. We don't have a signed agreement with the main club about contacting us and working through us on trail maintenance to agree on changes and work crews.

There are plans to avoid the Juggernaut ski trail. The GMC would like our help on a two thirds mile stretch involved with the relocation of the main trail and the Appalachian Trail. It is flagged. Gary Salmon may have his crew working on it this summer. If asked, Killington Section should help with work parties.

Cooper Lodge is the responsibility of the main club. Ruth Cooper Lamb sent a card regarding its future and the interest of the Cooper family in it. She wrote, "If the current Cooper Lodge is to be maintained, the ski area needs to agree to oversee its winter use. If that can't be worked out, we urge abandoning it and rebuilding a lodge or lean-to somewhere . . ." The family would support a new building serving Pico and Killington which would retain the Cooper name in memory of her grandfather. Motion: We encourage the ski area to do more on the upkeep of Cooper Lodge. m/s/p Jake Sherman, Al Pulling.

Herb noted our Section By-laws need revision. Since all members can vote, the last sentence in Article 2 saying they shall be at least 18 years old should be deleted. And Article 14 should be deleted on account of uniform dues. Other items will be discussed at the Annual Meeting.

Trails: Ice damage trail work may take precedence over helping the GMC with new trail work between Route 140 and Button Hill. An exemption will be needed to use power tools in the National Forest. We should keep our eyes open for ice damage on the trails and report the location.

The U.S. Forestry Service is thinking of making some changes on the Cauty Trail on Blue Ridge. Herb will look into it. Discussion on the meeting place and parking problem for Killington Section hikes remains unresolved. Burlington's guidelines on Difficulty Ratings as guidelines for our hikes should be used in the outing schedule. The new GMC trip leader guidelines booklet will be lent to new hike leaders. Sue Thomas will continue work on a form for new members. Phil Smith and Jean Davies will pursue the ideas of Fox Room programs at the Rutland Library. Jake Sherman will talk with Jim Davidson of the Rutland Historical Society about possible storage of Killington Section archives.

Volunteers Step Forward; More Needed!

by Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters Committee Chair

I am happy to report a substantial response to this year's plea for volunteers. We have a new editor for Smoke & Blazes. She is Kim Armstrong, a Plymouth resident who owns her own public relations business. Nine other people volunteered for the following (the total is more than nine because some were willing to do more than one thing): Trail work (9), Shelter work (6), Signmaking (3), and Publications (1).

Unfortunately, no one volunteered to lead outings or help with public education. Nobody stepped forward at the Section Annual Meeting, either. Bob Perkins, a new member of our board, did agree to become Section Historian, however.

If you haven't signed up for trail or shelter work but want to help in that department, just show up for a work party, or, if the work parties don't mesh with your schedule, call me at 775-1350 (evenings) or 775-3368 (days) and I will put you to work. If you are interested in other work for the Section, please call. We especially need someone to coordinate trail and shelter work in my stead. We are the only Section where the President is also the Trails & Shelters Chair, and I would like that distinction to end as soon as possible.

Lowland Walk-Through

By Herb Ogden, leader

An unusually good turnout of volunteers allowed us to check all the Long Trail from Wallingford Gulf almost to Consultation Point (north of Gov. Clement Shelter) and fix most of the problems we found. For the first time in years, we also freshened up some of the trail blazes during a walk-through. We left this part of the LT in good to excellent condition.

Remaining tasks include improving the signage and blazing so hikers won't miss Minerva Hinchey Shelter and Clarendon Shelter, moving the full privy at the latter, adding stepping stones in the cow pasture south of the Lottery Road in Shrewsbury, rerouting a short stretch near Hermit Spring, fixing wet spots on both sides of the Keiffer Road, adding waterbars to the ascents between the Cold River Roads, repairing steps on a hill south of Gov. Clement Shelter, and repainting numerous blazes. Please contact Trails & Shelters Chair Herb Ogden (home phone 775-1350) if you are interested in any of these projects.

Highland Walk-Through

By Herb Ogden, leader

Earlier in the spring, we had visions of spending days clearing trails that the Vermont state authorities and the Appalachian Trail Conference had told us were severely damaged in the January ice storm. As it turned out, however, the tales of ice damage were greatly exaggerated, and we had a very successful bunch of work parties on National Trails Day.

Some of us, including Bill Robichaud and Jerry Parker, got a head start on the annual inspection of the Long Trail in the Coolidge Range during May. Also, three volunteers with chainsaws from the Killington Ski Area cleared all the bigger blowdowns from Cooper Lodge to Sherburne Pass. When the date for the Walk-Through rolled around, most of the Bucklin Trail and the LT north of Cooper Lodge were already done. We had enough people to form three good-sized work parties. One, led by Greg Western from the Waterbury office, went from Cooper Lodge to Consultation Point, thoroughly clearing the trail and cleaning waterbars, some of which had been neglected for years. One, led by Bob Perkins, finished trimming the trail from Cooper Lodge to Sherburne Pass and freshened up the blazes between Cooper and Pico. One, led by Herb Ogden, ventured outside the Killington Section's usual area and tackled the north end of the Shrewsbury Peak Trail. This is nominally maintained by Farm & Wilderness Camps, but it looked like the ice storm damage south of Shrewsbury Peak would keep them busy for some time, so we decided to help out. The part of the Shrewsbury Peak Trail we worked on has seen little or no maintenance since at least 1986 and was so grown-in that walking parts of it was like swimming through spruce. We cleared it to GMC standards south to a point about ¼ mile south of the gap between Little Killington and Shrewsbury Peaks. The trail up in the saddle leading to the south peak had some old blowdowns but was nowhere near as bad as the trail from Shrewsbury Peak Jct. down to the gap.

Remaining tasks on this part of the LT include adding puncheon or stepping stones in wet areas about 1 mile north of Gov. Clement Shelter and about 1 mile south of Pico Camp, moving the Pico privy to a new hole because the old one is nearly full, adding still more waterbars, and repainting the blazes from Cooper Lodge south to Gov. Clement Shelter. Please contact Trails & Shelters Chair Herb Ogden (home phone 775-1350) if you are interested in any of these projects.

On this Walk-Through, we had help from not only our own volunteers but also from a dozen people that the Eastern Mountain Sports store in Lebanon, New Hampshire had recruited for National Trails Day. Many thanks to EMS Assistant Manager Greg Greene, of Bridgewater, for providing the majority of our work force this day. Thanks also to Killington, Ltd. not only for its volunteers but also for giving our work party free passage on the new Killington Gondola and a free barbecue after work was done.

Connecticut Canoe

By Eric Deutschbein, leader

Though only four people from the section attended, this trip with the Ottaquechee section was certainly well worth the effort. Our two boats were joined by seven from the Ottaquechee gang, and after vehicles were shifted and equipment accounted for, we set off from the base of Wilder Dam.

The river was up some, but a glance at the bank showed that it had very recently been two to three feet higher. The current was quite strong, though not nearly dangerous. In fact, this made paddling much easier and we finished the trip at least an hour quicker than would normally be expected. We were also able to float with impunity over gravel bars that would normally require either fancy maneuvering or canoe dragging (with consequent wet toes).

Below White River Junction we passed through some minor rapids, and went past a couple of small islands. The sun had broken forth just as we had started down-river and everyone seemed to enjoy themselves immensely. There was not a lot of wildlife to be seen, some ducks of course and a hawk or two. I don't even recall seeing a turkey vulture, which is odd, as I have seen many who seem very fond of the Connecticut on past canoe trips.

We stopped for lunch and a swim at Sumner Falls, which is actually just rapids. A kayaker was playing on the waves, but we all chose the better part of valor. After the "falls," the river widens somewhat and the current is correspondingly a bit slower, but we still made good time to the take-out point, just above the Windsor covered bridge on the New Hampshire side.

Getting all the boats on the vehicles was somewhat of an adventure, mostly due to the exceptionally slimy mud on the riverbank. But of course we somehow managed, and our adventure came to a close. Many thanks to Mary Ellen, Doug and Marta for attending, as well as the members of the Ottaquechee section. A special thanks is due to Doug, who stayed up half the night before the trip devising a method to transport his canoe on a different truck, as his had died the day before!

Hurricane Mountain, Adirondacks - Joint Bread Loaf/Killington Hike

By Gordon and Helen Cawood, leaders

Trip was cancelled due to a forecast of rain and thunderstorms. We had only one disappointed caller, Mary Ellen Zisis (Killington). No one showed up at the scheduled meeting place. P.S. Sue Thomas (Killington) was in Adirondack Loj at the time. She reports that the weather was so bad she could not go hiking that day.

Canty Trail Work Party

By Herb Ogden, leader

This work day was originally scheduled to take care of any remaining ice storm damage on the Killington Section, but that was all done a month or more before. This gave us the luxury of sending a full-fledged work party all the way to the top of Blue Ridge Mountain for the first time since the Killington Section formally took over maintenance of this trail from the late Craigie Perkins about ten years ago.

Most of our time was spent digging silt out of old water-bars and adding new ones. There had been few above the falls that are two-thirds of the way up the trail. We also cleared a half-dozen blowdowns, trimmed brush, and mowed a considerable stretch of the old logging road just south of the U. S. Forest Service boundary. Finally, we spent a lot of time sawing off the ugly, high tree stumps that had been left at the summit and hauling the brush off into the woods. The trail also has a new register just north of Tall Timbers Camp. My late father made it about thirty years ago, and I thought it was about time to put it to good use.

Tasks remaining include repainting the blazes, adding puncheon or stepping stones in wet places in the first half mile, and scouting a switchbacked reroute between the U. S. Forest Service boundary and the falls so as to avoid a very steep and eroded stretch. Please contact Trails & Shelters Chair Herb Ogden (home phone 775-1350) if you are interested in any of these projects.

Mount Equinox (Hike & Camp)

By Eric Deutschbein, leader

The weather for this trip was quite questionable, perhaps accounting for the miserable turnout. Though the forecast said warm and sunny, the undeniable reality was cloudy and on the coolish side. Only Sue Thomas and Mary Ellen Zizis joined me for the hike up, and Sue returned to Rutland leaving only two to camp.

The climb up the steep Burr and Burton (or "Blue") Trail was, as always, a stern test for even the most fit. We kept a steady pace though, and stopped only briefly on the way, once at the Upper Spring, which unfortunately has suffered from the intervention of mankind and now sports a huge PVC pipe where it comes out of the mountain.

We found the weather at the top to be windy, cold and clammy, but the excellent view and close proximity of a hot dog vendor on the porch of the Equinox Hotel was enough to make us hang around for lunch. We were treated to the unique sight of a miniature rain squall working its way along the back side of a nearby ridge and right up to our location, but it was such a light shower that I had to insist that it really had not rained at all.

We descended the mountain via the Bear Town (or "Ridge") Trail, which is one of my favorite trails anywhere. Much of it is the actual ridge of the north side of the mountain, and you have some views to both sides, blocked only by the trees. After a couple of miles we came out on a truck trail and returned the last mile to the "civilized" part of Bear Town Road.

Sue then departed, and Mary Ellen and I loaded our gear into my truck and set off for a camping spot I had spotted on the way down. We cleared off two small spots on an overgrown log trail to set up our tents, and gathered some of the dead limbs around us for a fire. Most of the wood was of poor quality (being softwoods tossed aside by loggers), but a section of perfectly seasoned beech saved the day and cooked Mary Ellen's "campfire stew" just fine (you really have to try this stuff!).

We went to sleep as soon as the sun did, with vague hopes of a possible moonlight hike down the truck trail in the backs of our minds. Though the moon was near full, it was riding low in the sky (being a waning moon, two days past full) and the desired illumination just wasn't there, with the mountain itself cutting off much of the light.

The scheduled work party with the Equinox Preservation Trust for Sunday had been canceled (by them) on short notice, so after a hearty breakfast at Mrs. Murphy's Donuts, we took a stroll up to Lye Brook Falls. This is a relatively short hike to a very tall, "staggered" falls in a steep ravine. The weather on Sunday was also considerably brighter, and it was a good end to the weekend.

Little Rock Pond

By Roma Pulling, leader

Little Rock being one of the most popular destinations on the Long Trail, it wasn't surprising that we were part of a very large group there on the day of our hike. I counted thirty hikers and then gave up. Alfred and I later estimated there must have been at least fifty in the area. Some were Middlebury College freshman on an orientation outing.

In the morning when we met five other people at the park, the skies were cloudy. Happily, it soon cleared off and was a beautiful, sunny day, perfect for hiking. We drove in three cars to South Wallingford, where three hikers got out and waited while the three drivers left to spot two cars at Big Branch parking area in Mt. Tabor, where we planned to end our hike.

When the drivers returned in one car, we were waiting at the Little Red Schoolhouse, which provides a parking area for hikers. This is the beginning of the Homer Stone Brook Trail, an alternate route to the pond. It proved to be a good choice because we met no other hikers and enjoyed having it to ourselves.

On reaching the pond and threading our way through the groups of people, we sat at the edge of the pond near the tenting area and ate our lunch. One hiker even went in swimming, but this late in the summer it wasn't a popular activity. After a leisurely break, we made our way south from the pond to the Big Branch area and our cars.

REPORT OF THE KILLINGTON SECTION TO THE GREEN MOUNTAIN CLUB 1998 ANNUAL MEETING

The Killington Section maintains the Long Trail from Wallingford Gulf (Vt. 140) north to Sherburne Pass (U.S. 4), the Killington Spur Trail, the Bucklin Trail, and the Pico Link Trail. We also maintain the Cauty Trail up Blue Ridge Mountain, which is no longer part of the Long Trail System. This amounts to 21.6 miles of Long Trail and 6.4 miles of side trails. Although most of the shelters in our section have good adopters, the Section as a whole has also worked on structures as needed.

We usually have three or four work parties per year. In the last six years, at least 81 people (not including staff) have participated in at least one, and we have registered at least 151 days of volunteer labor. Since November 1992, some people have participated in sixteen or more work parties. In the last year, we had three work parties and 24 new volunteers. Many of them came to us through a National Trails Day promotion by the Eastern Mountain Sports store in Lebanon, N.H. Through this EMS store, the GMC is also receiving $1,000. It will probably be used for puncheon on a long boggy stretch in the Killington-Pico saddle.

Aside from our primary mission of maintaining trails and shelters, we promote outdoor involvement and education by offering about one activity per week. Most are day hikes, but we also offer an overnight, some ski tours, a few bicycle and canoe trips, a Fall Potluck, and the April Annual Meeting. We try to reduce use of the Long Trail by scheduling most outings elsewhere, often on trails or old roads known only to the outing leader. The most-attended event this year was the Eighth Annual Taconics Ramble, which drew at least 27 people to Kit Davidson's Japanese gardens and craggy trails in Hubbardton. Our Annual Meeting drew 22, and our Coolidge Range work party (helped mightily by EMS) drew a record 19 for a work party. In the last year, we had 40 outings, attended by about 391 people.

Challenges for the coming year include moving or replacing Pico Camp (which is to be under a new ski lift), working with Cooper Lodge's adopters to avoid its demolition, finding some way to hinder vehicles from reaching Gov. Clement Shelter without antagonizing nearby landowners, updating our trail signs, helping with three major relocations, and recruiting new members to replace those (including two of the last three Section Presidents) who quit rather than pay Uniform Dues.

The Section is run by a nine member Board of Directors limited to two consecutive three year terms. We are having difficulty attracting people for the harder jobs such as Trails and Shelters Chair, especially because people do not want to deal with paperwork. We did, however, just have the first contested election for a Board seat in at least the last dozen years. We also finally have a Section Historian who is preserving our records and wonderful old photographs.

At its Annual Meeting, the Section overwhelmingly resolved that it "views with concern the rapid growth and expansion of GMC headquarters in Waterbury," especially the proposal to spend $300,000 to $450,000 for what would essentially be a new headquarters. The resolution said "the other concern involves the rapid growth of the headquarters staff." At the Section Presidents' Meeting and through its representatives on the Sections Committee, we have cautioned against asking our members and donors for too much. We have urged the GMC leadership to consider proposed new staff positions in light of whether the Sections and other volunteers can do what the new staffer is supposed to do, and whether the new staffer's proposed job is essential to the GMC.

I am pleased to see that the new GMC President is more attentive to the needs and wishes of the Sections, and much more respectful of their feelings, than his three immediate predecessors. I think he is ushering in a new era of cooperation and understanding between the club leadership and the Sections. I hope the GMC Board of Directors supports this improvement.

VOLUNTEERS FOR PEACE IMPROVE LOCAL TRAILS

By Herb Ogden

As they have for several years, the Volunteers for Peace gave us two days of their time for trail projects. Their first day was 3 August. Led by Herb Ogden, they tackled the Deer Leap Trail from near Willard Gap to Little Deer Leap. While this trail had been cleared enough so that it could be followed despite the horrible January ice storm damage, much clearing remained to be done. Ten young volunteers from Belgium, England, France, Greece, Japan, Philadelphia (no, this is not a mistake) and Scotland spent five hours bringing this trail up to GMC standards, sawing and trimming countless limbs that had fallen into or bent over the trail in the ice storm. They also cleared out many waterbars both on the above stretch of trail and also from Little Deer Leap to Maine Junction.

On their second day, 4 August, the volunteers were led by Bob Perkins. They opened an approximately .1 mile relocation of the LT around Hermit Spring, which had been a "footbath" in the wilderness" even in summer. They also worked on wet areas on both sides of the Lottery Road.

This year's volunteers were unusually friendly and capable, and it was a pleasure working with them.

Smoke & Blazes

Volume 51, Number 3

Killington Section - Green Mountain Club

December 1998

Killington Section, GMC, Director's Meeting October 27, 1998, 7 p.m.

The meeting was held at the home of Pres. Herb Ogden with the following present: Herb Ogden, Ray Catozzi, Bob Perkins, Al Pulling, Bill Robichaud, Phil Smith, Linda Smith, Ruth Gibbud, Connie Youngstrom, and Jake Sherman.

Approval of Minutes: The minutes of both the March 10, 1998 Directors' Meeting as well as those of the annual meeting, having previously appeared in Smoke & Blazes, were unanimously approved with no corrections or additions. m/s/p Phil Smith, Al Pulling Treasurer's Report: Al Pulling reported a balance in the checking account of $100.94 as of this date. This will increase by approximately $308 when the section is reimbursed by the main club for materials used in constructing a new outhouse to replace one destroyed by fire at Gov. Clement Shelter.

Long Trail Relocation Report: Bill Robichaud reported on the many relocation projects currently being carried out by the GMC within the Killington Section. Bill has been working closely with the GMC people and doing much volunteer work himself. It is estimated that as much as half of the section's approximately 20 miles are to be relocated. It is anticipated that all of this work can be completed by the end of next year.

Some of the major portions being relocated include:

1. from U.S. 4, well west of Sherburne pass, up the west side of Pico, a section of new trail close to 4 miles long.
2. the section from Gov. Clement Shelter north to Consultation Point would be relocated to the west.
3. between Rtes. 140 and 103 the trail would again be relocated to the west along Bear Mountain and would cross 140 west of its present location.
4. Little Killington where a relo would allow the LT to avoid crossing the Juggernaut ski trail.
5. north of U.S. 4 up back side of Deer Leap

Mtn. into Willard Gap (this stretch is officially outside the KS's maintenance area).

PICO CAMP: The section will recommend to the GMC that no attempt be made to move Pico Camp. It was the unanimous view that the shelter is in too poor a condition to withstand removal to another site. Killington had offered to do this when its helicopters begin working the site in connection with extensive ski trail development. American Skiing Company has reportedly offered $5,000 to help build a shelter or tent platform in another location, and it was felt this should be pursued.

CONTINUED KILLINGTON SECTION MAINTENANCE: After much discussion it was passed unanimously that for the time being responsibility for maintaining all trails within the Section including several miles of new rels would continue to rest with the Killington Section. (m/s/p Ray Catozzi, Bob Perkins). This was in response to concern that with slim work party turnouts the extra burden may be beyond our capabilities.

KS ARCHIVES: Jake Sherman will check with Jim Davidson of the Rutland Historical Society about a permanent home for the club's archives with the Society. Bob Perkins, our historian, urged that an agreement be worked out with RHS whereby they would preserve and order the material but we would be allowed to borrow it back out for programs and such. The archives presently consist of a complete run of Smoke & Blazes, LT News and account books but could come to include scrapbooks and photo albums.

SMOKE & BLAZES: There was positive reaction to Smoke & Blazes under the new editorship of Kim Armstrong. The names of directors will be included in upcoming issues for ease of contact.

NOMINATIONS: Herb Ogden urged the group to think of a good potential nominee to replace Ray Catozzi, whose second term is expiring in 1999. Since it is a second

GMC DIRECTOR'S REPORT:

GMC Director Phil Smith reported on the last main club meeting which occurred Sept. 19 in Waterbury. Discussion at that time focused on a proposal for the GMC to buy all or part of a sizeable tract of upwards of 40 acres of land adjacent to the headquarters complex which may soon be coming on the market. The price of this land would be in the $300,000-$400,000 range. The acquisition, contend those who support it, would provide a number of expansion opportunities at the main club site and protect against potential adverse development.

This is in addition to ongoing plans and proposals to upgrade and expand the present headquarters building which appear at present could cost upwards of another $100,000.

These developments were received with concern. There was unanimous consensus that spending significant club money to "preserve the view" was not a legitimate club function. There also was unanimous consent that: (a) a proposed 12-mile "connecting trail" from Waterbury headquarters to LT was a "separate question" from the land purchase, and (b) it was difficult to support purchase of extra land before determining if presently owned land were sufficient to support the club's planned uses.

Phil also reported that the 400-member New York Section was contemplating seceding from the GMC over the uniform dues issues.

TRAILS & SHELTERS CHAIR:

Herb again asked for a volunteer to be the Trails & Shelters Chairman. It is burdensome for him to continue to have to fulfill this role while serving as section president.

GOV. CLEMENT SHELTER: The masonry is in need of repair. It was agreed Herb will pursue a possible grant for this work from the Appalachian Trail Conference (ATC). The shelter is perhaps the oldest on the present AT. If a grant is not forthcoming, consideration will be given to doing the job ourselves out of the Kirk Fund.

Meanwhile, vandalism at the shelter continues to be a problem. In August the privy was burned. A new one was prefabricated by Jerry Parker and set in place by Jerry and Roy Arthur at a cost for materials of $308.39 which will be reimbursed by the GMC. The center post supporting the roof overhang also was pulled down by vandals. This will be replaced by Roy Arthur. Herb has been in touch with landowners in the area concerning putting up a closed gate during hiking season.

BY-LAWS CHANGES: It was unanimously approved to recommend to the membership at the annual meeting changes in two of the section's 14 by-laws. (m/s/p Bob Perkins/Ray Catozzi). These changes would eliminate the provision in Article 2 that only members over 18 can vote and eliminate Article 14 entirely since it deals with dues which are now entirely in the control of Waterbury.

GROUP SIZE POLICIES: Among proposed amendments coming out of a recent section presidents' meeting were several dealing with size of day-hiking groups. One in particular called for there to be a leader for every four hikers rather than the present 10 hikers. It was unanimously agreed that a ratio of one leader to every six hikers would be more workable and reasonable (m/s/p Bob Perkins/Phil Smith).

CLARENDON GORGE: Bob Perkins expressed concern over the possible sale of the lower part of Clarendon Gorge Near Rte. 7 and possible subsequent restriction to the public. He is pursuing this matter.

COOPER LODGE: Damage and trashing to this historic CCC-built cabin, high on the west slope of Killington, by skiers continues to be a problem. Talk continues of having to abandon the shelter if there is no improvement in the situation. The issue is how much supervision of the structure is Killington prepared to undertake. It was suggested meanwhile that a sturdier latch would be helpful. Herb will pursue this.

LIFE MEMBERSHIP: It was moved and seconded (Al Pulling, Ray Catozzi) that George Reynolds, having been a 30-year member of the Killington Section, be adopted as a life member of the GMC. In order to obtain more info about present dues policies of the GMC as they relate to life membership, it was moved to table the motion to the next meeting. (m/s/p Ruth Gibbud/Phil Smith).

PUBLICITY: There have been some problems with hike publicity during the past month. Ray Catozzi agreed to keep the Rutland Herald informed and Ruth Gibbud will do the same for The Mountain Times.

The meeting was adjourned at 9:50 p.m. The next Director's meeting was scheduled for Tuesday, February 2, 1999.

Respectfully submitted,
Jake Sherman,
Secretary

ARSON!

by Herb Ogden

We regret to announce that the Lieutenant Governor Jarvis Snodgrass Memorial Gazebo, otherwise known as the outhouse at the Percival W. Clement Memorial Shelter, was lost to arson this summer. It was the only two-holer on the LT. Its first career was as a residential privy in Humble Hollow in Shrewsbury. In August 1966, my late father and I bought it for $5 (or $2.50 per hole), trucked it to Gov. Clement, painted it white, added a window, and gave it a name to match the shelter's grandiloquent one. We got so many inquiries about its namesake that we had to fabricate a biography of Lt. Gov. Snodgrass. We even had Jarvis Snodgrass Memorial Excursions whenever the first of April fell on a weekend. Alas, a few inconsiderate partygoers have put an end to this pilgrimage spot.

The burned "gazebo" has been replaced by a very serviceable outhouse, which Jerry Parker prefabricated based on plans obtained from the Ottauquechee Section and modified to give the "head" a little more head room. Jerry and shelter adopter Roy Arthur trucked it in and built it soon after hearing that the old structure had burned.

Apparently at the same time as the arson, someone tried to destroy the front of the shelter itself. The middle support for the overhang was yanked out, probably with the help of a vehicle. It was probably burned, as no trace has been found. It appears there was an attempt to yank out the corner support. Luckily, it failed, and the overhang did not collapse. How people can get their kicks from trying to destroy the oldest shelter on the Long Trail is beyond me. We would like to find the criminals and have the State teach them a lesson, but there are unfortunately no leads.

All this has given new impetus to a project the U.S. Forest Service and the GMC thought of a few years ago: trying to persuade the Town of Shrewsbury to allow a gate on the Gov. Clement Road (probably just south of the first brook crossing), to be locked in hiking season. The owners of the three camps between the brook crossings would have keys. Several landowners on the road welcome this idea. Anyone who has thoughts about this is asked to contact Section President Herb Ogden at 775-1350 evenings.

FALL POTLUCK WITH FORESTER

by Herb Ogden, eater

Linda Smith ran this by remote control, otherwise known as Sue Thomas, so I guess I have to write the article. Attendance was less than usual, possibly because we were competing with a contra dance, a Unitarian-Universalist coffee house, and another concert, but the food was if anything more sumptuous than usual, and the program was first-rate. Gary Salmon, a State Forester in the Department of Forest, Parks & Recreation, gave an interesting slide lecture on trail work and how the woods affect us all. Among the most interesting photos were those of rock work on the new relocation of the LT north of Consultation Point on Little Killington and those of sliding a doped sow bear out of its winter den as part of a study on how ski areas affect bears. Also, Ray Catozzi brought a couple the Section's old scrapbooks, and many of us enjoyed looking at the photos from as far back as the nineteen teens.

Many thanks to the Econo-Lodge at Pico for again letting us use their downstairs fireplace lounge for the event!

the views to the east were magnificent.

Upon reaching the ridge top I found the first heard paths of the hike. Ten minutes later I had made the summit!

Because of the thickness of the woods and the need to use the compass with discipline, this bushwack is one of the most rewarding climbs of a lesser hiked peak, on the New England highest hundred list.

PANTHER PEAK ADIRONDACK PARK, NEW YORK

24 October 1998

by Ron Kirschbaum

Panther Peak at 4,442', is the 18th highest peak in New York. Because of its location in the western part of the park, it affords views of Mt. Marcy and at least 23 other 4,000-footers that can only be seen from it and Sananoni Mountain to the south.

The trailhead is located two miles south of the abandoned mining village of Tahawus. (Well worth checking out.)

We had beautiful weather for this hike, no clouds and deep blue skies!

After following a very muddy trail to Bradley Pond, we then followed an unmaintained trail to the summit. This trail proved to be in better condition than many maintained trails. The last half mile of this hike is above tree-line, and we had 360 degree views. We spend a good hour at the summit and then headed for the lower elevations and the mud!

BRIDGEWATER GOLD MINE

by Herb Ogden, Leader

A good-sized group of treasure seekers showed up on this fine fall afternoon. By the time we reached the trailhead on the Daley Hollow Road, the group was a little smaller. One veteran hiker misunderstood the rendezvous in Bridgewater Corner. He spent some time looking for us in locales as distant as Chateaugay (pronounced "chat-a-ghee"), then gave up and took his passenger on a different hike. They found just as much gold as we did.

From the Daley Hollow Road, the old road used to go to the Pioneer Mine and others. After climbing up a narrow valley with an impressive stone wall on the other side, we turned off the old road at the first house foundation on the right, where daylilies still grow. After identifying a few pieces of iron that were in the cellarhole or near it, we walked uphill a couple hundred feet to a much larger foundation. I think Churchill Scott once said it was probably the remains of a boardinghouse for the miners. Whatever it was, it's a huge three-sided structure dug into the hillside. Below it is a big barn foundation. A little farther east, below a lane, is the actual mine.

SMOKE & BLAZES ENDS

for you, if you don't renew your membership for 1999. If you don't want this to be your last issue, please use the membership form to send your dues to Treasurer Al Pulling, 883 U.S. Rt. 4 East, Rutland VT 05701. The GMC and the Section appreciate your support for the Long Trail and our activities.

The mine, which has no name on the 1869 Beers Atlas, is a level, dry shaft extending maybe 200' into the hill. It is the longest shaft I know of in Bridgewater. Someone had placed candles at strategic intervals. We lit them as we walked along, and the scene was pretty. Toward the end of the shaft, we encountered quite a number of hibernating bats hanging from the ceiling of the shaft. (Made a note not to visit the place so late in the fall as to disturb the furry little fliers.) The last one out blew out the candles. We then stood on the heap of tailings at the shaft's mouth and puzzled about a circular foundation that looked to be partly buried, inspected the barn foundation closer to the old road, and returned to the cars.

The road actually continues up the valley past at least two more mines and a small cellarhole. Along with Mara Carey, Killington Section member Channing Bickford and I explored this earlier in the fall. Unfortunately, after we gained maybe another hundred feet of elevation, we encountered the results of the January ice storm in full force. We slithered under trunks, clambered over them, pushed through branches, and occasionally had to make considerable detours away from the road to avoid the destruction. Consequently, I decided not to lead any official hikes farther up the road until either saws or rot clear the way again.

BRIDGEWATER HOLLOW HILL ROAD

by Herb Ogden, Leader

No, "Bridgewater Hollow Hill" is not one of the Bridgewater hills that was hollowed out by gold seekers. As far as I know and the old maps show, there were no gold mines east of the North Branch of the Ottauquechee River, and we kept to the east of that. Instead, it's my name for the partly abandoned road from Bridgewater Village north to Bridgewater Hollow. Even Roma Pulling, whose great-grandfather lived on a branch from this road down to Bridgewater Center, didn't know the proper name for this road. Does anyone?

We began at a sharp turn where the only maintained road veers east. Heading about due north, we reached Bridgewater Hollow in about 3.3 miles. We passed two ruined camps and two active ones. In that same distance, the 1868 H.B. Thompson map of Bridgewater (sold at the Bridgewater Center store) shows 11 houses and two schools. Curiously, the 1869 Beers Atlas shows only seven houses and one school. I assume that, while the Thompson map was published in 1868, the survey was done earlier, because it is hard to imagine four houses and a school disappearing in just one year. By the time of the first U.S. Geological Survey quadrangle in 1911, only the Bridgewater Hollow school remained. Now that is gone, too. Although abandoned, the road is a major snowmobile route, but most of the old cellarholes are obscure enough so that the motorized folks probably never realize they are traversing an old neighborhood except when they see the Kellogg-Bassett cemetery.

Heading north from the Gold Coast Road, we at first passed some open fields, then climbed moderately through hardwoods past several old house sites. In about a mile, in a little clearing, we reached an abandoned camp where a side trail went east. We crossed a little brook and very soon reached another clearing, where a side road leads down to Bridgewater Center past the farm where Roma's great-grandfather lived. Soon after that, at the height of land, we reached the Kellogg-Bassett burying ground. Although it is large, there appears to have been many years when it was poorly maintained, to judge from stumps of trees and brush. Many of the graves are marked only by unscrubbed fieldstones. Some of the inscribed stones are unusual, like the one showing a funeral obelisk. The Vermont Old Cemeteries Association book says the earliest grave is from 1813 and the latest from 1865.

At a sunny noontime, we lunched near a still-maintained camp, about ¼ mile north of the cemetery. A partly filled-in cellarhole was at the edge of its lawn, and it had a pretty little pond too. Less than half a mile farther north, just before what the 1966 U.S.G.S. quad says is a trail to Montague Hill, we found a cellarhole identified as "A.L. Allen & Co." in the 1869 atlas. It was actually a double cellarhole. We speculated that, when the owner enlarged the house, he simply added another cellar rather than disturb the existing cellar wall. Around here, we saw that a bobcat had followed the old road a ways. So had either a coyote or a dog that was far from home and master.

Killington Section, GMC, Director's Meeting February 16, 1999 - 7 p.m.

The meeting was held at the home of President Herb Ogden, 20 Birchwood Ave., Rutland, with the following present: Herb Ogden, Ray Catozzi, Bob Perkins, Al Pulling, Phil Smith, Connie Youngstrom, Jake Sherman, and special guest Dave Hardy, director of field operations for the GMC.

Treasurer's Report:

Al Pulling reported $972.29 in the checking account and $524.17 in interest from the Kirk Fund. There also is $1,317.58 in a Chittenden Bank savings account.

Section Membership:

Al reported that as of this date, 16 individual memberships had been renewed as well as five family memberships. The section has 15 life members. Al noted that the Killington Section lost 40 members when the main club went to uniform dues.

Archives Agreement:

Section historian Bob Perkins negotiated an agreement with the Rutland Historical Society to house our archives which presently consist of scrapbooks, photo albums, back runs of Smoke and Blazes, and other memorabilia. A motion to adopt the agreement (m/s/p Bob Perkins, Jake Sherman) was passed unanimously. Bob suggested that the historical society might be interested in a history of the section for one of its upcoming quarterlies.

Smoke & Blazes:

The next issue is due in March. This will be the last issue current members receive unless they renew. Jake Sherman will include a reminder that hike leaders or their designees are responsible for submitting written hike reports to the editor.

Director Candidates:

Ray Catozzi's term is expiring, and he is not eligible for re-election. The names of a number of individuals who would be qualified to fill this slot were mentioned. The new director to replace Ray will be elected at the section annual meeting April 24.

GMC Field Operations Report:

Dave Hardy gave an extensive report covering relocation work within the section and several other topics. He reported that the GMC had a lot of staff members working on the various rels within the section and that they hoped to complete two of the major ones, Pico and Bear Mountain, this year.

Pico Relocation - The game plan is to have the approximately five-mile relo from Willard Gap north of U.S. 4 to just south of Pico Peak open by September. The new trail will swing well to the west and will intersect the highway near Beaver Pond. An old logging road bridge on the trailhead at U.S. 4 will be replaced by a narrower bridge that will serve both the LT and the Catamount Trail. Dave felt the new Rte. 4 crossing would be safer than the present one at the top of the pass. He did not envision any kind of pedestrian overpass at the site. Meanwhile, Pico Camp will be spared for at least another year due to delays in American Skiing Company's development plans. However, the privy needs to be moved this year.

Bear Mountain Relocation - It is also hoped Bear Mountain will be completed by September. A lot of "side hilling" up the south side has been done. The new section will offer plentiful vistas to the west and a nice bald outcrop of rock. It will cross Vt. 140 $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile west of the present crossing. The old route will be closed. Relo plans for south of 140 are not finalized, however the Greenwall Shelter will continue to be used and will be about $\frac{1}{4}$ mile from the Long Trail. The LT will be using a significant portion of the Keewaydin Trail no matter what configuration is finally selected.

White Rocks Snowshoe Hike
February 20, 1999

Our group of eight hikers and two lively dogs had a perfect winter's day with the temperature in the high 20's, calm winds and a pale blue sky overhead. By way of the White Rocks picnic area we started off on the Keewaydin Trail, some on foot and others on snowshoes. The Keewaydin Trail is a steep climb, though fairly short in length, and offers some nice wintertime views of Bear Mountain and other hills through the trees.

We made our way through a mixed hardwood forest before entering spruce, balsam and paper birch woods nearer the summit.

50 Years Ago in Smoke and Blazes

By Bob Perkins

Historian, Killington Section

A decision made at the annual Section meeting on January 20, 1949 was to continue publication of Smoke and Blazes, then a four-page monthly, which had been started on a trial basis the previous September. This article recalls some highlights of 50 years ago from that first full year of publication.

Section officers for 1949 included President Fred Field, Vice President Leone Smith, Secretary-Treasurer Eleanor Walker, Trails Ray Catozzi and Churchill Scott, Shelters Craigie Perkins, Harold Valiquette and Gale Spaulding, Outings Billy Allard, Photography Shirley Morris, and Newsletter Mary and Vera Perkins.

For entertainment at that annual meeting there was a contest to choose the seven natural wonders of Rutland Country. The selected wonders will be revealed later in this article.

The major trails and shelters project for the year was the relocation of the old Blue Triangle Camp from its site next to the brook near Gov. Clement to its new home above Spring Lake. On a January work party the shelter was cut into sections and trucked to the south shore of the lake. At least seven more work parties at Spring Lake were reported during the year. The camp sections were tobogganed across the lake ice, carried up through what was then an open pasture, and re-assembled high on the hill.

Membership in the Section for 1949 topped out at 95 with 60 adult members and 35 juniors. Dues were then $2.00 for adults and $0.50 for those through high school. Thirty dollars of the dues payments was forwarded to the main club. Outings were held to just about every shelter in our section as well as to Bradder's Camp in Tinmouth, the Canty-Fostman Camp on Bomoseen, Tucker Lodge (twice), Little Rock Pond, Noyes Pond, White Rocks, Mt. Carmel, Mooselamoo, and Equinox. There also were several special events. The February winter weekend was held at Craigie Perkins' camp in Mendon (later known as Tall Timber). It was necessary to hike in from Route 4 because Old Turnpike was not a plowed road in those days. In April, Leone Smith hosted a Maple Sugar-on-Snow party at Camp Sangamon in Pittsford with the traditional pickles, doughnuts and coffee.

The Intersectional, an annual gathering for members of all GMC sections, was organized by the Killington Section in August, again at Tall Timber. The November rummage sale, promoted with newspaper and radio advertising, was the big money making event of the year. Proceeds were $101.88. By the way, the Section, ended 1949 with a bank balance of $558.40.

The final social event of the year was a covered dish supper at Vera Perkins' Beechwood. After supper Churchill Scott showed some movies taken on the Long Trail.

Smoke and Blazes carried a few "personals" and in July took note of the wedding of Bob Perkins and Thelma Cole. The October issue carried Thelma's story of their Long Trail hike from Danby to West Wardsboro.

In another interesting story Clyde Spaulding recalled a winter adventure of nearly 40 years before (i.e. about 1909). The trip involved a four-horse "barge" called the Marble City Queen and about 20 people on snowshoes going to Killington via Brewer's. The old hotel was still standing at that time.

It seems pretty clear that there is a continuity of interest over the years for those of us who love the "mountains of Vermont" and who support the Club that "makes (them) play a larger part in (our) lives." We're lucky that Smoke and Blazes has recorded some of the history of our predecessors for more than 50 years. Soon a complete run of Smoke and Blazes from 1948 to date will be available at the Rutland Historical Society. The seven natural wonders of Rutland County, as selected by a vote of the Killington Section in 1949, were/are Killington View, Pittsford Ice Caves, White Rocks, Bird Mountain, Spring Lake, McLaughlin Falls, and Deer Leap. Do you agree?

Killington Section Memorabilia

Do you have stashed away somewhere old photos, slides or other mementos of Killington Section folks, activities or trail scenes? Would you like to be able to share them with others now and with future generations of Long Trail lovers? Our Section has made an arrangement with the Rutland Historical Society, where the Society has started a Killington Section GMC collection and has agreed to accept, care for, and make available to the public, items related to the presence of the Green Mountain Club in the Rutland area.

In addition to photos and slides, such items as trail or shelter registers, hike schedules, newsletters, newspaper clippings, posters, video tapes, home movies, club account books, meeting records, and correspondence would be appropriate. If you have anything that you would like to donate to the Society for our collection please contact Bob Perkins (802-773-0184). If you have material that you don't wish to part with right now but might donate at a future date, please let us know of its existence. The new year marks the 90th anniversary of the founding of the Green Mountain Club in 1910. This is a great time to take a step to preserve our history.

Gov. Clement Shelter - Cooper Lodge - No definite plans have yet been formulated for relocating this stretch.

Lottery Road to Kieffer Road - Preliminary scouting has taken place but we are "2-3 years away from doing anything."

Walkthroughs:

The section will soon be scheduling the traditional annual walkthroughs. The walkthrough of lower portions will be scheduled in May while that for upper elevations will await the complete melting of snow in June.

Cold River Road Parking:

It was unanimously approved (m/s/p Connie Youngstrom/Ray Catozzi) that the section recommend to the GMC that it not plan for any parking lots on the upper Cold River Road. At present there is a wide spot offering spaces for two or three vehicles and this is deemed sufficient.

Gov. Clement Shelter:

Numerous proposals for keeping vehicles away from the shelter, a frequent target of vandalism and site of rowdy partying, were discussed but, each having drawbacks, it was decided to do nothing for now.

Trails & Shelters Adoption Program:

Dave indicated that the GMC is expanding its present trails and shelters adoption program to include sections of trail. Thus if it were agreeable to us the main club could assign sections within the Killington Section to outside adopters. This is merely a proposal at this point but it prompted concern by some directors that it would erode the traditional role of the section as trail maintainers. The adopters would report to the section's Trails & Shelters chairman.

GMC Wilderness Support:

Dave indicated that the GMC plans to support legislation calling for the designation of additional wilderness areas within the Green Mountain National Forest. One of the proposed new areas would be in the Philadelphia peak region south of Vt. 125 while the second would take in the virtually unpopulated Glastonbury mountain region thereby extending the present Lye Brook wilderness south to Kelley Stand Road. The legislation could be written up in a way favorable to existing trails and campsites.

GMC Director's Report:

Phil Smith reported at the last main club meeting the New York Section voted by a margin of 156 to 68 to leave the club. Dissatisfaction over the uniform dues was seen as a major factor in this unfortunate decision.

Also at this meeting a motion to purchase some 40 acres of land adjacent to the Waterbury headquarters to create a campus-like environment and protect the "viewshed" was tabled after 1 ½ hours of discussion. The prospective purchase at a cost of several hundred thousand dollars left "a sufficient number of people uneasy." However, an expenditure of $10,000 over what was budgeted was approved for renovations and changes to the headquarters facility. Also, it was voted to expend $30,000 to upgrade the club's maps and get them into digitized form. The club is looking at several cartographers before selecting one to carry out this process.

There is a GMC meeting March 20 in Manchester at the Equinox and the Long Trail meeting will take place June 12 at Stratton Mountain. The main club is looking for nominations from the sections for life memberships.

Gov. Clement Masonry Repair:

Herb Ogden hopes to secure a grant from the Appalachian Trail conference for this needed repair work, but if he were not able to obtain the grant, he sought permission to use Kirk Funds to hire a mason to do the work. It was estimated that four hours would be required. A motion to authorize $200 from Kirk Fund interest (m/s/p Bob Perkins/Al Pulling) to pay for this job was passed unanimously. It was hoped that the Shrewsbury Snowbirds, a snowmobiling club, might go 50-50 on the job and that Roy Arthur might be willing to do the work.

Resignation:

Linda Smith has resigned from the position of hiking schedule coordinator. Appreciation was expressed for her past efforts in this important post.

Next Meeting:

The next meeting will take place Saturday, April 24 at the Annual Meeting and Potluck at the Unitarian Universalist church on West Street in Rutland.

Keep a Section Member in Your Thoughts

Our thoughts go out to Herb Ogden, president of the Killington section, who's mother passed away a few months ago after a brief illness. She was 84. Ruth Emily Ogden was born in New York and received her bachelor's degree from Vassar College in 1936 and her master's degree from Columbia University School of Library Science in 1938. In 1946 she married Herbert Gouverneur Ogden, and they moved to Hartland. Together they owned and operated a dairy goat and sheep farm, a sugarbush, the Lull's Brook Inn, and Ogden's Cider and Grist Mill, all in Hartland. Mrs. Ogden started the Hartland Elementary School Library and did volunteer work. Ruth and her husband moved to Rutland in 1993.

Animal tracks meandered through the woods, crossing the trail several times. Snowshoe hare, red squirrel, coyote and deer tracks were among those seen. Any hopes of hearing winter bird calls was next to impossible because of the loud crunch, crunch of our booted or snowshoed feet on old crusty snow. Henry, a youthful energetic golden retriever, and Woody, a young brown Labrador, stole the show with their playful antics. They rolled, tumbled and chased up and down the snowy trail, never once letting up.

Warm mellow sunshine greeted us when we sat ourselves down on the marble boulders at the top of the cliff for lunch. We took in the view overlooking the valley while overhead two ravens circled lazily. Karen's chocolate chip cookies were a welcome treat! It was a speedy downhill return and soon we were back to the cars. A fine day it was in the good company of those who love the outdoors.

Pittsford Trails Network Hike

By Jean Davies, leader
January 17, 1999

For the first time in years, I prayed for 40-degree temperatures in January. The problem was the thick layer of ice over the snow. X-C skiing is fun on snow, but impossible on ice. Happily, by 1 p.m. on the 17th, the weather cooperated, and even the sun showed up to greet Sue Thomas, Bernie Donahue, Connie Youngstrom, Lynn Pilcher, Bob Perkins, Charlie Edgar, Cody Hesse, and me. Seven-year-old Cody, the kid next door, represented the youngsters we wish we'd see more of on our GMC hikes. This was Cody's first introduction to the GMC, and he's eager to come again.

We admired Bob's 1940's ski equipment, but we agreed that he's in style, sort of. He used close to what they're using now for back-country skiing.

The warm snow caused us to move on the slow side, stop to admire the views, geography, and history of the area, and allowed Bernie to keep up by walking. For once we were glad to see the snowmobilers, since skiing was good only where they'd broken in the trails, but none of us wanted to convert to machines.

After an hour or so, some of the group opted to leave (to watch a game on TV). Lynn, Sue and Connie snowshoed on the Cadwell section of the trail, seeing interesting animal tracks on the way.

It was cold and icy the day before, and poured the day after our hike. We lucked out for a fine day.

The Killington Section frequently sponsors ski or snowshoe hikes this time of year. Skating trips are less common, but this outing qualified as one. For most of its length the road was glare ice disguised by a thin coating of snow. Although we slewed and skidded, no one fell.

After meeting six other people at the park, Alfred and I led the way to the point where the Quarterline Road turns to dirt and parked beside the road. While usually not maintained in the winter, it showed signs of having been plowed and had been driven on. One car passed us.

A nice view that I remembered from the past was obscured by haze on that cloudy day. We saw some animal tracks, but other than squirrel and rabbit most were not identified.

When we stopped to take a break about 2:30, it was mutually agreed we should reverse course and return to our cars. Think spring!

The trip was cancelled due to winter storm warnings. The back roads of Ripton are not place to be in 10-12 inches of snow. We had planned to hike the snowmobile trail from Lincoln Road to the peak. In winter there are good views to the north along the trail, and to the west from the peak. All were notified of the trip cancellation.

Pine Brook Ski & Stick Tour

By Herb Ogden, leader
March 13, 1999

Despite a new snowfall and nice, seasonable weather, only three skiers showed up to tour some of Green Mountain National Forest ski trails in the Bingo area of Rochester. We parked at the last house on Bingo Road, crossed the Bingo Brook bridge, and headed north up the Pine Brook Trail. This gains about 400-feet before crossing Pine Brook and heading west, and herringboning was in order on the steeper pitches. Soon we came across the track of a moose with a little fresh snow on it. Then, right in the trail, there was a large packed-down area, the sign of a moose-nap. We thought we could see where it had moved its head around eating snow. Nice not to have to get out of bed when thirsty! After the second moose-nap crater, there was no longer any snow on the track or the piles of moose manure, so we knew we were close to it. We never saw or heard it though.

Some gullies on the way up required delicate side-stepping so we wouldn't get our skis wet in the little brooks that crossed the trail. That got me a bit worried about the crossings of the two branches of Pine Brook. I was glad to discover that since that last ski tour I'd led up there, the Forest Service had bridges both of the crossings nicely.

We lunched at an old farm site overlooking the remains of a pasture and an old apple orchard, with nice views south over the Bingo Brook valley. Then misfortune hit the skier with the waxless skis. As the day warmed, the fine-grained new snow reached just the consistency that makes it stick to a waxless ski like instant cement. Maybe the disaster would have been avoided if the skis had been resurfaced recently. At any rate, we could scrape the snow off them only to have it stick again in a few yards. The only solution was for the two skiers who had waxed skis to pack down the trail ahead by making several passes, so the waxless skis would no longer have much to stick to. Eventually, though the owner of the waxless skis just took them off and walked. I learned a lesson from this: when leading a ski tour, carry not only all the waxes you might need, but carry everything that might be needed for the other style of ski. I had everything conceivable for waxed skis, from green wax to yellow wax (which I used at the end), plus extra tips in case a ski broke - but nothing, let alone glide spray, for waxless skis.

There may be something about weather conditions in the Bingo area that makes for tricky snow. The last tour I led in this area went all the way up to the end of the Bingo Road in Hancock, and we encountered such sticky snow that neither waxless nor waxed skis worked well.

Killington Section, Green Mountain Club Annual Meeting, April 24, 1999

The annual meeting of the Killington Section, Green Mountain Club, was held Saturday evening, April 24, in the basement of the Unitarian Universalist Church in Rutland following the traditional pot luck supper. President Herb Ogden conducted the meeting and special guests representing the main club were Dave Hardy, director of field programs; Sandy Tarburton, membership and volunteer coordinator; and Gregg Western, supervisor of caretakers and crews in the Coolidge Range and closely involved with the many trail relocations currently being carried out in our section.

MINUTES

The secretary's minutes, which had previously appeared in Smoke & Blazes, were approved unanimously without being read aloud (Al Pulling, Jean Davies).

MEMBERSHIP

Following discussion of the fact that section membership is down and members seem to be slow in renewing this year, it was moved and seconded (Bob Perkins, Bill Robichaud) that membership reminder notices be sent out by the main club. This was carried unanimously. Sandy Tarburton noted that their regular procedure is to send out an initial notice followed by two reminder notices.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

Herb was pleased to report that Bob Perkins and Bill Robichaud have agreed to take over as the new co-chairmen of Trails & Shelters, relieving him of that responsibility. Clearing and blazing will take place during walk-throughs coming up in May and early June. There were 151 hours of volunteer labor between 1992 and 1998 contributed to maintaining trails in the Killington Section.

PICO CAMP

The American Skiing Company doesn't have the funds to build its planned interconnect between Killington and Pico thus sparing Pico Camp for at least another year. However, the structure should be jacked up and leveled out as the register is full of complaints from overnight visitors unhappy with having to sleep on a slant.

GMC DIRECTOR

Phil Smith is unable to serve another term as director to the GMC. Al Pulling, the alternate director, agreed to take over the position and keep us abreast of the many plans and projects being formulated at the Waterbury headquarters. All agreed GMC leadership is much more sensitive to section needs than in the past.

TRAIL REPORTS

The Cauty Trail is in good shape but problems exist near the trailhead. These include lack of parking, wet terrain, and liability from semi-abandoned buildings. Much of this could be solved by relocating the trail to all federal land.

On the Long Trail itself, relocations are progressing well on the whole. North of U.S. 4 it is "pretty much ready to go" and the flag line is easily followed. South of Rte. 4 a lot of work remains to be done but hopefully will be completed by Labor Day.

The relo in Little Killington is partly done. No relo is planned for the Bucklin Trail but a good bridge is needed across Brewers Brook. Gary Salmon is currently building a bridge with the Youth Corps across the lower Brewers Brook crossing.

North of Gov. Clement Shelter there are plans for a possible relo but nothing has yet been picked out.

On the Bear Mountain relo there is a difference of opinion between the GMC and the U.S. Forest Service archaeologist with regard to the treatment of old cellar holes. The debate centers on whether it is better to go right past them or give them a wide berth and approach only by short side trails. The Minerva Hinchey to Vt. 140 portion is mostly done. New signage will be needed on Vt. 140 to properly indicate the changes. Local volunteers who would like to work with Dave and Gregg on Long Trail Patrols building new routes in the section are more than welcome.

Killington Section, Green Mountain Club ANNUAL REPORT, JUNE 1999

The Killington Section maintains the Long Trail (and hence the Appalachian Trail) from Route 140 in Wallingford Gulf to Route 4 at Sherburne Pass, the Killington Spur Trail, the Bucklin Trail up Killington from the west, and the Pico Link. We also maintain the Cauty Trail up Blue Ridge Mountain, which is no longer part of the Long Trail System. This amounts to 21.6 miles of Long Trail and 6.4 miles of side trails, for a total of 28 miles. That works out to precisely half a mile of trail for every membership in the Section.

Even a few years ago, the ratio was much better. We usually had over 100 members, and approached 150 in the last decade. Now we have 14 Life Members, 27 Individual Members, and 13 Family Memberships. Counting two people per family, that works out to 67 members. I'm a little puzzled at the slump. We know some reasons. Several formerly very active members, including one long-time President, quit as soon as unified dues greatly increased their dues. The added cost alone apparently wasn't the only reason, since it appears no one took advantage of the $7 low income or trail maintainer discount. Some may have quit to protest the loss of autonomy by all Sections. Of course, some just moved away or lost interest. To make up for the losses, maybe our dues reminders have to be more forceful, and maybe we need to work with sporting goods stores and others to publicize the Section better.

Despite our relatively low membership, our outings are generally well-attended. Except during mud season and hunting season, we offer about one activity per week. Jerry Parker's series of Children's Adventure Outings has been popular. We have also had canoe trips, bicycle tours, cross country ski treks, and snowshoe outings. We continue to try to reduce traffic on the Long Trail by scheduling most of our trips on side trails and old roads that are known only to the hike leader and a few others.

Our part of the Long Trail is in the best shape ever. Puncheon donated by Eastern Mountain Sports has fixed the mud wallows in the saddle between Pico and Killington. Hours of work by Trails & Shelters Co-Chair Bill Robichaud and others have slowed the erosion on the north slope of Pico. Rocks moved by the GMC trail crew and griphoist have let hikers cross Gould Brook dryshod except during real high water. The relocation north of Cooper Lodge has moved the trail onto a better footway away from Killington's ski trails, thanks to GMC crews.

Speaking of relocations, this will be the year for them. By this fall, about one-third of the Long Trail in our section will be moved from where it was last fall. Another several miles will probably move in the next few years. We have helped some and will continue to do so, but most of the work has been done by GMC crews and the Youth Conservation Corps. Although the resulting trail will be significantly longer than it is now, the Section has, however, voted to maintain all the new trail plus the present route from Pico to Sherburne Pass, which will become a side trail.

We continue to be very pleased that GMC President Rolf Anderson is attentive to the needs and wishes of the Sections. He has ushered in a new era of cooperation between headquarters and the local groups. I am sure I speak for all nine members of the Killington Section's Board of Directors in applauding him for this.

LONG TRAIL GUIDE

Dave Hardy noted that a new edition may be published next year and sought input on how many of the new changes ought to be included. A motion to include description of all or as many as possible of the new relocations in our section was passed unanimously (Jake Sherman, Al Pulling). A motion was also passed to recommend to main club that relocations be published in the Long Trail News.

HONOREES

Churchill Scott suggested that Ellen Russell be honored by the Club as a benefactor. Sandy Tarburton noted that the GMC asks for names of individuals eligible for five and 10 year service awards as well as Volunteer of the Year. There are also honorary Life Members.

DIRECTORS MEETING

At a special Directors' meeting Bill Robichaud was unanimously elected to a three-year term replacing Ray Catozzi whose term has just expired. Bob Perkins was elected vice-president to fill the term of Phil Smith who has resigned. Al Pulling will take over Phil's term as GMC Director with Connie Youngstrom serving as alternate. Ruth Gibbud was also elected to another term as a director. All of these new officers were unanimously approved by the general membership. The business portion of the meeting was then adjourned upon a motion by Janet Martin.

PROGRAM

The evening's program was a slide talk presented by Cara Clifford Nelson who, two years ago with her sister, hiked the Long Trail from end-to-end to honor the 70th anniversary of her grandmother's hiking the trail. Her grandmother, Kathleen Robert Clifford, along with two other young women, thru hiked the LT in the summer of 1927, the first women ever to do so. Known as "The Three Musketees," they carried their rations and extra clothes in pack baskets and completed the journey in a remarkable 26 days. In paying tribute to her grandmother's accomplishment, Cara and her sister also raised $30,000 for the Long Trail Protection Fund. Cara was introduced by program chairman Ray Catozzi. The presentation cleverly interwove yesteryear with today and was enjoyed by all.

Killington Section, Green Mountain Club Director's Meeting, November 20, 1999

A meeting of the Killington Section's officers and directors was held Saturday, Nov. 20, 1999, at 4:30 P.M. at the Unitarian Church in Rutland prior to the club's annual fall potluck supper. Attending the meeting were Herb Ogden, section president; Bob Perkins, vice-president and 'historian'; Al Pulling, treasurer and GMC director; directors, Bill Robichaud and Ruth Gibbud, and secretary, Jake Sherman.

TREASURER'S REPORT -- Al Pulling reported that the section currently has $1,124.74 in its checking account and $1,317.58 in the savings account. There has been no change in the Kirk Fund. The section now numbers 41 individual members, 36 family members, and 14 life members.

It was noted that membership renewal letters are now being sent out from the main club in Waterbury. Dues can be paid either directly to the main club or to our own section treasurer, the same percentage being returned to the section in either case. It was also noted that the main club's letter can be tailored to section needs and in our case should include a reminder that dues include Smoke & Blazes.

HISTORIAN'S REPORT -- Bob Perkins reminded the meeting that the section's archives are now being stored and preserved at the Rutland Historical Society's building on Nickwackett Street. If anybody has any photos, diaries or other memorabilia related to the section looking for a 'permanent home,' they would be most welcome.

SMOKE & BLAZES -- All were pleased with the job being done by editor Kim Armstrong (now Jackson). All hike leaders were reminded about the need to submit hike reports promptly.

NOMINATIONS -- Several candidates were suggested to fill two directors' terms that will be beginning in April 2000.

GMC DIRECTOR'S REPORT -- Al Pulling reported that at the last main club meeting there was much discussion of a recent $100,000 donation in relation to the purchase of land surrounding the Waterbury headquarters. The donation is apparently limited to that purpose only. The amount of money available, however, is still well short of that needed for the 40-odd acres the club would like to purchase to preserve a suitable natural environment around itself and prevent unwanted development.

SECTION LEADERS MEETING -- Bob Perkins and Bill Robichaud represented the section at this meeting held Saturday, Nov. 13, at Vermont Law School in South Royalton. Among items discussed there was an earlier suggestion by section leaders that the main club return a larger percentage of dues to the sections. This proposal, however, has been referred by the club to its membership committee and still remains 'on the table.'

Another item brought up was that some sections now have Web pages. Some sections have them while others don't. Ours is among those who don't. A section's web page can contain a tremendous amount of info about the section including its history, membership, and hike schedules. A section web page might also be linked to the main club's web page as well as to the web page of the local Chamber of Commerce under 'Recreational Opportunities.' Obviously, some sections contain members with the skills to put these pages into operation. Bob is going to look into what would be required to 'get one up.'

Another topic raised was group use of the LT, particularly in sensitive areas or times such as during mud-season, on Alpine summits, etc. The trail traverses land under many different ownerships including state land, U.S. Forest Service land, etc. each with its own set of rules. The rules are unclear and lack uniformity. The club plays a dual role because while we aim to be protectors of the trail we are also users. It was felt that 10 people on an overnight hike and 20 on a day hike were reasonable limits but these do not represent anything hard and fast.

The section leaders also addressed the need to recruit younger members into the club. One successful idea has been the creation of so-called 'Turtles' hikes presently popular in the mid-state area. 'Turtles' hikes are geared to families with young children and are less than five miles, involve less than 500 feet of climbing, and take no more than four hours. There are about eight or 10 of these hikes during the year. Any section can schedule 'Turtle' hikes if it wants to and is free to make use of the name.

RENAMING OF SIDE TRAIL -- After much discussion of possible names for the section of old LT between Pico South and Sherburne Pass, which with the new rerouting of the AT/LT has now become a side trail, the name Sherburne Pass Trail was selected from about a dozen possibilities. It was felt this name would avoid confusion and provide a geographical place name that would make the purpose of the trail clear to hikers. The section will now report its recommendation to the main club which had requested us to come up with a name. They needed it fairly quickly to be able to use in new maps and guidebooks.

HIKE PUBLICITY - It was felt the section needed better hike publicity and that the appointment of a publicity chairman would be a good idea. Some other thoughts about publicizing hikes included a 'postcard' size schedule that would be handy for attaching to refrigerators or just carrying; a table display at such locations as the mall, the Rutland Fair, and Arts in the Park, and having hikes with a leader possessing special knowledge, for example, a geology or a botany hike.

In terms of trail maintenance, it was suggested that in the newsletter volunteers should be sought for specific jobs rather than just being asked for generally. Bill Robichaud felt the main club needed to go after the state for more money for this purpose. It was noted that more 'ridge-runners' or caretakers were needed and also needed to be better paid. Herb asked what the section might do to assist the ridge-runners charged with patrolling the Coolidge Range.

Also, it was felt that with Castleton, College of St. Joseph and Green Mountain in the area more college students ought to be interested in associating with the club.

Pico Camp Register - September 19, 1998 - June 16, 1999

Below is a summary of the Pico Camp use from September 19, 1998 through June 16, 1999. Bear in mind plenty of hikers do not sign in, and some do not indicate they are only one of a large party.

9/19-30/98	43	10/98	33

EXPLORING LOWELL LAKE

by Ruth Gibbud

Five canoers traveled to Londonderry to explore one of the prettiest lakes around on August 29th. With its multiple coves and four islands, there was lots to see. We found blossoming pitcher plants in the bog and got fairly close to what we determined, by consensus, was a cormorant. We saw a beaver lodge and several stashes of food awaiting the winter. Although the lake level was quite low, we had an enjoyable day, quitting the water and loading our craft before the winds came up and the rain came down.

ROBERT FROST MT., RIPTON, VT October 16, 1999

by Helen & Greg Crawford

Someone on today's hike organized a beautiful, warm, sunny October day for us. The trip leaders can't take credit. Seventeen of us, including six from the Bread Loaf section and five from the Rutland area, charged into the woods on a snowmobile trail from the Ripton-Lincoln Road. The trail led to the peak of Robert Frost Mountain. There was no snow or snowmobiles to get in the way. But mud boots proved useful.

At the peak we met George Smith and his wife from White River Jct. George had called to go on our trip. But somehow, we missed connections. Being resourceful, the Smiths climbed on their own.

We stopped at a viewpoint facing east, a short distance below the summit for lunch and relaxation. I'm sure Sue Thomas' photos will show just how relaxed we got, and what a good view we had of Bread Loaf Mountain and the surrounding Greens.

On the matter of adopters, the only ones presently working in the section are Ruth and Sandy Lamb of the Lake George area who are taking care of Cooper Lodge. It was felt that if Waterbury would have the adopters work directly through the section rather than the main club, the section would be much more receptive to the idea.

Finally, it was felt that follow-up letters for membership should be sent to all who come on hikes and sign the hike register.

The meeting was adjourned at 5:35 P.M. as the clamor or eager potluckers and the aroma of a variety of home-cooked dishes focused all further attention on the food and program portion of the evening. In all, about 35 individuals participated.

PROGRAM -- A very interesting slide talk was presented by Ruth Mary Cooper Lamb who as mentioned above, with her husband Sandy has adopted Cooper Lodge, the log camp high on the west side of Killington Peak. This structure has been much abused by skiing parties and others over the past few decades and has required a great amount of work and attention to keep it serviceable so the efforts of the Lambs are much appreciated. Cooper Lodge was named after Ruth's uncle Edward Cooper, who was president of the Green Mountain Club in the 1920s and instrumental in the establishment of the Long Trail.

Ruth's talk focused mainly on her aunt Mary Cooper Back who wore many hats during her 86 years including girlhood years in Vermont (during which she hiked the LT from Sherburne Pass up to Warren solo), art school in Chicago, and marriage to a Wyoming artist-cowboy with whom she settled in that state's Wind River Valley in 1935. Ruth has chronicled her aunt's struggles and passion for life in a memoir based on her letters and journals entitled 'Mary's Way.' The program was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

*Respectfully submitted,
Jake Sherman
Secretary*

Killington Section Green Mountain Club - Outing Schedule Winter 1999/2000

Trips leave from Main Street Park at east end of Rutland City Fire Station at the time shown. Participants should bring lunch unless noted.

Non-members are welcome! Wear sturdy, weather-resistant footgear, dress for weather changes, and stay with the leader.

Distances are approximate; difficulty indicates steepness and footing. For more information about a trip, please call trip leader.

Leaders are not necessarily trained in first aid. If you ride with someone, please share car expense.

Sat. December 4 - SNAKE MOUNTAIN 9a.m. Sue Thomas, 773-2185.

Sat. December 11 - BRIDGEWATER HOLLOW TO THE LOOKOUT 9 a.m. Herb Ogden, 775-1350.

From Bridgewater Hollow, we will climb to the Appalachian Trail north of the Pinnacle on an old road that passes the remote Bridgewater Hollow Cemetery and the more remote site of a large farm. We will follow the AT from the Lookout Farm Road to the Lookout, which has a wonderful panorama. We'll continue west on the AT to an old highway leading from Barnard back to Bridgewater Hollow, past the remains of more farms that disappeared about a hundred years ago. 5.5 mi. moderate, with about 1000' vertical climb. Return around 4 p.m.

Sat. January 8 - QUARTERLINE ROAD HIKE Roma and Al Pulling, 773-6997.

1p.m. Easy to moderate, 3 miles.

Sat. January 15 - SHREWSBURY PEAK SKI AND SNOWSHOE 10 a.m. Connie & Mark Youngstrom, 492-3502.

Snow conditions permitting we will cross country ski along snowmobile trails to where the Shrewsbury Peak hiking trail crosses. From there we will stash our skis and hike the rest of the way to the summit on snowshoes. Ought to be fun if the snow is fine. Difficult, about 6 miles round trip. Call for details.

Sat. January 22 - AIKEN STATE FOREST WINTER TREE IDENTIFICATION 10 a.m. Gary Salmon, 492-3315.

Learn the winter trees by bark and bud with the expert. This will be a snowshoe or ski event depending on weather conditions. Please call for details. Easy. 1 - 2 miles.

Sat. February 5 - GOVERNOR CLEMENT SHELTER AND BEYOND, in Shrewsbury. 10 a.m.; return about 2:30 p.m. Depending on snow cover, we'll ski, snowshoe, or walk from the Upper Cold River Rd. up the Gov. Clement Rd. to this historic stone shelter, the Long Trail's oldest. Any skiers, at least, may want to continue up to the Sargent Brook crossing before turning back. There will also be a visit to the long abandoned farm north of the shelter, and probably a fire in the shelter's inside fireplace for lunch. 3 mi. Easy, expandable to about 4 mi. Moderate.

Sat. February 12 - MERCK FOREST 10 a.m. Gretchen Crowley 483-9448.

Ski, snowshoe, or hike depending on the weather. Please call for more information.

Sat. February 19 - OLD TURNPIKE ROAD SNOWSHOE HIKE 9 a.m. Sue Thomas, 773-2185.

We will hike from the Old Turnpike Road to the Long Trail.

Sun. February 27 - MYSTERY SNOWSHOE HIKE 10a.m. Gretchen Crowley. Please call for info.

Sat. March 11 - CHILDREN'S ADVENTURE SERIES 1p.m. Jerry Parker, 775-6208.

1-3 miles, Easy. Great time for kids!

WANT TO LEAD A HIKE? Our next schedule will include mid-March through mid-June. Please call Connie Youngstrom, 492-3502 or Sue Thomas 773-2185 by March 1 to guarantee a spot on our schedule.

Killington Section, Green Mountain Club Director's Meeting, February 2, 2000

The meeting was held Wednesday, Feb. 2, 2000 at 7:30 p.m. at the home of Herb Ogden in Rutland. Present were Herb Ogden, president; Bob Perkins, vice-president and "historian;" Al Pulling, treasurer and GMC director; Directors Bill Robichaud and Connie Youngstrom, and Secretary Jake Sherman SECRETARY'S MINUTES - The minutes of the Nov. 20, 1999 meeting were passed unanimously without additions or corrections.

TREASURER'S REPORT - The section as of Feb. 1 had $1,091.77 in its checking account and $1,346.22 in the savings account. We owe $185 to the main club as their share of dues. Currently there are 19 family memberships, 14 life memberships, and 43 individual members. Kirk Fund interest for the year was $649.32. Starting next year on a one-year trial basis the GMC will refund the sections 25% of dues instead of the current 20%.

MEMBERSHIP FORM -- The main club has drawn up a section membership renewal reminder form which will go out under the signature of Herb Ogden. Herb suggested a number of changes including an indication of how much of dues is tax-deductible. This year the reminder letters will go out only to those who haven't renewed but next year they will be sent to everybody. Dues may be sent directly to Waterbury or to section treasurer Al Pulling. When dues are sent to the main club, our portion has been received promptly. A suggestion was made that life members could be asked for an additional contribution or to volunteer for particular activities. A short note in Smoke & Blazes could accomplish this.

HISTORIAN - We are planning to cooperate with the Burlington Section in adding a section on archives to the proposed Section Leaders' Handbook. Bob Perkins will be getting in touch with the Burlington Section historian, Dot Myers, on this. At present there is great inconsistency among sections in the thoroughness with which minutes and other records are kept. Herb suggested that the proposed handbook should be reviewed by at least one person from each section. It is unclear at just what stage this handbook is at. Meanwhile, a new Long Trail guidebook is slated to be published this year. This is most welcome since there have been so many relocations including many in the Killington Section.

SMOKE & BLAZES -- Hike leaders are again reminded to submit reports in a timely manner to editor Kim Jackson. They're best done while the event is still fresh. Connie agreed to call procrastinating hike leaders.

OUTINGS -- Connie suggested it would be a nice idea to send hike leaders a postcard of thanks which at the same time could serve as a reminder of the hike report. We just happen to have a large supply of section postcards. Meanwhile, Jake offered to draft a letter which would be sent to non-members who go on hikes with the club inviting them to join.

As a solution to the problem of getting the hike register from the last leader to the next, Herb offered to keep the register in box outside his office where it could be conveniently picked up. The

We've had bad luck with the weather on recent outings. Both Gary Salmon's and Connie's hikes were on bitterly cold days and no one showed up.

GMC DIRECTOR'S REPORT -- Al Pulling reported on a recent GMC meeting in Waterbury at which some new and probably controversial proposals were put forward. The first was a proposal that the GMC become involved in overseeing the recreational use of the so-called "Champion lands." These are large tracts of land primarily in the northeastern part of the state which were recently acquired by the state from the Champion Lumber Co. On the face of it this activity seemed to have little connection with the Long Trail or its side trails. The board after much discussion passed a motion instructing our Director to express serious concern about any GMC involvement in the Champion lands unless it can be shown that this will contribute to the objectives of the club.

Trails and Shelters Committee Needs Workers

The story of the Green Mountain Club is the story of volunteers who conceived, built and maintained the Long Trail. It is essential for the future success of the Club that volunteers continue to play a major role. A major function of the Killington Section is to provide an opportunity for members to do just that.

Each year we list a few "work parties" in the outing schedule. We are finding, however, that we are unable to know, several months in advance, when, where, and what work will be needed. Therefore, we're hoping that several members will volunteer to join the Trails and Shelters Committee.

Membership on the Trails and Shelters Committee does not constitute a commitment to any specific trail work. It simply means that you would like to be notified and invited to participate in any "work parties" that are needed in addition to those listed in the schedule. Trails and Shelters work is at times strenuous, but it also includes tasks appropriate for any member such as trimming brush, painting blazes, or even just walking over a short section of trail to report its condition.

The moral and financial support of every member is truly appreciated but if you would enjoy making a hands-on contribution to the "oldest long-distance hiking trail in the country" please join the Trails and Shelters Committee by giving me a call.

QUARTERLINE ROAD, RUTLAND TOWN

January 8, 2000

By Roma Pulling

A winter hike leader faces a lot of uncertainty. Weather conditions on the day of the hike can range from freezing rain to gale force winds to below-zero temperatures. But we encountered none of that. January 8 turned out to be mostly sunny with mild temperatures. That was partly responsible for the fact that there were 14 of us on the hike, and being an afternoon hike was another factor.

Quarterline Road was a popular winter hike destination in the early days because it wasn't maintained for vehicular traffic. Now we find it plowed and sanded but with little traffic and still provides a pleasant outing. One of the most rewarding parts of the hike comes at the beginning, when there is a great view of the Green Mountain range. At 2:30 p.m. we turned back toward our cars because some of our hikers had commitments later in the afternoon.

Burlington Free Press Celebrates the GMC's 90th Birthday

The Burlington Free Press has invited readers to send in their favorite memories of hiking the Long Trail. The best submissions will be printed as part of "90 Tales from the Long Trail." Mail entries to Long Trail Memories, 191 College Street, Burlington, Vermont 05401; email: bfreepress@aol.com; or fax: (802) 660-1802. We encourage all to send in their stories and memories.

In Memory Of Merritt Thomas

Our thoughts are with KS Life Member Catherine Thomas on the loss of her father, Merritt L. Thomas, on January 19. Merritt was 73-years-old and had been in fragile health for some time.

Mr. Thomas was a graduate of Rutland High School and was part owner of Thomas Dairy in Rutland Town. He was a Vermont State Representative, a director of the First Vermont Bank and a trustee for the Vermont State Fair.

He is survived by his wife, Natalie Thomas, six daughters, a son, and two brothers. Three brothers predeceased him. Cathy is married to KS president, Herb Ogden.

GMC Annual Meeting Weekend: June 9 - 11, 2000

Inn at the Long Trail, Sherburne, Vt. Hosted by the Ottauquechee Section, this year's GMC Annual Meeting is right in our own backyard, providing us a great opportunity to learn about the entire club. Details and registration forms can be found in the spring 2000 Long Trail News or by contacting the GMC at (802) 244-7037 or gmc@greenmountainclub.org.

It was suggested that the state forest and parks department would be the proper agency for such oversight.

Another proposal was for the GMC to purchase a bed & breakfast across the highway from its headquarters for conversion into office space. The price would be $275,000. The GMC is considering this move because it has been unable to reach a satisfactory agreement on price with the landowner on its (western) side of Rte. 100 where it had hoped to purchase 40 or so acres for expansion and protection. The B&B would cost money to renovate and in addition lacks sufficient sewerage capacity for projected use by the GMC.

After much discussion, the board passed unanimously a motion expressing concern about these plans and that based on the information available it would seem the club would be better off paying a higher price on the western side to get what it really wants rather than get involved in a complex and potentially risky venture with the B&B property. The next GMC meeting will be in March in Middlebury.

GOVERNOR CLEMENT SHELTER

-- Several suggestions were made for dealing with vehicular access to the shelter with its potential for serious vandalism which has occurred in the past. It was agreed the best approach was for a gate to be installed just after the second bridge and no parking lot. This proposal will first be taken to landowners who own camps in the vicinity as well as the Shrewsbury Snowbirds, the local snowmobiling club. If they approve, the next step would be to approach the Shrewsbury selectmen which would be done by Connie, a Shrewsbury resident, and a GMC representative.

SHERBURNE PASS TRAIL -- A decision was made to extend the name Sherburne Pass Trail to cover that portion from U.S. 4 north to the former Maine Junction. It was felt this would provide the most logic and clarity for hikers. Earlier the board had endorsed the name for that portion of the old LT between Sherburne Pass and Pico Camp. Also discussed was whether the section would want to take on the maintenance of this mile-long stretch of trail north of the pass. The Ottauquechee Section comes up to Maine Junction but not to the highway. This may be brought up at the annual meeting.

RTE. 4 LT/AT TRAILHEAD -- The main club has come up with a proposed parking lot for the new trailhead of the LT/AT where it crosses Rte. 4. The parking lot would be directly opposite the entrance to the Fox Hollow condominiums and would be quite sizeable with space for what appears to be at least 20 vehicles. The plans were prepared by Enman Engineering. There is some parking there right now but it is not well maintained particularly in winter. Plowed snow presently blocks the entrance.

ANNUAL MEETING -- The annual meeting has been scheduled for Saturday, March 25 at 5:30 p.m. in the basement of the Unitarian Universalist Church, Rutland. There will be a potluck supper followed by a business meeting at 7 p.m. and then a slide show of the High Sierras presented by Bob Perkins. Killington Section memorabilia will be on exhibit.

The meeting was adjourned at 9:45 p.m.

Long Trail's New Trailhead at Route 4

The Long Trail has a new trail head on Route 4, just West of Pico and right across the street from the Fox Hollow Condominiums.

This spot is currently an open area, a sort of pull off. The appearance of the site dates back to the mid 1950s. Most people probably know that Route 4 used to be more windy than it is now. When the highway was straightened the property of the abandoned right of way usually reverted to whoever the neighboring land owner was. However, at the spot that is now the trailhead the state retained ownership of the sliver of land between the highway and the brook that parallels it.

Fast forward to the year 2000 - since the state retained ownership, the land is available to use as a public parking lot and trail head.

Over the past couple of years we have focused our energy on building the new route of the Long Trail around the west side of Pico. Now that this trail is open, we are turning our attention to improving the trailhead.

Eventually we would like to have a safe, solid, constructed parking lot at the site. The current site is OK as a temporary parking area - but it's not a long term solution. The ground is rough, gets muddy, and runoff from Route 4 tends to make gullies there. In addition, as everyone knows - cars on Route 4 drive pretty fast - so in the long run we should have a regular driveway entrance to the parking so that folks can safely pull on and off Route 4.

In 1999 the Green Mountain Club got a small grant from the National Park Service to hire an engineer to design a parking lot. The gist of the design is a gravel lot that will take up about half of the current open area near the trail head. (That would make it big enough to accommodate a similar number of cars as the parking lot at the top of Sherburne Pass.) The lot would be in the East half of the current open area, away from the route of the hiking trail. (People who are walking through will not have to walk through the parking lot.) It will have a paved entrance that will be directly opposite the drive way for the Fox Hollow

Condominiums. (AOT says that driveways should be directly opposite each other - it is safer and also makes it easier to put in traffic controls like turning lanes if needed in the future.)

We've shown this parking lot plan to some contractors in the Rutland area, and it looks like the parking lot would cost around $40,000 to build. That means it may be a while before it gets built. There is some federal highway money set aside for projects like this, and we're actively putting the GMC's name in to be considered for that money.

In the meantime it would be great if folks kept an eye on how the current "unimproved" parking area is doing - and spoke up with any simple things we could do to make it work better.

In anticipation of eventually having money for construction, we are going ahead and getting the permits we will need. AOT issued a permit last fall. The Town of Mendon Planning Commission will review the plans at an upcoming meeting.

In the Fall of 1999 the Mendon Planning Commission asked that the project include a "landscaping plan." This is a really good idea. The goal of the "landscaping" would be to revegetate or reclaim the disturbed area around the parking lot. In the end it would look like the woods (and the edge of the woods) - not like a vacant lot with a parking in the middle.

If folks have ideas about how this trailhead and parking area should look, are interested in helping with planning or planting the landscaping, or want to know more about this project - just call Greg Western at the GMC office 244-7037 ext. 18 (greg@greenmountainclub.org).

Also, it would be great if anybody who lives in Mendon, particularly, would like to look over the trailhead plan before it is presented to the town planning commission - and/or could come to the planning commission meeting and help present the plan.

A Preliminary Idea of What Planners Would Like the Parking Area to Look Like When Finished, and How You Can Be Involved

Greg has provided us with some simple, rough ideas of how the parking lot might look when it is finished. However, he is looking for input, especially from those who are members of the Section and have interest in gardening or landscaping, especially being involved in actually laying out the plants and work on the ground, when the time comes. As more news comes to us, we'll get it out to you. Here are some preliminary ideas:

For people driving by and for people who live across the street: Between the parking lot and the road would be low plants and/or jumbled boulders. This would visually "break up" the view of the parking lot.

For hikers:

- A clear path from the parking lot to the LT/AT. For example: a gravel turnpike similar to that built just north of Route 4.
- A clear route of the LT/AT for people hiking through (who are not going over to the parking lot at all). All ready in place: metal highway signs and blaze posts. When landscaping is done the route of LT/AT south of the road could also be turnpiked to make it very clear.

For the land: Aside from the area taken up by the parking lot itself, the land at the trailheads would be "reclaimed." There would be a healthy community of native plants behind the parking lot and away from the road. This would eventually just grow up and be "the woods."

For the GMC staff and volunteer maintainers: The landscaping would not require unusual amounts of ongoing maintenance. The point of the landscaping would not be to have a "yard" or "garden" that would need regular care. The "landscaping," as such, would be a one time effort to "recover" the disturbed land around the parking lot and at the trail head. After this initial effort the management needs would be the same as for any patch of natural ground near a road, near a parking lot, or at a trail head.

Killington Section Annual Meeting; March 25, 2000 Unitarian Universalist Church, Rutland, Vt.

The annual meeting of the Killington Section, Green Mountain Club, was held Saturday evening, March 25, in the basement of the Unitarian Universalist Church in Rutland following the traditional potluck supper. President Herb Ogden conducted the meeting. Special guest representing the GMC was Greg Western, assistant supervisor of field operations, who has been very involved the past couple of years directing trail relocations in the Killington Section.

MINUTES - The secretary's minutes of the last annual meeting, April 24, 1999, were approved unanimously. They had previously appeared in Smoke & Blazes.

TREASURE'S REPORT - Treasurer Al Pulling was unable to be present and submitted a written report. In our regular funds we have a total of $3,428.18 as of Dec. 31, 1999. This consists of $869.77 in the checking account, $1,346.22 in the savings account, and $1,212.19 in a CD at Charter One Bank. This represents a gain of $51.79 over last year's balance. The balance in the Kirk Fund is $15,201.40, a gain of $812.17 over last year. Kirk Fund money is kept in three CDs at the Chittenden Bank. Membership as of the end of '99 was 78, an official decrease of one from the previous year, but there have been several new members recently. The treasurer's report was unanimously approved.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT -

Sherburne Pass Trail: Herb reported that section directors recommended the former Long Trail between Pico Camp and Maine Junction, north of Sherburne Pass, be renamed the Sherburne Pass Trail. The main club officially approved this new designation at its latest meeting.

Vehicles at Gov. Clement Shelter: The section is continuing to deal with the problem of full-sized vehicles getting into Gov. Clement Shelter and possibly being used for vandalism. Our present idea is to put a gate on that road by the upper bridge and not include a parking lot. The first step is to take this proposal to landowners in the vicinity for their approval. If this is obtained, we would then go to the Shrewsbury snowmobile club and to the town select board.

Road Widening at Brewer's Corners: The Town of Mendon has proposed that Wheelerville Road be widened at Brewer's Corners to provide for parking. From that 90 degree bend in the road the Bucklin Trail takes off for Killington Peak. The goal would be to create five or six parking spaces even in winter. Bill Robichaud expressed concern that such widening would involve taking down trees and this would further open up the area to ATV four-wheelers, which have already wrecked water bars. Gary Salmon of the state forestry department has rounded up resources including funds to build ATV barriers on the Bucklin Trail, but it may not be possible to do much with the beginning part of the trail given its flat and open terrain.

Work parties: Dates have been set for this year's work parties. The "low-level walk-through" from Gulf Road to Gov. Clement Shelter will take place on May 27. One week later on June 3 will be the "high-level walkthrough" from Gov. Clement north to Rte. 4. With the GMC's Annual Meeting taking place the following weekend at The Inn at Long Trail, it would be nice to have trails in the area including the Deer Leap Trail, in very good shape. Greg Western noted there may be a group of volunteers who've signed up through Eastern Mountain Sports in Manchester to supplement our own work parties for the June 3 date.

Our section has recently lost another of its most stalwart members. Ira Hawley, who was a Life Member, passed away June 19 at the age of 84. Until his health failed, he was one of the more popular hike leaders whose outings were always well prepared and accompanied by knowledgeable commentary. Ira's daughter Lorraine is also a Life Member and assists in distribution of Smoke & Blazes. His wife, Irene, who passed away in 1996, was a member and enthusiastic hiker. Ira did many hours of work on the trails and shelters. He will be widely missed.

Smoke & Blazes: Compliments were voiced on the professional look of Smoke & Blazes and the work of editor Kim Jackson. Kim, who was unable to be present, has mentioned that the number of hike reports has been dwindling. It was urged that all hikes be written up whether by leaders or their designees.

ETHAN ALLEN TO BURNT MT. - JOINT HIKE WITH KILLINGTON AND BREAD LOAF SECTIONS April 2, 2000

By Gordon & Helen Cawood

Five hikers embarked on today's expedition. Several other callers were put off by the forecast of rain in the afternoon, or chose not to go for other reasons. We decided to take the shorter quick-exit route, and not go to the peak of Mt. Moosalamoo. We started at Branbury State Park campground, visited Ethan Allen cave and Pitch Pine point where we had limited views of Lake Dunmore. It started to rain while we were having lunch at Pat's Pad. Our fastest exit was to Upper Plains Rd., where we left a car, saving Burnt Mt. for another trip. Thanks for coming, Tony Lahendro, and Barbara and Al Stiles. We enjoyed your company.

SPRING WALK THRU May 27 and June 3

By Bob Perkins

On May 27 and again on June 3 a small but dedicated group of members conducted our annual Spring Walk Thru. This event is designed to inspect our trails and to perform light maintenance prior to the start of the summer hiking season. We want to be sure the trails are ready for use, and we want to identify what additional work will be needed. By working in teams of two or three and assigning a manageable piece of trail to each team we were able to cover most of our section of the Long/Appalachian Trail and as well as the former Long Trail (now the Sherburne Pass side trail) on Pico.

In general we can report that our trails are in quite good condition. There are two or three blow-downs to be removed and several wet spots where puncheon should be installed. Some new signs would be helpful. The center post supporting the roof of Governor Clement Shelter was ripped out by vandals and has been missing for some time. We hope to replace it this year.

Our next work party is on the schedule for August 12 but Trails & Shelters co-chair Bill Robichaud no doubt will be out on the trail in the meantime. Anyone willing to help can give Bill a call at 775-2567.

GRANDPA'S KNOB May 28, 2000

By Roma Pulling

The day of our hike was cool and cloudy, but considering the many rainy days in this rather wet spring, we felt very fortunate. With eight hikers besides ourselves, we left the park in three cars, headed for Hubbardton.

Grandpa's Knob is notable for several things including the location of an early experimental wind tower erected during World War II. A small amount of power was generated but came to an end when the blades blew off. The cement foundations of the tower and some of the hardware are still visible.

Secondly Grandpa's Knob is the location of transmitting facilities for Channel 28, Vermont Public Television. Years ago on our first hike to the summit the studio was still manned and we went inside to talk with the operator. It is now operated remotely.

Last but not the reason for our trip to the summit, the view from the top is remarkable and panoramic. A cool breeze discouraged most of us from admiring the view for a long period. We escaped to a sheltered place near the transmitting facility and ate our lunch before returning to our cars and heading home.

BRIDGEWATER HOLLOW TO THE LOOKOUT June 24, 2000

By Herb Ogden, Leader

Despite fine weather, only four people went on this hike. It must be that rumors of my bushwhacking to old cellarholes have spread. Like most rumors, there is some truth in them, but mostly we stayed on cleared old roads or trails.

We left our cars at the intersection of Bridgewater Hollow Rd. and Bridgewater Hollow Rd. Extension. No, I'm not making up the second name. Though it sounds pretty urban it's what the Town of Bridgewater calls the road west from the former pond at the Hollow, after you've climbed up the narrow valley from the Chateaugay Road. We crossed the brook, went right through the snowmobile gate, passed the Hollow Schoolhouse site, and soon turned left uphill on the always-muddy old highway that runs over The Pinnacle to North Bridgewater.

After climbing about a tenth of a mile on it, we struck off west through the brush and reached the Hollow Cemetery in a few hundred feet. It was beautiful with a canopy of ferns, but the ferns made it hard to see some of the lower gravestones, many of which are simple unfinished fieldstones. The oldest stone, at the top of the graveyard, is a proud marker from 1811. I understand a Boy Scout or a troop has made it their project to keep down the underbrush. They've done a good job, but the place is due for a cutting now.

Back on the old highway, we soon kept going straight on an overgrown road where the more used one bore right, crossed a brook, and climbed between stone walls about three rods apart, an almost sure sign of a former public highway. No other trace of the highway remains at this point, though it may show on the 1868 map of Bridgewater. At a fairly level spot, we came to the large foundation of a house. We got some idea of how long it had been since a house stood there from the presence of a big yellow birch stump right on one of the walls. Obviously no tree had grown there while a house stood on the foundation, and the big birch had been born and died since then. Just north of the cellarhole was a mostly filled-in well. South, across the former road, are a barn foundation and barnyard walls, but we didn't visit them because the underbrush was in full foliage. Instead, we bushwhacked another several hundred feet to an old road (now used by ATVs) running from the highway over the Pinnacle up to the high point of the Lookout Farm Road. Near where the Appalachian Trail joins it, we saw a small cellarhole to the west. We pondered what farming must have been like in the early 1800s in such a high, isolated spot.

After the AT crosses the Lookout Farm Road, it follows an old road to The Lookout. So did we. The view from The Lookout was excellent. To the north, we could see beyond Mansfield. Below us lay Lake Lakota. To the east, we could probably see Lafayette in the White Mountains, and, further south, Tripityramid. To the southeast, we could see Ascutney and probably Monadnock. To the southwest were the outlines of Okemo, Stratton, and probably Equinox. To the west lay the whole Coolidge Range, from Shrewsbury to Pico, and more. Many thanks to the private landowners who not only allow the public to visit The Lookout but even maintain a viewing platform on the roof of their cabin!

Hike Register: Starting this weekend, the official hike register will be kept in a letterbox on the porch of Herb's office at Center & Nickwackett Streets, a block away from Koltonski Fire Station. We also want to make sure to get addresses of any guest hikers in order to better contact them regarding joining the section.

GMC Board Meeting: Al Pulling, our director to the GMC, submitted a written report summing up the recent GMC Directors meeting March 18 at the Kirk Alumni Building at Middlebury College. The main item of business was the unanimous approval of the club's decision to purchase some 40 acres of land adjacent to the club headquarters in Waterbury to allow for growth and control development in the area. After a long period of negotiations, the landowner Don McCain agreed to meet the price the club was willing to pay. Details pertaining to maintenance of the property such as snow plowing and grass moving are still being negotiated. All by $120,000 of the purchase price is assured from grants and donations and raising the balance was not thought to be a problem.

Meanwhile, there is less enthusiasm about another proposed deal at headquarters, the purchase of a bed & breakfast property across Rte. 100. This property was being considered at one time for expansion space as well, but has numerous problems such as inadequate sewage disposal associated with it. The above is welcome news to the Killington Section, which at its last directors meeting Feb. 2, had expressed the view that the main club not get involved with the B&B property if the McCain property was what it really wanted. The final item was the vote to adopt the name Sherburne Pass Trail as well as to rename other side trails caused by the LT relocations.

GMC Report: The following items were brought up by Greg Western:

Champion Lands Involvement: Greg noted that there are people in the Northeast Kingdom who want to form a new section of the GMC in order to take care of trails in that area including those in the huge tract recently purchased by the state from the Champion Lumber Co. The news that the GMC was contemplating involvement in the area so far removed from the CT and its side trails prompted skepticism at the last Killington Section directors meeting at which the section instructed its GMC director to express serious concern about this involvement unless it could be shown to contribute to the club's objectives. Some feel that area is more geographically and geologically linked to the White Mountains and in fact the AMC was contemplating starting a section there.

Other proposed developments still in the thinking state include a Taconic Trail and a proposed trail from Mt. Equinox to Merck Forest.

Guidebooks: A new version of the Long Trail Guide Book should be ready by June or July. Meanwhile, work is proceeding on a complete revision of the guidebook to be released a year from now. Bob Perkins requested that a preliminary text of these revisions concerning our section be sent to us in advance for editing and proofreading. A new edition of the day hiker's guide is also being readied.

Killington Section Annual Report 2000

The Killington Section is responsible for maintaining the following:

- The Long Trail from Vt. 140 in Wallingford Gulf to Tucker-Johnson Shelter 25.1 mi. (This is also the Appalachian Trail as far north as Maine Jct. at Willard Gap.)
- The Sherburne Pass Trail from the Long Trail north past Pico Camp to 3.0 mi. U.S. 4 in Sherburne Pass (this was the Long and Appalachian Trails until 1999)
- The Bucklin Trail from Brewers Corners on the Wheelerville Road in 3.3 mi. Mendon to the Long Trail near Cooper Lodge on Killington Peak
- The Pico Spur from Pico Camp (on the Sherburne Pass Trail) to Pico Peak 0.4 mi.
- The Killington Spur from Cooper Lodge to Killington Peak 0.2 mi.
- The Cauty Trail from Elbow Road in Mendon to Blue Ridge Mountain 2.4 mi.

This is 34.4 miles, an increase of about six miles over 1999. We not only agreed to keep maintaining the old route of the Long Trail in addition to taking on the reroute west of Pico Peak but also took responsibility for some of the Long Trail north of U.S. 4 for the first time since it was moved from west of Deer Leap to east of Deer Leap in the 1960s. We and our shelter adopters also maintain Minerva Hinchey Shelter, Clarendon Shelter, Governor Clement Shelter, and Pico Camp.

Ruth and Sandy Lamb have independently adopted Cooper Lodge, which belongs to the State of Vermont. We hope we can manage all this. Our three or four work parties per year have had as few as six and as many as 20 participants. The high count was thanks to the EMS store in Manchester and to a contingent from Headquarters.

The Killington Section conducts frequent outings, described in the calendar sections of the Rutland Herald and the Mountain Times of Killington. In the late spring, summer, and early fall these occur weekly or more often. In the last year, outings have included not only ordinary hikes on official and unofficial trails but also special children's "discovery" hikes, bicycle trips, cross country ski tours, and snowshoe hikes. Members receive a quarterly, Smoke & Blazes, which we think is the oldest continuously published section newsletter. We are also trying to gather the archives in one place, led by Section Historian Bob Perkins. He has already gathered a complete set of Smoke & Blazes, which was given to the Rutland Historical Society for better access by the general public.

Interpretive Billboard: Greg noted that Deer Leap day hikers and other hikers new to the Sherburne Pass area are likely to be confused as to why the Inn at Long Trail is located there when the relocated LT/AT now crossed far below, a mile to the westward. He suggested that an interpretive billboard display at the top of the pass explaining the history and significance of the trail, the pass, and the inn would be a welcome addition to that area.

Elbow Road Logging: Greg noted that logging is presently going on just a little north of Sherburne Pass. This area is in the Green Mountain National Forest and the logging is perfectly legal, but it may be upsetting and confusing to some hikers who think they are in a wilderness. Greg suggested a sign explaining that this is a "working forest" and, perhaps facetiously, "watch out for trucks." This is part of the price for having the LT follow a logging road in a national forest. The trail is still blazed and can be easily followed but a staircase has been torn out. The loggers are expected to be there through this fall and can be expected back in 15 years.

Clarendon Gorge Suspension Bridge: This is described by Greg as an "ongoing hot potato." Dave Hardy, GMC director of field operations, is currently trying to get the Federal Highway Administration to send a natural bridge engineer to the site to make sure the bridge is safe and structurally sound. Last summer a crew replaced some of the boards and this was a "scary experience."

New Cooper Lodge Outhouse: The Vermont Youth Conservation Corps will be constructing a new outhouse this summer at Cooper Lodge. The new "Cooper Pooper" is going to be "a really big outhouse" with a 70-gal. capacity which will enable it to be used year-round.

Shrewsbury Peak Trail: The Shrewsbury Peak Trail is about to be moved. The goal is to get it off the Juggernaut Ski Trail. This work will be done by the Vermont Youth Conservation Corps. If anyone is interested in talking to these young people about the natural history of the area or the history of the GMC, these young people are always looking for speakers. It is a good opportunity to interest them specifically in the GMC.

OTHER BUSINESS

Trail Maintenance North of Sherburne Pass: A motion was made and seconded to have the section expand its maintenance responsibility to the section of trail between U.S. 4 and Tucker Johnson Shelter. The Ottauquechee Section at present maintains the area westward to Willard Gap but is not willing to do it up to the highway. Jake Sherman suggested the section might have its hands full with the Killington Section itself particularly in light of the many relos and that the area north of Rte. 4 was a much traversed one that might be better handled through the main club and adopters. After some discussion it was voted with at least one nay to take responsibility for the trail from U.S. 4 to Tucker Johnson Shelter.

AT/LT Parking Lot on Route 4: The new parking area for the relocated AT/LT on Route 4 is described as a "weedy mud-hole" right now. The GMC is presently looking for input on what a finished parking lot should look like, what kind of landscaping it should have, etc., what kind of simple things could be done if money is not forthcoming.

It appears that the Park Service seriously under budgeted the cost of a parking lot at the site, according to Greg, by a factor of 10. The $3,000 originally budgeted went entirely for architectural plans drawn up by Enman Engineering of Rutland. The Appalachian Trail Conference is also looking for funds but nothing is certain at this stage. Anyone's help as amateur landscapers or otherwise would be welcomed.

Election of New Directors: Gretchen Crowley and Sue Thomas were nominated as directors to replace Phil and Linda Smith whose terms had expired. Also nominated as part of this slate for re-election was Al Pulling. The slate was unanimously elected.

DIRECTOR'S MEETING - Following adjournment of the regular meeting at 8:05 p.m. a special director's meeting was held for the purpose of electing officers. Elected as vice-president was Connie Youngstrom replacing Bob Perkins who declined to run citing two other section offices he held. All other present section officers were elected: Herb Ogden, President; Al Pulling, Treasurer; Jake Sherman, Secretary, and Bob Perkins, Historian.

Following the meeting, all enjoyed a slide program presented by Bob and Thelma Perkins. They showed slides of family hikes along the Pacific Crest Trail of California between Yosemite and Mt. Whitney during the 1960s. The Perkins' and their four children completed this 212-mile stretch over a period of five summers averaging five miles a day.

Smoke & Blazes Seeks New Volunteer Editor

It is with regret that I must pass the baton for the position of volunteer editor of Smoke & Blazes to another member interested in being the new editor.

Smoke & Blazes is published quarterly, coordinating with the outing schedule's different seasons. Very little needs to be typed as members and directors send their reports and articles by email or disk. Those that do need to be typed are usually short pieces. I have used Microsoft Publisher to create the newsletter, but any software will work. The only other aspect that you should be conscious of is proofreading, which I do once the entire newsletter is laid out. From there, other members become your support team in producing the finished product.

The newsletter is copied/printed in Rutland at Prime Offset and then Roma and Al Pulling, along with other volunteers, prepare the newsletter for mailing.

Smoke & Blazes is by far a team effort. If it weren't for its contributors and those who take the newsletter from print to distribution, it would never happen! What I'm trying to say is that producing the newsletter is fun and you are contributing to your GMC section . . . and you don't have to do it all by yourself!

In the section's Annual Report, Herb mentioned that the section believes that Smoke & Blazes is the oldest continuously published section newsletter. Let's keep the spirit going!

If you are interested in taking on the newsletter, please call me at 802-672-3157 or email me at kapr@vermontel.net, or contact Herb at 775-1350 or lco@together.net.

Thanks,
Kim Jackson

High Water Warning

As of late May, Gould Brook, between the Lower and Upper Cold River Roads, is so high that it probably cannot be crossed dryshod and must instead be forded. To stay dry, use the Wilmoth Hill Road between the Lower and Upper Cold River Roads, west of the Long Trail. We regret the inconvenience. Your local trail maintainers: Killington Section, Green Mountain Club, Rutland, Vermont. For further information, or to volunteer for any of our activities including trail and shelter maintenance, write or call Section President Herb Ogden, 20 Birchwood Ave., Rutland VT 05701, (802) 775-3368, LCO@together.net.

GMC Director's Meeting March 18, 2000

The March meeting of the directors of the Green Mountain took place March 22 at the Kirk Alumni Building at Middlebury College. It was well attended with about three members absent.

As the first order of business, Executive Secretary Ben Rose announced that Don McCain, the owner of the property adjacent to the headquarters in Waterbury Center, which the club was interested in buying, had met the price the board was willing to pay. The pros and cons of the matter were discussed at length and it was voted unanimously to accept the offer. Details pertaining to maintenance of the property such as plowing snow and mowing grass are still being negotiated.

All but $120,000 of the purchase price is assured from grants and donations, and raising the balance was not thought to be a problem.

The directors were less enthusiastic about the May property across the road than they were previously. Problems with sewage disposal and dangers of crossing Rt. 100 between the two properties, also costs of renovating the buildings, were the factors in the change of opinion.

Near the end of the meeting votes were taken to rename parts of the side trail north of Rt. 4 the Sherburne Pass Trail to correspond with the trail south of Rt 4 and to rename some other side trails necessitated by the Long Trail relocation. The meeting was adjourned about 2 p.m. with the next meeting planned for the Inn at the Long Trail in June.

Are You a Turtle?

By Bob Perkins

Do you love to get out for a walk in the woods but fear that Killington Section hikes may go too far or too fast for you? Then maybe you're a turtle.

Randy Travis of the GMC in Waterbury has been leading a series of outings for a group calling themselves the Turtles. My wife Thelma and I joined them on May 31 for a most enjoyable stroll and picnic lunch in the Texas Falls area. Although mostly "mature" hikers, the group welcomes anyone who prefers to enjoy the outdoors at a slow pace.

To learn more about the Turtles and to get on their mailing list, contact Randy at: randall-travis@netscape.net or 802-244-5783.

Killington Section - Green Mountain Club

October 2000

Killington Section - Green Mountain Club Director's Meeting: August 22, 2000

PRESENT: Herb Ogden, Bob Perkins, Bill Robichaud, Al Pulling, Sue Thomas, Gretchen Crowley, Connie Youngstrom, Mark Youngstrom, Jake Sherman, GMC Director of Field Operations Dave Hardy, and special guest Roy Arthur.

SECRETARY'S MINUTES: The minutes from the March 25 annual meeting held at the Unitarian Church were unanimously approved with no additions or corrections.

GOV. CLEMENT SHELTER: One of the main purposes of tonight's meeting was to consider solutions to ongoing problems of partying and vandalism at Gov. Clement Shelter. The situation has become so bad that hikers no longer feel welcome there and are avoiding the shelter. In fact, it was noted that both the current edition of the Long Trail Guidebook and the AT Wing-foot book urge hikers not to stay there. Tired hikers may arrive to find a loud, alcohol-fueled party in progress or the partiers might show up at 10 or 11 P.M. after the hikers have sacked out. Often this occurs on weekends. Other damage reported by those present included deep ruts left by a pickup truck, beer bottles around the fireplace, trees cut down, and sometime ago the middle post of the roof support yanked out. Gretchen stated that every hiker Jerry Parker meets asks about the safety of the shelter.

Over the course of a long discussion many solutions were raised including getting more law enforcement up there, posting strong warning signs, banning fires, and relocating the trail away from the shelter. Other more radical measures included gating the access road, a "tank trap" and actually relocating the shelter a mile or two further up the trail.

Since Gov. Clement is the oldest shelter on the LT and a historic landmark, tearing it down and moving it was definitely a last resort. Problems were also seen with gating which would have to secure town approval, would not likely be favorably received by camp owners along the road, and would not keep out ATVs or even trucks which could approach from another direction. Also, experience has shown that gates themselves can become a target of vandalism.

Roy Arthur pointed out that the Vermont Association of Snow Travelers (VAST), a snowmobile club, puts up money to pay for sheriff's patrols who go up to Gov. Clement every weekend between Dec. 15 and April and keep things in order. He didn't know what the cost of this was as it was coordinated by Frank Wilk of VAST.

Herb proposed we initially adopt a three-fold approach: (1) contract with sheriffs and constables to go up each weekend day and one day during the week, (2) put up durable signs saying the shelter is for hikers' use only, and (3) moving the trail away from the shelter. This approach was subsequently adopted with the exception that instead of contracting with the constables Dave Hardy suggested checking with the forest service's law enforcement officer to see what kind of higher profile program could be set up between now and Columbus Day. In a memo the following day, Dave reported that he had talked to Kim Kinville of the U.S. Forest Service and she had agreed to visit the shelter the next few weekends, probably after dark. With regard to fires, he stated that legally they would have to be banned from a resource perspective not a behavior perspective. He also noted again that ATVs are illegal on public lands or town highways and could be ticketed. In addition, the GMC, per the motion, will post signs at the shelter, distribute brochures, and proceed with a trail relo.

Herb said he still needs to contact a mason regarding repair of stonework at Gov. Clement.

CLARENDON GORGE: Dave reported that a paved parking lot with a better bulletin board at Clarendon Gorge is in the works. There will be money to build the lot through a Federal Highway Enhancement Grant and they are presently getting design bids. However, the parking lot work can't happen until the railroad work gets done. The GMC is hopeful that ultimate management of the gorge will be changed from the state to the U.S. Forest Service.

Another positive development reported by Dave is that the present suspension bridge across the gorge has been checked out by federal engineers and found to be safe due in large part to "overdesigned abutments." These federal inspectors will be coming back every two years to check it out. Still, many hikers find the swaying traverse of the structure a scary experience. Dave said its replacement by a rigid-arch, pedestrian-static, bikeway-type bridge would be the ultimate solution.

PICO CAMP: The GMC plans to build a new Pico Camp a little less than half way up the new Long Trail south from Rte. 4. Dave asked for input from the section as to how it felt about locating the shelter in that area. The proposed site is 1.8 mi. from Rte. 4 and at an elevation of 2490 feet (above 2500 feet requires filing for an Act 250 permit!!). The shelter would be five miles from Cooper Lodge and 3 1/2 to

MT. OKEMO HIKE - BREAD LOAF/ KILLINGTON JOINT HIKE

by Gordon & Helen Cawood

The trip was cancelled due to threatening weather. Thunderstorms were predicted. The observation tower would not be the place to be. Only one person from Breadloaf Section had registered - Carol Kress. Only one person from Killington Section had registered - Ray Catozzi. Jack Burbank (Bread Loaf) called late Friday evening. By that time we already decided to cancel.

PROSPECT ROCK, MANCHESTER

September 16, 2000

by Roma Pulling

We studied the large, black cloud hanging over the park on the morning of this hike and didn't like what we saw. I took a quick mental inventory of the contents of my pack because I wanted to be sure my poncho and rain bonnet were inside. But as seven of us headed south in two cars, the sky started to clear and was blue with white, fluffy clouds for the duration of the hike.

There is a Prospect Rock in northern Vermont, also, which leads to some confusion. They both give good views of valleys below, and the one where we hiked has a pleasant view of Manchester and surroundings. The trail follows the old Rootville Road, now no more than a rocky jeep trail. We hadn't encountered much traffic on previous trips but this time met several 4-wheel-drive vehicles and a group of four 4-wheelers.

As we settled on the rock to enjoy the view and eat our lunch, a strong, cold wind struck us; so we weren't inspired to linger longer than necessary. We returned to our cars and homes, pleased that we hadn't let the dark cloud spoil the day for us.

INTERVIEW WITH W. CHURCHILL SCOTT

12 June 1999 - By Herb Ogden

I interviewed Churchill while driving him to and from the Green Mountain Club's Annual Meeting at Stratton, where he received an Honorary Life Membership in recognition of his years of service to the Killington Section and the Club.

Churchill graduated from high school in 1932. Willis Ross, a postal employee in Rutland, supervised Churchill in Killington Section trail crews in 1933 and probably 1932. It was the depth of the depression and Churchill could not find a job, so Ross recruited him to be caretaker at "Porky Camp," the closed camp on Killington Peak near the present Cooper Lodge. Churchill spent the summer of 1934 there. His parents would drive up to Sherburne Pass with provisions. Though the hike to Killington was shorter via the Bucklin Trail, Churchill preferred the scenic hike in from Sherburne Pass.

The Killington Summit House was gone by the time Churchill first climbed Killington. He could see its foundation stone piles and some debris. The hotel lay between the Bucklin Trail and the pre-1999 Long Trail, just north of the Cooper Lodge spring. Its croquet lawn was the level spot just above Cooper Lodge.

By the time Churchill began trail work in 1932 or 1933, the Long Trail alternate route around the west side of Pico had been abandoned. He never took it. One of the alternate routes in the Pico-Killington saddle had also been abandoned?

Churchill is familiar with the route of the old Carriage Road from Brewers Corners to Killington Peak. He does not know why the Bucklin Trail was built to replace it.

After the 1938 hurricane made the LT between Pico and Killington impassable, Churchill was one of a crew who cleared it. He is not sure who supervised the crew. It may have been Willis Ross if he was still alive then. The hurricane ended the building of Cooper Lodge in 1938. Before the hurricane, materials were hauled up the Bucklin Trail. After it, they were hauled up the Juggernaut Trail from West Bridgewater, now abandoned to the Killington Ski Area's development.

Sometime in the 1970s, Churchill and Preston Bristow scouted a new route for the LT from Gov. Clement Shelter to Cooper Lodge. It ascended west of the present route and went over Little Killington. The present route is not the first that Churchill remembers. The first he remembers followed the brook farther north than the present route does. About a mile north of Gov. Clement, it turned sharply west away from the brook.

Somewhat north of Gov. Clement, an east-west road crossed the LT. There were ruined buildings on it. (Perhaps one of them stood over the cellarhole GMC Field Supervisor Dave Hardy reported finding somewhat north of Gov. Clement in 1998.)

Mortimer Proctor was higher-class than other Killington Section members Churchill thinks he did no trail work, but gave lots of money for the Long Trail Lodge. One of his cohorts from Proctor, named French, was active in the GMC. For a while, there was a GMC Proctor Section. It maintained the LT from Sherburne Pass north to perhaps Brandon Gap.

4 mi. from Tucker-Johnson Shelter to the north. Dave said he is leaning toward a three-sided structure and that it would be 100 yards off the trail. The selected site is by a permanent stream. He needs to make sure the shelter is not going to be too near a possible proposed lift and therefore needs to talk to Killington-Pico about their development plans.

Plans are to leave the old Pico Camp until the new one is built but Sue Thomas and others warned that a big chunk cut out of the porch of the badly worn structure is "really hazardous."

TRAIL MAINTENANCE: The section is fortunate to have had volunteers from various parts of the country working for the past three weeks on the Bucklin Trail. This included a second stream crossing. Bill Robichaud was very pleased with the quality of the work. He added that overgrowth of nettle was becoming a problem and that every hiker should put a pair of clippers in his backpack. Others present however suggested that we have excellent trails compared to "up north," the long section from Johnson up through Hazen's Notch being described as "nettle heaven." While not in our section the nettles up around New Boston are described as "terrible." It was noted that the lower part of the Canty Trail is getting brushed in and clipping was needed. Herb will seek Bill Robichaud's input on a thank you letter to the volunteers who worked on the Bucklin Trail.

MEMORIAL CONTRIBUTION: It was moved and unanimously approved that the Killington Section make a $100.00 contribution out of its general fund to the Long Trail Protection Fund in memory of Ira Hawley. Al and Roma Pulling will write something up for the Herald about the contribution and about Ira's many years of service to the Killington Section and the hiking community.

SMOKE & BLAZES: Kim Jackson has resigned as editor but will keep going for a while until a replacement is found.

VERMONT GROCERS ASSOCIATION HIKE: The Vermont Grocers Association, who apparently will be meeting at Killington, has requested that a member of the section lead them on a hike Friday, Sept. 15, around Killington Peak. The leader would meet them at 10 a.m. at the base of the gondola, ride up with them to the summit, then perhaps hike down the spur trail to Cooper Lodge and the LT. In return they would contribute $200 to the section. Herb appealed for volunteers with the time and inclination to lead it. He himself had initially agreed to do it but subsequently had a scheduling conflict.

HIKE PUBLICITY: The section hasn't had a publicity chairman in some time and publicity on upcoming hikes has been lacking. Gretchen volunteered to take up the slack by calling the Herald and The Mountain Times. We particularly want to get listed in the Herald calendar where our events haven't been included the past couple of weeks. This may be their fault as well as their calendar person just left and a new one is being trained. Herb volunteered to send the hike schedule to the Shopper, the Good News, the Mountain Times, the Manchester Journal, and the Black River Tribune. Meanwhile, Herb has prepared an excellent fact sheet on the section which he plans to post at major trailheads. We should also make a better effort to post our hike schedule on store bulletin boards as well as at the library.

TREASURER'S REPORT: Al Pulling reported that there is presently $943.88 in the checking account and $1346.22 in the savings account. There is also a Killington Section CD worth $1263.79. The Kirk Fund has a balance of $777.61 with $14,606.94 presently in the Kirk Fund CD. The section presently has 74 members including 19 family members, 14 life members, and 41 individual members. Counting all the family members there are 93 members in all.

HIKING GROUP FROM WALES: Sue Thomas noted that there is a hiking group from Wales coming over in October and they want to do a program for us at Green Mountain College, Poultney. Beyond that there isn't too much information at present, though any program would probably be more convenient and attract a larger audience if it were held at a Rutland location such as the city library's Fox Room. It could cost us for stamps if we wanted to send a mailing.

JAMES P TAYLOR EVENT: Herb announced the section has agreed to sponsor a James P. Taylor Series event. Connie Youngstrom will help with the planning.

HIKING GNOME: Hundreds of hot sweaty hikers have enjoyed an ice cold, brook-chilled soda this summer courtesy of the "Hiking Gnome(s)." These unnamed benefactors have distributed over 900 sodas near the Kieffer Road in Shrewsbury, leaving them in the stream for hikers who then deposit the empties in a bag provided for that purpose. Grateful hikers have noted the kindness in a number of trail registers, but the good times are ending as Labor Day is the cutoff. The gnomes not only put the sodas out, they purchase them themselves. We won't give you their identities but the initials are J.P. and G.C.

Adjournment: The meeting was adjourned at 9:55 P.M.

Respectfully submitted,
Jake Sherman, Secretary

Interview with Craig Perkins - 21 May 1991

by Herb Ogden

I interviewed Craig at his home on the Old Turnpike Road (Elbow Road) in Mendon. His wife was present, but I don't think any of the following information came from her. The purpose of the interview was to determine the uses that had been made of the land between Sherburne Pass and Killington Peak, so the Green Mountain Club could use the information to help the National Park Service get the best route for the Appalachian Trail (hence also the Long Trail) on the best terms.

I asked about Mortimer Proctor, who granted the public an easement to use the Long Trail over land he once owned. Craig said Mortimer Proctor was a figure-head rather than a doer in the GMC. He knew nothing about the deed by which Mortimer Proctor gave the public the right to pass over Vermont Marble Company land from Sherburne Pass south toward Killington. Proctor did no trail work. Proctor was not an outdoors person and had little contact with the Killington Section. He was pleasant but had no social contact with the Killington Section. He never heard Proctor express an opinion on anything. Proctor gave the right to build Cooper Lodge.

Craig was not sure when this area was last logged. He graduated from high school in 1920 and began hiking it around 1923. He did not recall seeing any logging roads, skid roads, or brush from logging.

The Killington Section always maintained this part of the LT. The fire lookout who was stationed at the fire tower on Pico Peak (since moved to Killington Peak) probably did no maintenance. The ground return phone line (of which a few insulator pegs can still be seen attached to old trees in 1999) was installed in the 1930s. He is not sure when it was abandoned. It served the fire lookout tower.

The central Green Mountain Club erected a metal camp on Killington Peak. He was there riveting seams in black fly season. The materials were hauled up from the west, probably with a horse. They probably used the LT. (This does not seem consistent with coming up from the west.) They may have had to make more than one trip.

Pedestrian use of the LT varied; he probably could not even give an average number of hikers per year. When he was in high school, he knew few people who hiked up there. He graduated from high school in 1920. When he was on the trail, he usually met no one. He could not guess use in the 1930s; it went in cycles. Other uses of the LT included snowshoe hikes.

His first ascent of Killington, probably when he was in high school, was probably up the Bucklin Trail. They pulled toboggans up with blankets and slept at a metal camp once. They also went up the Bucklin Trail another winter. He recalls no snowshoe hikes from Sherburne Pass to Pico Shelter (now Pico Camp). He does not recall skiing on the LT. George Peck and others skied down the west side of Killington, probably on the Bucklin Trail.

The Long Trail is more worn in recent years, but the first half mile south of Sherburne Pass was always muddy.

To reach Cooper Lodge from Sherburne Pass, he may usually have used the alternate trail that went west around Pico (from Pico Jct. to a point south of Pico Peak, shown on old guidebooks). I don't think he said why.

The Bucklin Trail was opened about when Perkins began to be active. The Carriage Road from Brewers Corners to Killington Peak was still passable then.

He thinks he hired people, maybe the Bucklin boys, to clear the LT after the 1938 hurricane.

The Hellebore Trail up Blue Ridge Mountain existed since about the time he began hiking. It was not used much. He was vague on when it was replaced by the Canty Trail. When he began hiking, the Killington Section barely existed.

The GMC used to be more of a social affair than it is now. Perhaps there used to be fewer competing social activities. The Killington Section used to put more pressure on members to do trail work. When he was a GMC Trustee, it was the same in other Sections. The Worcester Section was the most active in trail work. The Killington Section kept an average balance between socializing and working outdoors.

Smoke & Blazes Seeks New Volunteer Editor

It is with regret that I must pass the baton for the position of volunteer editor of Smoke & Blazes to another member interested in being the new editor.

Smoke & Blazes is published quarterly, coordinating with the outing schedule's different seasons. Very little needs to be typed as members and directors send their reports and articles by email or disk. Those that do need to be typed are usually short pieces. I have used Microsoft Publisher to create the newsletter, but any software will work. The only other aspect that you should be conscious of is proofreading, which I do once the entire newsletter is laid out. From there, other members become your support team in producing the finished product.

The newsletter is copied/printed in Rutland at Prime Offset and then Roma and Al Pulling, along with other volunteers, prepare the newsletter for mailing.

Smoke & Blazes is by far a team effort. If it weren't for its contributors and those who take the newsletter from print to distribution, it would never happen! What I'm trying to say is that producing the newsletter is fun and you are contributing to your GMC section . . . and you don't have to do it all by yourself!

In the section's Annual Report, Herb mentioned that the section believes that Smoke & Blazes is the oldest continuously published section newsletter. Let's keep the spirit going!

If you are interested in taking on the newsletter, please call me at 802-672-3157 or email me at kapr@vermontel.net, or contact Herb at 775-1350 or lco@together.net.

Thanks,
Kim Jackson

Killington Section - Green Mountain Club

January 2001

Killington Section - Green Mountain Club Director's Meeting: January 2, 2001

PRESENT:

Herb Ogden, Bob Perkins, Bill Robichaud, Al Pulling, Sue Thomas, Gretchen Crowley, Connie Youngstrom, Ruth Gibbud, Jake Sherman, and guest Mark Youngstrom. GMC Director of Field Operations Dave Hardy was absent due to illness.

SECRETARY'S MINUTES:

The minutes of the Aug. 22 directors meeting were unanimously approved with no additions or corrections. These minutes have already appeared in the October, 2000, issue of Smoke & Blazes.

BUCKLIN TRAIL CONTROVERSY:

The past few months have seen growing controversy over measures taken to reduce and eliminate usage by ATVs or other motorized vehicles of the Bucklin Trail, the popular side trail from Wheelerville Road to the Long Trail and ultimately Killington Peak.

In October a letter-to-the-editor writer to the Rutland Herald complained about the boulders and tank traps that have been set up to discourage motorized traffic. Herb Ogden responded in November with a letter defending these measures, noting that ATVs had destroyed half the water bars on the upper portion of the Bucklin and these would require hundreds of man hours to replace. In December Herb's letter drew an irate and personal response from an ATVer.

Directors felt it was important to approach the issue in a calm manner, avoid fruitless exchanges, and explain the legalities. It was also important to involve the state, the city of Rutland, and the main club. The city of Rutland owns the watershed from the Wheelerville Road to the Killington line and does not want to encourage motorized use that would adversely affect water quality. Nevertheless it might be reluctant to ban it completely due to logging. The upper portion of the trail is on land owned by the state. It is illegal to run ATVs on state land without permission and such use is subject to fine. Bill Robichaud reported that about four years ago the state was giving consideration to finding a new route for the Bucklin but later changed its mind and told Dave Hardy it wanted the GMC to keep the trail on the road.

It was finally decided that the Killington Section along with the GMC should request that Conrad Motyka, chief of the Vermont Forest, Parks & Recreation Department, and the City tell us their stand on motorized vehicle traffic on the trail. State forestry official Gary Salmon has suggested that the best response would be a joint state/city/USFS statement. Another thought was to contact the Appalachian Trail Conference (ATC) to see if they become involved in side trail issues.

GOV. CLEMENT SHELTER:

Herb, Dave Hardy, and others have given much thought to the wording of a sign at the shelter that would make clear that it was primarily intended for nighttime use by backpackers. One draft stated: "Welcome to the Governor Clement Shelter. This shelter is maintained by the Green Mountain Club for public use; overnight use is limited to backpackers only. Continued overnight use that discourages backpackers will result in removal of this shelter." Various modifications of this wording were discussed and it was also suggested that additional wording to the effect that the shelter "may be patrolled" would help stem mayhem and vandalism by rowdy partiers. Al Pulling said he had been up to the shelter last fall and put in two center posts. This is important since a heavy load of snow on an unsupported roof could cave it in.

Come spring Bill and Greg Western, the GMC Assistant Director of Field Operations, plan to eyeball a possible relocation of the trail around the shelter. Also suggested was that we encourage the main club to scout out potential sites for a second shelter between Clarendon Shelter and Cooper Lodge. This shelter would more or less replace Tamarack Shelter which was taken down a few years ago because of its proximity to Killington's Juggernaut Ski Trail. There was discussion as to whether this shelter would be better sited higher up at or near Consultation Point or lower down near a brook. It was noted that Consultation Point might be too windy and exposed.

There continues to be discussion about preventing access to Gov. Clement Shelter by vehicles. Dave Hardy has noted

PLYMOUTH FIVE CORNERS

October 7, 2000

by Roma Pulling, leader

Nine of us met at the park on a very frosty morning and proceeded to Plymouth Five Corners, where we were met by three people who live in that area. The weather, although cool and breezy, was ideal for hiking.

Five Corners was settled as the result of a gold rush in the late 19th century. For a while there were mills, a blacksmith shop, a school, store and hotel, but it did not prove to be a profitable enterprise. Now all that remains are foundations of former buildings. Five corners are formed by roads running to South Woodstock, Reading, Hale Hollow Road, Coolidge State Park, and one that connects with Rt 100 near the Coolidge Cemetery. Two of these roads are closed to traffic now.

Our first goal was to inspect the remains of a foundation in the brook believed to be that of one of the mills. Leaving our cars parked in that area, we walked up Bradley Hill, looking for cellar holes as we climbed. The Plymouth residents were helpful with this enterprise, and we were able to locate four. Continuing on Bradley Hill, we kept to our right where there is a sign for the Five Corners Cemetery and walked there. We were interested to find a listing of the burials under glass near the entrance gate.

Finding comfortable places to sit, we ate our lunch in the cemetery and then returned to our cars. This is an area that never fails to arouse my interest.

PATCH HOLLOW

December 16, 2000

by Herb Ogden, Leader

This was meant to be a ski tour, but the half-dozen participants all walked instead. We did meet a skier on one of Spring Lake Ranch's trails, but he said it was uncomfortably bony. The bridges on the relocated Long Trail leading south to Patch Hollow would have been especially difficult with the shallow snow cover.

Thanks to Spring Lake Ranch, there was plenty of parking at its trailhead. Several cross country skiers had made a track west to Minerva Hinchey Shelter; we walked to the side of it, observing proper trail etiquette. We stopped briefly at the shelter and reflected that its predecessor, Sunnyside Camp, was once the Blue Triangle Camp and stood near Gov. Clement Shelter. We then followed the LT south through pretty winter woods to the old road up to Patch Hollow, which the relocation uses. Although the relo opened only in 1999, the old trail south over Button Hill could not be seen.

At Patch Hollow, now that the weeds were down, we could see the little foundation just west of the LT. We also noted the old orchard. We wondered who lived there, and when. We lunched amidst the beavers' handiwork (or should it be teethiwork) of many gnawed-down trees. They had even taken down some pretty big ones. The view south across their pond was pretty.

We varied our route a little on the way back, using a Spring Lake trail that runs west of the LT. There were tracks of moose and other animals. This was a nice little three mile jaunt.

HALF MOON STATE PARK

January 14, 2001

by Roma Pulling, leader

This was a gloomy day because there was no sunshine, like so many days this winter, but the temperatures were comfortable and we actually had snow on the ground. It was one of the most enjoyable winter outings I have been on in several years.

We met four other hikers at the park and headed for Half Moon, passing Lake Bomoseen and Austin, Roach, Bresee and Black ponds on the way. Ice fishermen were out in large numbers, mostly on Lake Bomoseen. We saw no one at Half Moon, even though there were tracks of hikers and skiers who had been there before us. Animal tracks were common too, especially those of deer who had been pawing in the snow under oak trees, perhaps to feed on acorns.

Some people came equipped with both skis and snow shoes, but after some discussion we all headed out on snow shoes. Two people hiked all the way to High Pond while the rest of us went a short distance and then returned to a trail junction Alfred had chosen a place for our fire. We had used a plastic toboggan to haul wood and supplies in and now took those items off so we could use it for a table! On it we spread hot dogs, rolls, ketchup, mustard, hot beverages and cups.

Meanwhile, Alfred had quickly built a fire, and by the time the hikers returned we were ready. It is amazing how good the hot dogs, coffee and even soup mix tastes in the outdoors, and we made the most of it. The subject of doing more hiking was discussed, but one person had another commitment and we made a day of it, returning home with very pleasant memories.

in e-mail correspondence that the routes to the shelter could be regarded as driveways and blocked off with boulders. If vehicles were then parked on the town road, they would be in violation of blocking a town road.

PICO CAMP:

It is clear that the days of the present Pico Camp are numbered but no one has a definite date for when the old and ailing structure will come down. Meanwhile, there are plans for a new Pico Camp which will be erected on the new LT about a mile south of Route 4. This shelter will be built by the GMC but it is unclear whether Killington or the GMC is going to pay for it. We might put out a request for volunteer help to section members once construction gets closer.

GMC TAYLOR SERIES:

Arrangements and assignments were made for the next GMC Taylor Series lecture which is being hosted by the Killington Section. The event is entitled "Trail Magic" and will take place Friday, January 19, at 7:00 P.M. at the Unitarian Church, West Street, in Rutland. Featured will be Jeannie Hines who will present slides, music and stories from her 1997 Appalachian Trail thru hike from Georgia to Maine.

Sue Thomas volunteered to take responsibility for posters and signage; Connie Youngstrom and Ruth Gibbud will share responsibility for refreshments; Bob Perkins will set up a GMC Exhibit on the back tables, and Herb Ogden will make sure the facility is ready and needed equipment such as a screen provided. Herb will also introduce the speaker. Sue and Gretchen will share publicizing the event to local media. There is a $50 rental fee to the church. It was decided that it would be much nicer and roomier to hold the event upstairs.

SMOKE & BLAZES:

Bob Perkins has risen to the challenge by volunteering to take over Smoke & Blazes from outgoing editor Kim Armstrong. Kim had appealed for a successor in the last two issues without success.

Bob's willingness to take this on was conditioned on a replacement being found for him as co-chair with Bill Robichaud of the Trails & Shelters Committee. A search for a replacement is now in progress. Special thanks to Bob for taking on this vital job.

TREASURER'S REPORT:

Al Pulling reported that there was presently $1007.63 in the section's checking account and $1,346.22 in the savings account. In the Kirk Fund savings there is $777.61. There are 14 life members, 19 family members, and 53 individual members for a total of 86 memberships representing 105 actual members.

ANNUAL MEETING:

A date of March 31, 2001 was set for the Killington Section annual meeting. There will be no special program that night as the directors meeting and the main meeting take up a good bit of time after dinner. The terms of three directors will be expiring at this time but no additional candidates are needed unless any which to step forward.

ADJOURNMENT:

The meeting was adjourned at about 9:00 P.M.

Respectfully submitted,

Jake Sherman, Secretary

On Spruce Ledge

by Roma Pulling

Since the day I read about the replacement for Ritterbush Camp being built south of Devil's Gulch in 1998, I was determined to see it. At the time of the dedication May 1, 1999, we had other commitments; so our plans for that date were foiled. This fall (November 2000) an opportunity came our way when we were in northern Vermont visiting family. We spent the night in a motel, listening to election returns on TV, and early the next morning we were off.

The trail starting on Route 118 had been relocated since Alfred and I were there in 1983, and we were momentarily confused by a side trail that seemed to head north whereas we wanted to go south. Getting oriented and picking up the Long Trail across the road from the new parking lot, we made good time on our route. The location of the old Ritterbush camp seems to have been completely obliterated, or at least we didn't see it, and we were soon at Devil's Gulch, a part of the trail that has always fascinated me with its boulders the size of houses, requiring a great deal of scrambling. The new shelter is .7 mile south of the gulch and about .6 mile on a side trail east of the LT.

Spruce Ledge camp was built by the Laraway Section and other volunteers and has sliding doors and bunk space for eight campers. The area has been developed with a picnic shelter off to one side and a camping area with a bench. We were very favorably impressed and made use of the picnic facility to eat our lunch before starting north on the trail to return to our car. The Laraway Section and other workers are to be congratulated on a job well done.

Harold Rogers was a loyal member of the Killington Section for many years before he was forced to discontinue hiking due to physical problems. He had been a Board Member and a good hike leader. A lot of old-timers remember the winter hikes he led nearly every year on the Quarterline Road in Rutland Town. There was always a saw in his right hand. Harold said he couldn't hike without something to carry, and that saw came in handy many times when the group wanted to build a fire at lunchtime.

When Harold passed away October 21 he was a resident of Genesis Eldercare, but his home was on Kendall Avenue with his wife, Alberta. He was the father of five daughters and three sons by his first wife, Florence, who predeceased him. He had worked as a carpenter, also at Vermont Tubbs, Wilson Moving and Storage, and at Trinity Episcopal Church as sexton. Those who knew him have many fond memories.

Letters From The Field . . .

Greetings. We have received the generous $100 contribution from the Killington Section in memory of Ira Hawley. We very much appreciate this support in honor of a long-time member of the GMC who was a strong supporter of the Long Trail Protection Campaign. Please convey our thanks to all members of the Section.

Director of Development
Green Mountain Club

Dear Mr. Ogden,
I met you at the trailhead parking lot on hwy Vt. 140 on 23 Sept., a wet Saturday morning. We were all hiking up White Rocks Mt. I was thru-hiking the LT at the time. I am glad to say that I arrived at the northern terminus on 8 Oct, and I am now back at home in Alabama with my family. My purpose in writing is to commend you, as GMC President of the Killington Section, for the condition of the LT from Vt. 140 to Sherburne Pass. This was one of my favorite sections of the trail. As a hiker, I would like to thank you and your supporters/maintainers for the obvious hard work that has gone into the maintenance of this section of the LT. Please ... keep up the good work, Herb.

Warmest regards,

E.T.

Bob Perkins New Smoke & Blazes Editor

Bob Perkins has graciously volunteered to continue publishing Smoke & Blazes starting with the next issue in April. I have enjoyed compiling the issues for the section, but it is time for me to pass the torch. For the April 1 deadline, please remember to submit anything to Bob, at the address listed on page three. It has been a pleasure receiving all the fun stuff about the section over the past few years!

Sincerely,
Kim Jackson

Killington Section Holds 2001 Annual Meeting and Pot Luck

By Jake Sherman, Secretary

The March 31 meeting was as usual held at the Unitarian Church in Rutland. Following a tasty potluck supper, it was called to order about 6:35 by Pres. Herb Ogden. About 30 members were in attendance.

Secretary's Minutes: The minutes from the 2000 annual meeting were unanimously approved. They had previously appeared in Smoke & Blazes.

Treasurer's Report: A written report was provided by Al Pulling. As of the end of the year 2000 there was a total of $3,653.26 in assets with $965.63 in the checking account, $1,375.49 in the savings account, and $1,312.14 in a CD. The Kirk Trails & Shelters Fund ended the year with total assets of $15,586.73, a gain of $385.33 from the previous year. This consisted of $14,639.37 in CDs and a savings balance of $947.36. Meanwhile, the section has a total of 88 members, a gain of 10 from the previous year. There were 50 individual members, 24 families, and 14 life members. If two were assigned for each family membership, the total would be 112. Al's report was unanimously approved. In discussion it was noted that at least a part of the funds to replace Pico Camp might have to come from the Kirk Fund. It is still not known if the GMC will bear all the cost. Part of the money may also come from the American Skiing Co.

President's and Trails & Shelters Reports: Herb Ogden and Trails & Shelters Chairman Bill Robichaud brought us up to date about section news in a variety of areas:

Bucklin Trail: -- A few years ago this popular side trail from Wheelerville Road to the summit of Killington Peak began to be heavily used by all-terrain vehicles. The ATVs unfortunately wrecked numerous stone waterbars, particularly on the upper half of the trail, which had taken many man-hours to build and required many more to fix. To deal with the problem the state had "tank traps" and large boulders put in the trail, tore out some log bridges, and dragged deadwood onto the sides of the woodroad to narrow it. Some ATVer's have protested these measures as "overkill". Last fall the issue surfaced in the Rutland Herald letters column where a letter from Herb, in response to an ATVer's letter, drew an irate response from another writer. State officials now feel that they may have acted too aggressively and should have first posted signs to warn the ATVer's. Herb agreed that signs should have been posted first but expressed skepticism about their effectiveness. At any rate, state, federal and GMC people came together over the issue and there will be a concerted effort to enforce ATV prohibition on the trail this summer, possibly by contracting with sheriffs to provide policing.

Gov. Clement Shelter -- This venerable stone structure is the oldest shelter on the entire Long Trail. Unfortunately, it is easily accessible to normal vehicles and has become a popular spot for rowdy beer partiers who intimidate and discourage hikers from staying there. Some guidebooks even make a point of warning hikers to avoid it. Signs, visits by Forest Service and law enforcement personnel, and a short trail relocation around the shelter are some of things the club is trying to do about the situation.

From the Editor

It is with mixed feelings of nostalgia and anticipation that I step into the capable shoes of Kim Jackson who has so competently edited this publication for the last several years.

I remember helping my parents, Craig and Mary Perkins, crank the mimeograph machine in our living room to turn out copies of the early issues of Smoke and Blazes which they inaugurated in October, 1948. For half a century while I was away from Rutland, S&B was my primary, almost only, connection with the club. I could not turn down the opportunity to continue the Killington Section tradition of sponsoring the oldest continuously published section newsletter in the Green Mountain Club.

Another attraction of this assignment for me is the excuse it gives me to learn desktop publishing. My professional computing experience did not include that skill, but I am making good progress.

A concern was that there might be a shortage of material to fill the pages. It's clear that this hasn't been a problem for this issue. My sincere thanks go to all who contributed. I encourage hike leaders to continue to send in their reports, and I invite everyone to submit suggestions, letters to the editor, or pieces on any topic that might be of interest to fellow members. My e-mail and snail-mail addresses are at the bottom of the column to the left

I hope to publish S&B quarterly in February, May, August, and November. Over the years the schedule has varied: sometimes three, four, or six times a year. In its earliest years S&B was a monthly. In those days first class postage was three cents.

Don't Forget to Renew

Green Mountain Club and Killington Section dues are collected on a calendar year basis.

If dues are not paid for year 2001 you probably will receive no more issues of Long Trail News or Smoke & Blazes.

Meeting

At present we are negotiating with the Forest Service over how strongly worded the sign can be. There has also been discussion of digging a barrier between the road and the shelter but this is seen as a maximum measure. A few years ago the shelter's middle support post was pulled out and still needs to be repaired. At some point we plan to go to the Shrewsbury Select Board and explain to them what's going on and what we're trying to do.

Cooper Lodge -- There is ongoing debate over whether this shelter, another venerable shelter in our section, originally built by the CCC in the 1930s, high up on the west face of Killington, should be removed. The shelter, for the past 15 years or so, has been the responsibility of the main club and there is an adopter, Ruth Cooper Lamb, whose family name the shelter honors. However, damage to the shelter from skiers has become a chronic problem and every winter it takes a beating. Five or six years ago a new roof was put on, but, with people skiing off the roof, it now leaks. The adopter has expressed the belief that the ski area should oversee the winter use of the shelter and that if that can't be worked out the shelter ought to be abandoned and relocated elsewhere. Three years ago the directors passed a motion encouraging the ski area to do more on the upkeep of Cooper Lodge.

Pico Camp -- The present shelter will need to be replaced when the Killington-Pico interconnect is built and, at any rate, is not in good shape. Two sites for a new shelter are being considered on the new LT relocation. One is at the biggest brook between Route 4 and Pico Peak, while the other is higher up in a birch glade. The question with the latter site is whether the water source is good enough.

Clarendon Gorge Bridge -- There is good news on this front. The bridge has been inspected by professional inspectors from the National Park Service and found to be in good condition, safe, and likely to last a long time. Moreover, the Park Service has agreed to inspect the structure every two years.

Route 4 Trail Head -- We owe a debt to the Vermont Department of Transportation and state highway crews for keeping the parking area of the new LT trail head on Rte. 4 plowed out this winter. However, this area on the south side of the highway about two miles below Sherburne Pass still has a rather rough appearance. There is a beautiful landscape architect's plan for its development but at present no money to fund it.

James P. Taylor Series: Section vice-pres. Connie Youngstrom reported that our sponsorship of a Taylor Series lecture on Jan. 19 was a success. The event was held at the Unitarian Church and attracted more than 30 people, which was not bad at all considering the weather. The speaker was Jeannie Hines of Plainfield, NH, who presented in slides, music and stories her Appalachian Trail thru hike from Georgia to Maine in 1997. Connie felt she did a nice job and had a great sense of humor. Herb asked if there was sentiment for hosting another Taylor lecture next year and Sue Thomas, who contributed posters and other publicity for this event, suggested scheduling it when the weather was better, perhaps during foliage season. It may be, however, that the series is only done during the winter months. A show of hands indicated support for sponsoring another event.

Smoke & Blazes: Kim Armstrong Jackson served admirably for a couple of years as editor of our publication but was finally compelled to relinquish the reins. Fortunately, she agreed to stay on until a successor was found. All are pleased that Bob Perkins has stepped forward to assume this responsibility.

Bob said he was learning a lot about desktop publishing and thanked all who have submitted material to him. He reminded and encouraged hike leaders to submit their reports in a timely fashion. The newsletter comes out every three months and deadlines are the first or second week of the month of publication.

Outings Committee: Sue and Connie have been handling this all-important committee that puts together the quarterly schedule of hikes, outings, and other get-togethers. Sue expressed the need for those who wish to lead hikes to notify them in a timely way.

Gretchen Crowley has volunteered to contact various local media about publishing our hike schedule. It was noted that the Herald has been better in this regard now that Jack Crowther is handling it.

Historian's Report: Bob reported that we are making efforts to preserve our history. A big part of this has been our agreement with the Rutland Historical Society to provide a permanent home for any scrapbooks, clippings, archives, memorabilia, or complete runs of Smoke & Blazes we care to submit to them. Anyone with pictures or other material is encouraged to add them to our holdings at the Society.

Green Mountain Club Director's Report: As usual there are many new developments and projects emanating from Waterbury, but as GMC director Al Pulling noted, "95% of the time the talk is of money." The last GMC board meeting was held Jan. 20. One big project on the front burner is a new pedestrian bridge crossing of the Lamoille River. The proposal is for a suspension bridge over the river's main and secondary channels, which would cost $165,000.

Also mentioned was an agreement with Jay Peak to control more land around the Jay Peak ski area. Another area up north to receive attention was the former Champion lands in the Northeast Kingdom where the GMC has expressed interest in becoming the "corridor manager" for hiking trails. Al also reported that he raised a question at the meeting about the club's policies on cleaning up after your dog during a hike and allowable distances from the trail for canines to "do their business".

The GMC is also seeking volunteers to make presentations to school, scout, and other groups about its goals and in particular the "Leave No Trace" program. It was noted that long before this our section was the first to adopt a "pack it in, pack it out" policy.

Old Business: There was none from last year.

New Business: Herb sought input on the question of memorial gifts...whether the section ought to be making contributions outside the club, even if it is in memory of a valued member. The feeling was that memorial contributions from our limited funds should be limited to the GMC.

Election of Directors: Unanimously reelected to second three-year terms as directors were Bob Perkins, Jake Sherman, and Connie Youngster. There were no other nominations from the floor.

Election of Officers: The directors adjourned for the traditional brief meeting to elect officers. This was quickly accomplished by reelecting the present slate. The officers are: Herb Ogden, Pres.; Connie Youngstrom, Vice-Pres.; Jake Sherman, Secretary; Al Pulling, Treasurer and GMC Director; Bob Perkins, Historian; Bill Robichaud, Trails & Shelters Chairman.

Ray's Hobblebush: Before the meeting adjourned, Ray Catozzi reminded all those interested in a few sprigs of hobblebush to sign his list. It will be another few weeks however, as right now there is so much snow he can't even find the bush.

Program: Providing the evening's entertainment was Herb Ogden who offered a humorous account of the life of one Jarvis Snodgrass, who gave his name to the famed Jarvis Snodgrass Memorial Sanitary Annex at Gov. Clement Shelter. Actually, this celebrated "two-holer" was purchased by Herb's father back in the '60s and trucked to the location it would occupy for the next 30 or so years. Unfortunately, the structure burned three years ago. The various phases of Snodgrass's career occasioned much hilarity, notably his opposition while a legislator to a "clean privy" bill and his death of "aromatitis" at Consultation Point. While it was tempting to believe in a real Snodgrass, whose tenure as Percival Clement's Lt. Governor was all too brief, the whole thing was an April Fool.

Ripton Area Bike Trip

29 October, 2000

By Ruth Hare

This ride never happened as planned. The morning in late October dawned with blustery wind, swirling snow and a temperature probably around 30. After waking up and looking outside, and reflecting that I had received not one inquiry beforehand from an interested rider, I concluded that no one could possibly be crazy enough to show up for that ride in that weather. So I went back to bed. If anyone was indeed crazy enough, I apologize for disappointing them and promise to try it again in a more favorable season.

Hike to Baker Peak

4 November, 2000

By Connie Youngstrom

Once again the Killington Section was blessed with a lovely autumn day. The skies were pale blue, the air balmy and calm. After delivering the cars to the bottom of the Lake Trail, our group of seven set off on the AT/LT south in the direction of Baker Peak. Passing over the bridge that spans Big Branch Brook, we noticed several perfect swimming holes but got no further than discussing and daring each other to take a dip.

The trail followed an old road on a gentle grade so walking was easy. The loud crunching of dry leaves underfoot and the splash and tumble of the brook alongside was our background music most of the way. Now that the trees are entirely free of leaves, their trunks stood out boldly against the warm tans and browns of the forest floor. The different tree species held varied textures and hues, fascinating to observe closely. Evergreen ferns and club mosses, as well as the many different lichens and mosses, were in showy greens and blues now that they were not competing with the rest of the summer greenness.

We made Baker Peak our lunch stop and found plenty of rocks to sit on. Clouds began to move in from the northwest as we finished up our lunches and munched Halloween candy. Other hikers arrived and shared the hazy view to the west of the hills and fields in Danby and the big marble quarry on the mountainside. Via the Lake Trail, we crossed several splashing streams while making our return to Route 7 and the cars.

Mt. Moosalamoo

27 January, 2001

By Gordon and Helen Cawood

This was meant to be a joint Breadloaf/Killington Section snowshoe. The morning of the hike Sue Thomas called to say that it was snowing heavily in Rutland, and that the Killington group decided against making the trip.

Six of us started out in spite of the looks of the sky. From Camp Keewaydin we snowshoed up Summit Road to its junction with Keewaydin-Overcliff Trails. Dull, hazy conditions limited viewing. Nevertheless, we saw Lake Dunmore and the hills to the west from Overcliff Trail. From that height the fishing shanties on the lake looked like Monopoly game hotels.

Thanks for coming Pat, Barbara, Fern, and Kim. We enjoyed your company.

Barnard District No. 2 in Winter

3 February 2001

By Herb Ogden

This was billed as a hike, snowshoe or ski tour, depending on conditions. Luckily, everyone brought snowshoes, for the snow was at least two feet deep in places. Also luckily, no one brought skis, for various moose had made such a hummocky mess of the old roads in places that skiing would have been frustrating and difficult.

While we saw no moose, one hiker's dog did find a moose antler while we were lunching, and one of us soon found the antler's mate close by. Apparently a moose feels off-balance once one of the heavy antlers comes off and works like mad to get rid of the other as soon as possible. The antler finder cut quite an interesting figure on the way back, with two huge antlers tied to his pack.

We went in from the Smith Hill Road, which leads from the Stony Brook Road in Stockbridge east to the Nye District of Barnard, over Delectable Mountain (of which Mount Hunger is a peak!). Leaving our cars where the 1869 Beers Atlas of Windsor County shows a side road heading south, we walked up Smith Hill Road to the next brook crossing, followed the old Smith Hill Road for a couple hundred feet, then diverged southerly on a wide woodroad. After a half mile or so, we turned west on another wide woodroad, crossed Davis Hill Brook, and reached the old side road shown in the 1869 atlas.

We soon passed an enigmatic huge rock pile on the north. On several sides it is laid up in nice dry masonry but apparently contains no cavity and serves no apparent purpose. One of us heard from an old-timer that it was an Indian grave. Coming to a height of land with a nice view west, where a house stood in 1869, we encountered smaller laid-up rock structures, also mysterious. From here, it was easy going to the road from Stony Brook to Barnard District No. 2, apparently abandoned soon after 1911. Years before that, it used to lead over Delectable Mountain to the Chataugay Road in Barnard, as shown in the 1869 atlas. Parts of it are now very hard to find, as some people who were with me on a hike a few summers ago found out firsthand in an unplanned way.

From a cellar hole in the middle of a log landing, we snowshoed east on the old road, soon reaching an old farm site on a terrace overlooking a brook. At the edge of the terrace, a root cellar had been dug. The stone chamber is still mostly intact, though the entrance is mostly blocked by a big fallen tree. We crossed the brook, ascended past another old farm site on the left, and finally came to the site of School No. 2, where there is a large cellar hole. William M. Newton's History of Barnard, Vermont (Vt. Historical Society 1930) has a photo of it, half caved in. If the original school was the building shown in the photo, it was unusually careful construction for a backwoods school, for they usually lacked cellars or even a full foundation. Maybe what began as a dwelling house was converted to a school when the original school fell down. At any rate, though it boasted 31 pupils in 1815, it is long gone, and the whole district has been uninhabited for about a century.

We turned around at the next brook crossing, because a horde of snowmobilers was passing on the far side. We lunched at the old school site and varied our return by taking an old woodroad east to the snowmobile trail over Delectable Mountain, then returned to our original route on that trail. Reflecting on what life in No. 2 must have been like in winter in the early 1800s, we concluded it probably wasn't that much different from life in the country generally, since even non-remote farms were pretty self-sufficient in those days. Still, we wondered what folks did in case of sickness or catastrophe with so few neighbors near, and what it was like to slog a couple miles over hill and dale to that old school every day through the snow.

Shrewsbury Peak Ski and Snowshoe

11 February, 2001

By Connie Youngstrom

With snowshoes strapped to our daypacks our group of four set off on x-c skis on the snow covered CCC road. After two days of warm temperatures and rain, the snow surface proved to be very fast and hard. Clear blue skies and a frigid wind kept us moving to stay warm. We had a nice view of Shrewsbury peak, Saltash Mountain, and several nearby hills as we reached a high point on the road.

After our skis were stashed in a thick stand of balsams, on went the snowshoes for the climb up the Stone Chimney Trail at the site of the old CCC pavilion. We crunched our way noisily up the trail on a crusty snow surface 36 or more inches deep. While the mountain protected us somewhat from the bitter wind, it could be heard whistling in the high branches overhead. Occasionally a chickadee or a white winged crossbill sang from a spruce or balsam spire. Steadily upward we climbed, until the hardwoods gave way to conifers and the going became somewhat tricky. With several feet of snow under underfoot, we were up in the dense evergreen boughs.

Once on the summit, the view stretched from the mountains in New Hampshire to Stratton, Bromley and Magic Mountains, and west to the Taconics. Nearby we saw the wetland areas in Plymbsbury Wildlife Management Area and the hills: Kinsman, Jockey, and Ingalls

The descent was rapid and at times a big slide on our bottoms. With the temperature dropping as sunset approached, we kept up a brisk pace. The ski back was a fast downhill run as the setting sun cast a deep rosy glow on the hills.

Snowshoe to Pico Peak

10 March, 2001

By Steve Williams

Following the significant snowfall of the preceding Tuesday, the first question was where could cars be parked if the parking area on the south side of Route 4 was not open. Bill Robichaud contacted the traffic department responsible for that section of Route 4 who then did a great job of clearing the area, leading to parking space for a whole army, let alone the two cars requiring space.

The hike objective was to reach the proposed new site of the shortly to be relocated Pico shelter. This involved following the Long Trail over a steady but undulating grade generally south east from Route 4. The key features of the hike were one excess and one shortage; the excess being the snow and the shortage being trail blazes. With the recent twenty plus inch snowfall, naturally deeper in gullies, this led to some hard work for the leader, who did a sterling job of making things easier for those behind. The depth of snow also led to some challenges in the crossing of gullies where the technique of avoiding sinking up to your waist was not known to all, and in particular to the writer who found himself in a "locked down" position which required some in-depth digging to allow disentanglement.

With the trail covered by virgin snow, and many tree trunks having snow patches stuck on to them, the visibility of blazes (white, at that) was far from optimum. Several times the trail appeared to have been lost altogether, but Bill, with what we can only assume was training by native Americans at some time in his past, found indentations on the surface of the snow implying the location of a path beneath, leading eventually to the finding of additional blazes.

After some two and a half hours of steady ascent, it appeared that reaching the objective and returning at a reasonable hour were incompatible ideas. During a soup and refreshment break, the democratically arrived at decision was made to declare, "we won" and set off on the return.

Thanks to Bill for the leadership.

Shrewsbury's Big Rock

3 March, 2001

By Barbara and Barry Griffith

Soon after moving to North Shrewsbury we became privileged to know Gordon, Glendon and Marjorie Pierce, proprietors of the Northam store operated by their family since 1918. The Pierces were -- among many other things -- faithful stewards of the land and our local historians.

During our early explorations we discovered a large glacial erratic on the south slope of Shrewsbury Peak. Marjorie identified our find as Picnic Rock. On summer Sundays after church in Northam as a girl, Marjorie related, folks would pack lunches and travel by horse and buggy up the old logging roads for an afternoon picnic at the Big Rock. On March 3, eight of us passed Pierce's Store for our own trip to Picnic Rock. The gods smiled on us, presenting us with a perfect winter day for our hike. Starting at the Tin Shanty, we began our trip on snowmobile trails maintained by VAST, as well as the Catamount Cross-Country Ski Trail. Our snowshoes, optional for the first hour, became necessary for the second half of our trek, as we continued our climb on long-abandoned logging roads. The rock cairns, which mark the way, were covered with snow, but discreet tree markers left last summer kept us going in the right direction.

We made it to the Big Rock by noon. After a circumferential tour, we celebrated with a picnic lunch, which was satisfying, although perhaps not as grand as those of a century ago. After the usual obligatory photographs, the return was all downhill.

Marjorie Pierce recently passed away at age 98, joining her siblings who had predeceased her. The Pierces -- who never married and left no children -- placed the family property in trust, to be preserved and enjoyed by future generations. This report is dedicated to their memory.

Glen Dam

By Roma Pulling

After several "open" winters, I was pleased when this winter brought ample snowfall for winter sports. On St. Patrick's Day fifteen of us went to Glen Dam, which used to be a popular winter hike when Churchill Scott was one of our volunteer hike leaders. It seemed like a good time to repeat this outing.

It had been my plan to delegate a lot of the responsibility for this hike to my husband, as he grew up not far from Glen Dam and was more familiar with the territory. But the 17th turned out to be the day of the GMC directors' meeting in Middlebury, leaving me on my own. There were two people on skis; the rest used snowshoes.

What can I say? We followed the road, which had been plowed, to the dam, and then struck out across lots past the old reservoir and across lands of the Rutland Town recycling shed and athletic fields. After some brief confusion at the town lands, we made our way back to the plowed road, although not exactly at the point I had planned.

I want to thank three people especially: Sue Thomas for coming to my rescue when I was temporarily without wheels; John Rantanen for helping sort out the maze of trails near the athletic field; and Virginia and Churchill Scott for allowing us to park at their house nearby.

1st Annual Shrewsbury Moose Tracking Hike

1 April 2001

By Gretchen Crowley

I must first give credit to Jerry Parker, the real trip leader, who led three women through five feet of snow in the wild Shrewsbury wilderness on the 1st annual Shrewsbury Moose Tracking Hike. The exact location of the hike will not be disclosed; as we are hoping to have more folks join us for the second annual moose tracking hike next year.

It was a dreary Sunday morning as we departed from Rutland to the hills of Shrewsbury for our moose tracking expedition. When we arrived at the designated parking area to begin our expedition, Parker's truck decided to get stuck in the snow, so it took three strong women to help him get his truck out before the expedition could go on. Men drivers!!!

We went out into the woods and tramped around in snow shoes for about 30 minutes when Parker found us a big, old bull moose about 800 lbs., taking a little afternoon siesta in the snow. I was so excited, as this was the first moose I had seen out in the woods in this part of Vermont. Mr. Moose got up from his bed and paced back and forth while Parker tried a few moose calls. The moose was not impressed with this noise, as it really sounded like a dying cow rather than something that would be of interest to him. We got to view the moose for about five minutes (total) when he decided it was time to go find another restful spot without two-legged varmints interrupting his nap time.

We then hiked around for about another hour looking for more moose tracks, but no further tracks or moose did we find. We did get a little misdirected out there in them woods, but a little chocolate from Sue Thomas got the leader right back on track to the cars.

We hope more folks will join us next year for some more moose tracking fun.

P.S. Jerry Parker has more than 35 years of experience when it comes to being out in the woods, and is an excellent tracker and hiking guide.

Vermont Wildernes Slide Show

On May 23 at 6 p.m. in the Fox Room of the Rutland Free Library the Vermont Chapter of the Sierra Club will be sponsoring a talk and slide show about the push to preserve wilderness in Vermont. Bill Robichaud Earns Trail Service Award

Bill Robichaud, Killington Section Trails & Shelters Co-chair, received some well-deserved recognition recently at the Green Mountain Club annual meeting in Bolton. Bill was named winner of the prestigious Roy O. Buchanan Award for ten consecutive years of trail service for the GMC.

It was noted, "He has worked on just about every inch of trail the Killington Section maintains." [That would be more than one and a half million inches. Ed.] In addition to working the trail himself almost every week, Bill leads work parties of Killington Section members and of volunteer youth groups, and serves as an Appalachian Trail corridor monitor in Shrewsbury. Bill says he enjoys chatting with thru hikers that he meets on the trail and that nearly all of them express appreciation for his work

The award is named in honor of Professor Roy O. Buchanan, legendary father of the Long Trail Patrol, which he organized in 1931, and lead for the next 36 years.

Cindy Taylor-Miller Adopts Minerva Hinchey

No, this isn't a probate court story. Cindy, a section member from Wallingford, has adopted Minerva Hinchey Shelter under the GMC's shelter adoption program. This means that she has volunteered to visit the shelter at least three times a year, inspect and report on its condition, and do minor maintenance and repairs on the shelter, the outhouse, water supply, and wash pit.

In her new role Cindy joins other shelter adaptors in our area: Carleton Maxwell, Clarendon; Roy Arthur, Gov. Clement; Ruth Lamb, Cooper; and Erling and Kristian Omland, Tucker-Johnson. Pico Camp is still an orphan. To learn more about the shelter adoption program contact office manager Jane Coffey at Green Mountain Club headquarters in Waterbury.

Steve Williams New Co-chair of Trails & Shelters

Steve Williams, section member from West Pawlet, has accepted the post of Trails & Shelters Co-chair, which he now shares with Bill Robichaud. Thank you, Steve.

From the Editor

Thanks Jon

Any writer or editor knows that it is nearly impossible to verify the accuracy of one's own work. Whatever is on the printed page seems to be what was intended. Fortunately, Jon Mathewson, section member from Middletown Springs, has volunteered to proofread Smoke & Blazes. Of course, I'll be responsible for the errors that slip through, but I can assure you, based on my first issue, that they will be far fewer due to Jon's careful work.

Where's Cold River Cave?

During World War II in the early '40s gasoline was in short supply and was rationed. Section outings were sometimes scheduled to be within walking distance from town. One destination I remember was Cold River Cave.

As I recall, perhaps incorrectly, the cave was on the north side of the river. The crawl-in entrance, maybe three by five feet, was nearly at water level and not more than a few yards from the river. But I have no recollection of where on Cold River it was.

A few weeks ago, in search of the cave, I waded up the river from Old Route 7 to Cold River Road with no success. I'd be happy to hear from anyone who can show me the way to Cold River Cave.

My thanks to all who contributed material for Smoke & Blazes. Trip leaders: If you prefer not to submit a report, please recruit a volunteer to do so.

Mt. HanleyCastleton Rail-Trail

14 April 2001

By Ray Catozzi, leader

On this day in mid-April I had planned an interesting hike one way up Mt. Hanley in West Rutland to the mountain top, then back down to the hang glider take-off platform for lunch, then down a different route to the Whipple Hollow Road.

We had had the heaviest total snowfall of any March in recorded history, so I checked out the trailhead a couple of days before our hike date. There was still two feet of snow covering our trail. I cancelled the hike, but...

We still gathered at our Main Street meeting place where I told the gang of eight my change of plans. We headed for Castleton State College where the D & H Railroad ran right behind the college. This railroad is now a rail-trail. We left a car there and then drove to where the rail-trail crosses Route 30, and hiked five miles back to the college. No elevation gain except climbing over a foot of snow every few hundred yards. It was mostly bare ground, which made an easy, enjoyable hike.

I'll save Mt. Hanley for this fall.

Sucker Brook

Kids' Hike to Rocky Pond

22 April 2001

By Jerry Parker, leader

The first children's hike of the season turned out a small group, which I led up to Rocky Pond in Rutland for some pollywog and frog hunting. The children had a great time, and no one took an early spring dip in the chilly water.

Clarendon Shelter Loop

29 April 2001

By Herb Ogden, leader

Among the sixteen participants in this outing were two octogenarians or thereabouts, and four children, the youngest only 7. All made it from Vt. 103 up the Great Gorge Gulch to Clarendon Lookout, however. At Clarendon Shelter, we met an elderly fellow who had come in on an ATV, I guess from Lincoln Hill Rd., and was busy cleaning up the place. Apparently he does this often. Was this the mysterious "Kestrel" who used to leave beverages in the brook?

We headed up the abandoned Gaynor Road to the brook crossing and then began looking for the two-grave Bullard Cemetery from the 1840s, using directions from the Pullings and Churchill Scott. We found a likely looking spot at the confluence of two streams, but no graves, despite much poking around in the ground by the enthusiastic children. The group then divided. Some went back down the old public road to Route 103, while others explored the barn and house cellarholes above the brook crossing. The children found bits of crockery, an old handle, and possibly the skeleton of a perambulator. Although the Gaynor Road presented sloppy going at this point, apparently having confused itself with a brook, we slogged up it to the Lottery Road, which we followed east to the Long Trail. The LT south of the Lottery Road was so wet I had to carry the 7 year old at one point. The children combed the little cellarhole at the foot of Beacon Hill for artifacts but found none. Just north of Beacon Hill, we walked for a few feet through lingering snow. The brook crossing at Clarendon Shelter was a little tricky on account of meltwater, but most made it dryshod. We then took the Gaynor Road the rest of the way to Route 103, ending a very pleasant sunny Sunday afternoon walk.

White Rocks Picnic Area

5 May 2001

By Ray Catozzi, leader

This afternoon hike is one I've led many times over the years. One time we hiked up the Keewayden Trail to the top of the White Rocks talus slopes and back to the picnic area for a supper cookout.

This time I took the group up the short trail to the open lookout to see the whole talus slope, then down to the ice beds at the bottom of the slope. We did find some ice, a very small amount, but it was there.

We then hiked back to the picnic area for our cookout supper.

Leicester Hollow Bike Trip

6 May 2001

By Ruth Hare, leader

At the park I gathered my "group" for the day – myself and Lucy, whom I'm told is an enthusiastic new club member and outing participant. She proved it that day by explaining that she had dug her bike out from long disuse, determined to tackle the ride.

We decided to change the plans for the day to keep us closer to home and afford a somewhat shorter ride, so we headed up to the Leicester Hollow Trail in Goshen. It was a sunny and reasonably warm early-spring day, perfect for riding. The route, however, demonstrated once again that my sunglasses must be rose-colored: as usual the climbs proved tougher and the trail rougher than I remembered. But Lucy was a good sport and even tackled the many deep water-bars with more aplomb than her leader. Point the handlebars down and -- thump, bump -- she'd be through.

At one point about halfway, temporarily defeated by a particularly cavernous and muddy ditch, we stopped for a short wildflower-identification session.

"Hmm, what's the one with the spotted leaves?"

"Oh, I don't remember."

"Doesn't that little yellow one look familiar?"

"Hmm, sort of."

"Oh, (with relief in the voice) there's a trillium!"

"Yes! That's definitely a trillium."

"Yup, no doubt about it."

Only slightly reassured as to our identification skills, we pressed on and finally reached Silver Lake, where we met up with a couple of club members who had hiked in. There we all basked in the spring sunshine for a while along the beach. And eventually the cyclists coaxed themselves back on the bikes for the bumpy ride back down.

Pomfret to W. Hartford A/T

By Herb Ogden, leader

The weather forecast said 80% chance of rain, and we five hikers got more than 80% of the way before it rained, so I guess we did all right although 100% of us got somewhat wet at the end. Actually, we did quite well, since the sun was out for a good half of this hike and it had been so dry that we were not bothered by bugs.

Driving from Rutland and spotting a car took an hour and a half, so we hit the Appalachian Trail at the South Pomfret to Pomfret Center Road at 10:30 a.m. A steep climb brought us to what one guidebook says is part of the King's Highway, one of the first roads in Pomfret, now a grass-grown snowmobile trail. Just northeast of an old four corners, we found the cellarhole of a house that shows on both the Beers Atlas of Windsor County and the 1911 U.S.G.S.

quadrangle. We liked the old road, but the A.T. diverged east near a smaller foundation. Atop a bare hill, we found a half-dozen members of the G.M.C. Ottauquechee Section enjoying the view, which included Ascutney, probably Stratton, and Okemo. They continued west while we continued east to another nice open hilltop where we lunched in the sun and enjoyed a view of the above plus the whole Coolidge Range.

After lunch, we descended to a very pretty part of Cloudland Road, ascended to the junction with the side trail to Cloudland Shelter, followed it a ways north but concluded it would be too far, and continued over Thistle Hill to a spur trail to the new Thistle Hill Shelter. We didn't go to it, but another hiker said it was nice. Here, we heard an owl hoot repeatedly. Sign of a coming storm? Soon, we encountered three runners on the trail. We descended to the Joe Ranger Road through beautiful woods and fields. Just after we crossed another old road, we found a big cellarhole and barn just south of the trail and a catch basin just north of it. Then the promised rain began, accompanied by rumbles of thunder. The rain was actually refreshing and surely needed. It rained off and on for the rest of the hike, and the continued thunder led us not to linger on the last nameless hill with the beautiful view of the White River Valley.

Fauna: Aside from birds, we saw one deer, two little toads, and a few squirrels and chipmunks.

Flora: Painted and purple trilliums, wild leeks, spring beauties, trout lilies, mayflowers, yellow and blue violets, flowering hobblebush, and some stunningly blooming apple trees.

Kids' Hike to Kit Davidson's

20 May 2001

By Jerry Parker, leader

We had a nice turn out for our hike over to Kit Davidson's in Hubbardton. The kids couldn't get out of the car fast enough to scoop up a fishing net and race down to the ponds to see who could catch a frog the quickest. You have to be pretty quick to catch some of the frogs in Kit's ponds.

The second part of the adventure that day involved looking for rock crystals or diamonds, as some kids called them. The kids could have stayed there all day long filling their pockets if I let them. I did eventually have to drag them away so we could hike out to the overlook and then hike down the trail to the rocky ledges. You had to hang on to a cable to get down in some places. The kids loved this - fearless they are.

I do hope everyone had a good hike, including the adults, and look forward to seeing everyone again on my next hike.

Trail Walk-Thrus

2 June 2001

By Bob Perkins

As is our custom, maintenance walk-thrus of our section of the Long Trail were scheduled for National Trails Day (this year on 2 June) for the higher elevation portion north of Gov. Clement shelter and, on the preceding weekend, for the lower portion to the south.

The weather looked somewhat iffy on the 26th but eight volunteers showed up and Trails & Shelters Co-chair Bill Robichaud assigned four teams of two to cover the trail thru Wallingford and Shrewsbury. The trail was found to be in fairly good condition. Minor maintenance was performed and the locations of a few mud holes and larger blowdowns were noted for future work.

There was nothing iffy about the weather on the following Saturday, however. Our Trails Day outing was completely rained out. (But see Gretchen Crowley's story on the 16 June outing below.)

Griffith Lake

By Barry & Barbara Griffith, leaders

We began by spotting two cars at the end of the old carriage road (now known as the Lake Trail) at Danby's south end. We then proceeded up Forest Road 10 in Mt. Tabor until we reached the AT/LT, parking in a very nice, roomy Big Branch parking lot. As we started we noticed that three of the vehicles in the lot had been vandalized with windows smashed out. In the near distance we could hear shots from the direction of a private camp nearby. This made us a bit nervous about leaving our vehicles there.

Our hike started with eight people and ended with eight. We always see that as quite an accomplishment. From the parking lot (elevation 1500 feet) we walked east on the road for a short distance, then turned right and began a gradual descent heading south on the Old Job/Long Trail. It's an easy hike to the Big Branch Shelter. The trail then paralleled the Big Branch Brook, eventually turning right and crossing the stream via a suspension bridge. At the end of the bridge we admired two huge white-pine trees that appeared to be well over a hundred years old.

Once over the bridge, instead of continuing south on the AT/LT, we turned left and followed an abandoned road (now a trail) along and up Big Branch Brook. Along the way we saw the remains of charcoal kilns from a century ago. Eventually we reached Mill Glen, the Old Job site, where we paused to review the history of the area and the man who once owned this forested expanse, Danby's Silas L. Griffith.

Born in 1837, Griffith returned to Danby after the Civil War intending to operate a general store. However, after acquiring woodlands in Mt. Tabor in payment of a debt, he turned to the business of logging and lumbering. He pioneered the use of saws rather than axes and mills powered by steam rather than water wheels. He used his raw materials efficiently, operating numerous kilns to make charcoal from the branches of the trees not large enough for lumber, and even shipped the sawdust to ice companies to use as insulation.

The Old Job site at Mill Glen was the location of Griffith's first sawmill. By the late 1880s there was a bustling community at this site, with more than forty structures including a large sawmill and charcoal kilns, a large boardinghouse for single men, tenant houses and cottages for families, a schoolhouse, a general store, and a post office where mail was postmarked "Griffith, Vermont". Changing times led to abandonment of the site a century ago. Only a few remnants remain.

Leaving the Old Job site we passed a large mound of sawdust on the left and followed Lake Brook along the Corridor Trail about five miles to Griffith Lake. It was here that Silas Griffith built his summer home where he entertained guests and pursued his passion for trout fishing. Griffith had a carriage road constructed to get supplies and guests to his summer home on the lake. At the Danby Library one can see pictures of how the men built the carriage road.

We didn't linger long at Griffith Lake, as thunder and lightning descended upon us from over the ridge to our west, so down the carriage road we went. This three-mile descent brought appreciation from all as to the road building skills of a century ago to engineer this trail into the side of the mountain. We retrieved our vehicles at Town Highway 10, intact, and went home.

Smuggler's Notch Killington Work Party

By Gretchen Crowley, leader

The 16 June outing that was supposed to go to Stowe for a 12-mile hike on the Long Trail turned into a work party up at Killington. The weather that day was kind of crummy, so I decided to lead a work party (with the help of Bill Robichaud) up to the peak of Killington. Bill's work party from the previous week was a wash out, so there was still plenty of work to be done up there.

At 9:00 AM six of us got to ride the gondola up to Killington Peak. That was a nice treat. At the top, the group and a million bugs set off on the side trail to Cooper Lodge. At Cooper Lodge we doused ourselves in bug juice and then set out in two groups to do some trail work. We worked for about four hours north and south on the Long Trail and called it a day.

Mount Treadway

By Gordon & Helen Cawood, leaders

Ten of us started out from the Putnam Pond Campground off New York Route 74 west of Ticonderoga. From the campground parking area we followed the Grizzle Ocean Trail around the southern tip of Putnam Pond to the trail's intersection with the Rock Pond Trail. North on the Rock Pond Trail brought us to the Treadway Mountain Trail. The bugs were hungrier than we were at the lower elevations. We waited until we got to the wind-blown lower peak to have lunch. After lunch most of us hoofed it over to the higher peak for views. There were distant rumbles of thunder so we didn't stay long.

Our congratulations to Bill Lucas who negotiated the hike with some tricky rock scrambles in spite of impaired vision. And our thanks to those who helped guide him along.

Bear Mountain-Loop White Rocks Lookout

By Bob Perkins

When a trail is relocated and the original trail is abandoned one might think that it would take many years for the old trail to become obscured. Not necessarily so. The Long Trail north of Route 140 was relocated a couple of years ago and replaced with a new trail over Bear Mountain. Our leader, who prefers to remain anonymous, planned to take us up the old trail and to loop back to Route 140 via the new trail.

Cars were spotted and we set out up the road that the old trail had followed. We soon realized that we had missed a right hand turn and had followed the road too far. After some consultation one of our hikers, being of the female persuasion, actually asked a local resident for directions. ;-) challenge was to follow the blazes. There is a good reason why our blazes are painted white. The blazes on the abandoned trail had been carefully painted over in a very rustic cocoa color and were nearly invisible. We never did get lost. We knew where we were at all times. But, eventually, the trail did get lost. The wood road we were following just petered out.

Realizing that discretion is the better part of valor, we reverted to plan B. We retraced our steps to Route 140, retrieved the cars, and drove to the White Rocks picnic area for lunch. After lunch we all went up to the lookout and two of the group went on to the ice beds. The weather was beautiful; the flies were minimal and, in spite of the change in plans, a good time was had by all.

Haystack Mountain

By Steve Williams, leader

Sue Thomas led a small convoy from Rutland to the assembly point at the Williams' residence in Pawlet, a convoy notable for its diversion as a result of the Wells' fair and the loss of one car whose driver elected to follow his own route. Before departure from the Williams' another potential participant was regrettably lost, though whether through the intimidating intrepidity of the remainder of the party or because, as a new hiker, three hours was longer than expected, was never determined. Including the leaders, Steve and Diana Williams, this left ten to tackle the Pawlet Haystack, the southernmost of three small hills running north-south on the east side of Route 30 (not to be confused with the Wilmington Haystack or one other Haystack reportedly located in the northern part of the state).

Accessed from a Route 30 side road some two miles north of Pawlet, the trail follows an overgrown old track for some six tenths of a mile before reaching the Nature Conservancy maintained trail. From this point it is about an hour's hike to the 1900-foot summit. The trail, the undulations, the foliage are all standard Green Mountain, or in this case, Taconic Mountain, fare for which no new literary description immediately comes to mind. However, the view from the rocky summit, north and south along the Mettowee valley, east to Danby and the Green Mountains and west to the Adirondacks does provide a very high reward to effort ratio.

After a half hour of peak and place identification, lunch and use of the photo opportunities available, the descent began. The return trip was notable for meeting up with the previously lost participant who had demonstrated great initiative in finding both the peak and the trail, and was merely an hour and a half behind the rest of the party.

The outing concluded with iced tea and lemonade in the Williams' garden and the cooling of feet in the adjacent Mettowee River. The Williams have to date received no reports of any persons missing from the return trip to Rutland.

Kids' Hike to Chaffee Falls

29 July 2001

By Bob Perkins

Toads and toadstools were the fauna and flora that attracted the most interest of the half-dozen pre-schoolers and the two pre-teens that joined Jerry Parker on this mid-summer kids' hike. Also along for the fun were several parents, grandparents and other adult friends.

We did a loop of about two miles on some of the Pittsford trails with the key destination being Chaffee Falls on Furnace Brook. The brook and falls were flowing quite full in spite of a near record dry July, and the pools below were most inviting. Several of us doffed hiking boots to wade in cool, clear water. You can guess which two managed to get in all over, clothes and all.

These kids are our future club leaders and trail maintainers, folks, and this is the age at which they can be hooked.

A Senior Climbs Vermont's Second Highest

4 August 2001

By Roma Pulling, co-leader

It was always a possibility that we wouldn't be able to complete the climb up Killington but have to wait on the trail for our younger hiking companions to meet us on their way down, but three hours after starting on the Bucklin Trail from Brewer's Corners we hauled our septuagenarian bodies into the clearing at Cooper Lodge. There we parked ourselves for rest and recharging our batteries while the four others crawled the remaining .2 mile to the actual summit to join the communication towers and enjoy the view.

It was a very active day on the mountain. We were told that early that morning there had been a wedding at the top. Among the people entering the clearing at the lodge was a couple looking for "Trail C." We showed them the trail leading down the mountain, which they thought was the right one, but later we met them coming back up, saying they were on the wrong side of the mountain. Further down we saw a plane flying very low, perhaps doing a little aerial photography.

The trail was in good shape and well blazed. It was longer, steeper and strewn with more rocks than it was five years ago (I swear this is true). And I'm not referring to the boulders the size of our car that have been placed to deter 4-wheelers and other motorized atrocities. Those I approve of. [Or ... of those I approve.] The carpets of violet wood sorrel that would have been covered with bloom in July still had a few delicately beautiful blossoms. Wildlife was scarce, but at the lodge a chipmunk came close, but when Alfred tossed it a crust of bread it disappeared, not to be seen again.

Appalachian Trail Days in Damascus, Virginia

By Ray Catozzi

As many of you hikers already know I have been section-hiking the Appalachian Trail for over 15 years now, having completed about 1300 miles of the total 2168-mile trail.

I planned a trip for this May to do a 42-mile southbound piece ending in downtown little Damascus, VA on the weekend of Appalachian Trail Days. The AT goes right thru the center of town and, on Trail Days, thousands of hikers and their families tent all around the town.

This was the fifteenth year Damascus has celebrated the hikers coming through their town and the celebration gets bigger and bigger every year. Saturday afternoon all the hikers and their families gathered at the east end of Main Street and, at a given signal, a parade through town started, led by their fire trucks, police cars, and a Scottish band playing marching music. Up and down the march the hikers were throwing water balloons at the spectators and vice versa. It was a grand, fun-filled parade.

At a gazebo at the recreation field, there were many rock bands playing at different times and hundreds of hikers and families, including young children, were dancing on a large black area in front of the gazebo. Hundreds and hundreds more were sitting down around the dancers, watching and enjoying it all.

Sunday afternoon another band played at the gazebo. A dozen or so young boys and girls were dancing all around the paved area, mostly alone. Then a three-year-old boy came out on the pavement and danced totally naked while all the spectators applauded from the sidelines. It was a completely unexpected occurrence but everyone, including the three-year-old boy, enjoyed it immensely.

Oh, the week-long hike you asked. Yes, it was good. Many miles of the trail were through open, wild horse pastures at 3000 to 4000-foot elevation. The wild horses came right up to us looking for food. I tried to pet them but they immediately backed away from me.

I stayed in three shelters, tented four nights, and, because of the hot weather, drank far more water than what little food I ate.

T'was a great backpack! But AT Trail Days was more fun.

spoof, I read about 80-year-old Bob Northrup completing the Long Trail for the 7th time. That put me in my place. The idea of an 80-year-old person climbing Camel's Hump and Mansfield is, to repeat an overused expression, mind-boggling. I'm re-energized. So take away that rocking chair and leave my walking stick where I can reach it. From now on it's full speed ahead.]

By Herb Ogden, Section President

Work should not be thought of as a four-letter word, despite the title of this. Please help!

This began as an article about our 8 September work party, which consisted of one Leader (Bill Robichaud) and one Follower (me). Between us, I think we carried a one-man crosscut saw, a shovel, a pick-mattock, a crowbar, pruning shears, and lunch. Our main work was at a couple of usually wet spots about half a mile south of US 4 on the new Long Trail. We heaved some pretty big rocks into place, improving a waterbar or two. We also sawed down the rest of a large birch, the top of which had nearly fallen on some hikers earlier

More on Cold River Cave

As I related in the August issue, I have had no luck in locating Cold River Cave, which I recalled having visited years ago. Ray Catozzi says he remembers the Cave as being just west of the Cold River Road but that the entrance has been long since obliterated. Diligent research, however, has turned up the following photographic evidence that supports my memory.

Smoke & Blazes Illustrated

Now that we have the technology for including pictures I encourage one and all to submit photos of recent or not-so-recent section activities or, in fact, any pictures that would be of interest to other members. We are printing in black, white, and gray only but, in most cases, color prints will reproduce reasonably well.

Taconic Ramble

11 August 2001

By Sanjukta T. Ghosh

After the sweltering 90-plus days in the first week of August, we deserved it -- the sunny skies, the occasional white fluffy clouds, the mild temperatures and the low humidity. It was a day perfect for a hike; a perfect day to meander along the Taconics, taking in the serenity of the Japanese Gardens, the breathtaking panoramic vistas of the historic Hubbardton Battlefield and beyond.

Led by owner Kip Davidson, whose frail appearance belies his energy and strength, about a dozen of us and two energetic dogs winded our way through mountain brooks, meadows and rolling hillsides. The approximately 4-mile leisurely hike took about three-and-a-half hours.

Starting from the car park at the base of Mount Zion, we first strolled across the lush meadows to East Hubbardton Road. Crossing this major road, we went up the fields along the east side to the trails leading up to the waterfalls on Breton Brook. The thick forests almost caused some of us to lose our way. Unfortunately, the intense heat of the summer had all but dried up the brook, so the waterfalls were down to a trickle. But with a little imagination and help from others who'd been on the hike before, it was easy to hear the rush of the brook and feel the sprinkle of the mountain waters. We crossed the brook and zigzagged our way out back to the fields and East Hubbardton Road. In less than an hour we had made a giant loop and were at the Japanese Garden at the foot of Zion Minor.

The Japanese Garden has miniature pagodas and bridges over parts of a small pond. At the center of the pond are the falls, created just by strategically placed rocks. After resting here a bit, a smaller group started off for the top of Zion Minor. Though it looks steep, we were at the apex in less than 15 minutes taking in the spectacular view of the majestic Taconic range and the Pittsford Ridge. We wound our way to another overlook, sardonically named "Moot Point" by Kip's friend. Though the view is not as extensive, we could, this time, see the southern extension of the Taconics. From Moot Point we backtracked our way and started off for Zion Major.

The path to Zion Major is tricky and steep. For the adventurous, there is an even riskier path complete with cables to cling to. (Only one of us chose this latter path!). Though this too was a short trek up, the incline was enough to make even the fittest of us sweat a lot. But it was all worth it at the top -- we were greeted with breathtaking views of the Adirondacks on our left and the Hubbardton Battlefield, looking like a small backyard from that height, to the front of us. While we picnicked here red-tailed hawk soared the blue skies above us. After a good rest, we started our descent -- a path just as narrow and tricky as the ascent. But we were down in minutes trudging through lush vegetation. I was told by one group member that on a previous hike, a botanist friend of his had commented on the wide variety of ferns he had seen here. At least 11 different varieties of fern are found in these forests, he told me.

The stillness in the green forest base made me wonder how my dog, who had accompanied us, had experienced the hike -- after all she can hear sounds and sniff out odors we hardly know even exists. I was reminded of a saying by the Greek philosopher Heraclitus: what if the nose was the seat of judgment? Certainly, it would have been a different hike!

Camel's Hump

18 August 2001

By Gretchen Crowley, leader

Has anyone seen Bill Robichaud? He met us down at the park and was going to meet some folks in Pittsford to bring on the hike, but he was never seen again that day. Did Bill make it to the top of the Camel's Hump? I hope he is not still waiting at the top for us.

I had hoped that the weather was going to clear up a little better for our hike but the clouds hung on, so there wasn't much of a view from the top. Who would have thought that gloves would be needed in August, but it was 58 on the top and very windy. It did clear up nicely when we got back to our cars, but that is par for the course. Next year we will have to try it again.

Black Mountain, NY

By Ray Catozzi, leader

Black Mountain over in New York State is one of the nicest mountains to climb and it's relatively close to Rutland. It's an easy-to-moderate climb up an old logging road for the first mile and a-half or two. Then, as you near the summit cone, it's a steep uphill for the last half-mile or so to the top.

On a small, rocky open spot there are gorgeous views looking right down on the northern half of beautiful Lake George. There, along with a couple of dozen other hikers, our ten sat down and ate lunch while we viewed the Taconic and Green Mountains of Vermont off to the east.

After lunch I took our group down to the south off the steep mountaintop on a different trail. Shortly after we started down we took a short side trail that led to an open rocky spot with another gorgeous view -- this one looking down on the southern half of Lake George, all the way to the Lake George Village.

Eventually our trail turned east. We walked past two nice boggy ponds and a shelter, then turned north to rejoin the old logging road and returned to our cars. I've done this loop hike twice now. I think next time I'll reverse the loop to add interest.

We had an interesting group on this trip: one was from Massachusetts, one from Lebanon, New Hampshire, one from Windsor, one from Orwell, two from Norwich, and two from West Pawlet. Only two were from Rutland.

Bridgewater Hollow

1 September 2001

By Herb Ogden, leader

Despite the lack of notice in the Rutland Herald, eight people showed up for this hike. I think this disproves our theory that there is no point in scheduling outings on Labor Day Weekend because no one will come.

We began by driving to, as one hiker put it, "parts of Bridgewater that I never knew existed." Leaving the cars where the Bridgewater Hollow Road leaves the Chateaugay Road, we walked up the latter to the Walker Hill Road. The North Branch of the Ottauquechee River was so low that we saw some interesting bedrock and boulders that normally are under water.

I had planned to follow entirely the old roads shown in the 1868 map of Bridgewater and the 1869 Beers Atlas, but tall wet grass and shrubs on the barely visible first right off the Walker Hill Road dissuaded me. Instead, we climbed further, almost to the first cellar hole on the left, and turned right onto a VAST trail. First, we marveled at a machine that takes long logs, saws them into firewood length, splits them, and then conveys them to a truck. About all it doesn't do is run around the woods felling the trees. Also at the log landing were some old railroad rails. I spun a tall tale about how there used to be a lumber railroad way up there. Somebody asked how the train could get up such a steep grade. I replied that it had to get up a terrific head of steam down in Bridgewater Center and charge north at such a clip that the momentum would carry it up the grade. After some folks looked a little inclined to believe this, I thought I'd better admit there never was a railroad in Bridgewater, and that the rails probably were railroad scrap, cheaper than regular girders, that held up an old bridge.

Crossing a low ridge on the snowmobile trail, which was also a logging road, we joined the old road at an unnamed stream. Following a badly washed out road north along the stream, we came to a beautiful farm site, owned by the Chamberlain family in 1868. It is in a little bowl, where a spur of the old public road dead-ended. The big barn remains are a little uphill to the west and are more elaborate than most. Judging from its absence on the 1911 USGS map, house and barn were all gone by then.

On our way to the barn, we met an ATV rider named Beauregard ambling in from his house on the Walker Hill Road. I do mean ambling; he wasn't chewing up the wood road or running loud. When a small pack of dirt bikers snarled their speedy way up the valley in a few minutes, he seemed as annoyed as we. Mr. Beauregard turned out to be a good source of information and even a guide. His family has owned land on Walker Hill Road since his great-grandfather bought it in the 1800s. While we lunched in the sun, which had just come out, he went back a little along our route and flagged for us his private route to a mysterious approximately two by six foot laid-up rock heap next to a ledge a good tenth of a mile from where the old road first crossed the brook. It was on too steep a side hill to have been rocks turned up while plowing. No one could think of a use for it other than the one Mr. Beauregard suggested: maybe something was buried there.

Retracing our steps up to where the Chamberlain spur left the road to Bridgewater Hollow, we headed up hill to the east, where Mr. Beauregard soon pointed out the spring for the next farm site we'd see. The site, up on the ridge, was unusual in that part of the very deep cellar hole had no exit (except, presumably, long gone stairs to the first floor); the rest appeared more crudely built. About a hundred feet south on the ridge were the remains of a big barn and maybe an outbuilding or two. This shows on the 1868 and 1869 maps but not on the 1911 one. A little farther along, about 30' to the north of the road, Mr. Beauregard had flagged for the remains of the sugarhouse. The stone "arch" for the fire under the evaporating plan was easy to make out.

Following the old road east, we crossed the main ridge and headed down to Bridgewater Hollow, passing some nice southerly views and stopping to munch a few blackberries. We appreciated the flora more than the fauna; all we saw of the latter was a toad and a snake.

In Bridgewater Hollow, we crossed the brook and headed south, then east, to reach the Bridgewater Hollow Cemetery, with graves from about 1810 to 1850. Luckily, the fall of a huge pine had just missed the most elaborate, that of Mrs. Perkins. Many of the headstones are just upright fieldstones, presumably erected by pioneer families too poor to afford a carved memorial. Many are hard to see in the brush. I hear a Boy Scout troop adopted the cemetery some years ago, and someone did brush hog it, but now it is rapidly growing up again. This historic site needs help.

We finished by taking what probably was the original road up to Bridgewater Hollow, which keeps to the east of the brook all the way down. The 1868 map shows it as an old road, and it's pretty obscure in places. It ends within sight of the Chateaugay Road, but we left it where a small landslide had torn a gap in it. We finished up on the present Bridgewater Hollow Road, admiring the dappled sunlight on the beautiful ledges over which the brook flowed down from the hollow.

Robert Frost Mountain

15 September 2001

By Gordon Cawood, co-leader

The day turned out to be cool and sunny, perfect for hiking. Twelve folks from the Killington and Breadloaf Sections started from the Lincoln-Ripton Road at the snowmobile trail crossing, approximately one mile south of the road junction with the North Branch Road. Following the snowmobile trail to the west, we crossed the North Branch Road at a camp with beautiful gardens. Continuing to the peak we had lunch and visited the east-facing lookout. Breadloaf Mountain and neighboring Green Mountains were clearly visible. We returned with the same number of hikers that we started with (per Sue Thomas, this is a Killington Section requirement). Our thanks to the Killington and Breadloaf Section hikers who made this a successful outing.

Mount Hanley

22 September 2001

By Ray Catozzi, leader

This was intended to be a loop hike. My plan was to hike from the Whipple Hollow Road up a nice, well maintained road to the hang gilders' takeoff ramp and to return to a different spot on the Whipple Hollow Road via an older, more overgrown road a little to the south that was the only way I had previously climbed Mount Hanley.

The usually good view to the west from the ramp was very hazy. We couldn't see Lake Bomoseen, and even Bird Mountain, close by to the southwest, was in the low clouds much of the time.

After lunch we started down and began searching for the intended downhill route. We tried two different ATV roads heading south but both kept going uphill, so we went a little farther down and tried a third. This one seemed to be the right one; at least it headed downhill. But it soon became completely overgrown with bushes and trees, so we turned back, bushwhacking, to our nice uphill road and returned to our cars.

We had left one car in the parking lot where we had intended to come out. The whole gang, plus one dog, gathered there and many enjoyed the wine and cheese party that I hosted.

The Sequel

On the Monday after this hike I got a call from Killington Section member George Smith who used to live in Rutland. George moved to Hartland about thirty years ago but comes over to hike with us every so often. Could I, he asked, tell him how to climb Mount Hanley.

To make a long story a little shorter: A few days later George and I left from the parking lot that had been the site of the wine and cheese party on Saturday, and headed up the road I had intended to come down with the Killington Section group. We went up and for a couple of miles it was in pretty good shape. But as we approached the area where we should have connected up with the "nice, well maintained road" it suddenly became overgrown with bushes. We whacked through and in a short way found ourselves on the ATV trail where I had turned back with the Killington Section group on Saturday. Wow! I had found the connection.

The next time I lead a hike to Mount Hanley it will be a loop hike (after I do a little trail clearing).

Abbey Pond

29 September 2001

By Roma Pulling, co-leader

Sometimes we joke about losing a hiker (it hasn't happened), but this is the first time I added some on the way. We started out with six and returned with ten, after picking one up at Mac's Convenience Store in Brandon, another at Abbey Pond parking lot, and had two catch up with us on the trail.

The weather was good. A few dark clouds looked threatening but didn't produce any rain.

The Abbey Pond Trail is rocky and climbs steadily. A bridge carried us over the stream early in the hike, while two other crossings posed problems. We were glad we had chosen a dry year for the hike. Wildlife on the way consisted of one red eft, but at the pond we were entertained by a school of fish. Several people tossed pieces of bread into the pond, which the fish snatched up promptly. We could see a beaver lodge across the pond.

As always, this hike gave us a good workout and a pleasant outing.

Bear Mountain

6 October 2001

This trip was cancelled due to rain.

Stratton Mountain

14 October 2001

By Sue Thomas, leader

For the second time in two years the weather thwarted our plans to climb Stratton Mountain and hike the 10.7-mile loop via the old Long Trail route. Unlike last year, at least it wasn't pouring, but as we left the sunny valley and drove up the Kelley Stand Road toward the mountain we entered a cloud that seemed to be enveloping all the higher elevations that day. Inside the cloud it was cold, damp, and misty, with so little visibility that a quick vote at the trailhead was all that was needed to change our plans. Rather than venture any higher into the cloud we opted to hike to Stratton Pond and around it, only a couple of miles shorter but without the viewless climb.

About 3.5 miles in we stopped at the new Stratton Pond Shelter, truly a Ritz-Carlton of open-fronted trail shelters, with a large, deck-like porch and vented sleeping loft. At the pond we stopped for a chat with the caretaker and his large white dog Clover who, after a season of greeting hikers, has become adept at panhandling. (Clover, that is, not the caretaker.

As we stood on the shore we could hear an occasional whoop and holler across the water, and we stared off around the pond expecting to find young folks. Much to our surprise we found instead a group of middle-aged men having a golf tournament in the woods! What with the mist, it had a sort of Alice in Wonderland quality. They'd dug little holes here and there and we stopped long enough to watch three of them tee off. The first ball hit a root and went careening off into the woods. The second hit a tree with a resounding THWACK and nearly decapitated the bystanders when it ricocheted back. Only the third made a clear path, though I suspect it was still pretty hard to find in the underbrush. We thought it odd that anyone would carry golf clubs four miles in for that, but to each his own.

Shrewsbury Peak

20 October 2001

By Barbara Griffith, co-leader

Our day started at 7:45AM with phone calls from potential hikers asking if the hike was still "on" as the day was drizzly, but warm. Our optimistic leader, Barry Griffith, refused to cancel, citing the weather forecast as "clearing late morning".

Ray Catozzi led a convoy of vehicles to the Griffith's in North Shrewsbury. We then proceeded up the CCC road, spotting cars at the Chimney and parking at the Black Swamp Road. The summit was socked in with clouds but all 17 optimistic hikers, donning various forms of rain gear, ascended Shrewsbury Peak by the East route.

We found the terrain easy-to-moderate; steep only at the peak. The closer we hiked to the peak the more the rain gear was stowed away. Shortly after reaching the top we were rewarded with clearing skies and substantial views. Our leader's optimism won out. On a good day one can see all the way to the White Mountains, Mount Ascutney, Mount Monadnock and a long chain of the Green Mountains.

After lunch trekkers chose which descent route they wish to take. Fifteen went down to the Chimney. This trail was more difficult, the first few hundred feet climbing over ledges and rocks. Two hikers chose the more moderate trail via the Black Spruce Swamp road. One person was missing temporarily, but a few whistles and a bit of shouting brought the wayward one back to the fold.

Mystery Hike

27 October 2001

By Gretchen Crowley, leader

Four of us headed out on this chilly day from the end of Lottery Road to the top on Kinsman Hill. At the top of the hill there is a picnic table to enjoy some nice views and a little lunch, but not when it is snowing. Who ordered this white stuff on my hike? We did sit up at the picnic table and catch a few views when the clouds broke. We followed the logging road down the hill and made a very short bush whack to connect with the Long Trail south, which led us back to Lottery Road.

Jerry Parker then took us for a short hike off of Lottery Road to find the final resting place of the Bullard's, which Herb Ogden has been looking for for quite some time now. (Herb, you just take a left off Lottery Road onto the logging road and a right at the downed tree.) We then bush whacked back to our cars and headed back to Rutland.

Bromley Mountain

4 November 2001

By Connie Youngstrom, leader

The day dawned clear, but soon heavy gray clouds pushed their way in and remained so for our hike up and over Bromley Mountain. Our group of five plus the dog set off at the trailhead on Route 11, climbed gradually, and met several other hikers out doing the same. Woody the dog splashed his way through every stream and was quite entertaining.

We passed through slightly stunted birch and beech woods as we neared the summit. Our lunch stop was out of the wind inside the ski patrol cabin, where we read the hikers log, ate Halloween candy, and had some good conversation while trying to stay warm.

Continuing north, we descended gradually and entered thick balsam and spruce forest. We noted the interesting rock formations, lush outcrops of moss and deep green carpets of clubmoss and woodferns along the way. Our day ended with a visit to the Hapgood General Store where we enjoyed hot drinks and a leisurely browse through the oldest continually running store in Vermont.

this summer. Not much pruning was needed. We also visited with a number of hikers and, I hope, educated them a little about what it takes to keep the Long Trail in good shape.

Bill and I were pretty discouraged at the low turnout. The weather was nice enough, but hardly anyone came. Were some folks still on vacation? Did some stay home because the newsletter notice didn't say where we'd be working? It was too bad, because there was a lot more work to do than we could finish. For example, the relocated Long Trail has scores of waterbars and diversion ditches to keep the treadway dry. Most of them silt up in one to two years. When that happens, the water runs down the trail. That is not only unpleasant underfoot, but it also can erode away the painstaking product of days of trail workers' time building things like stone steps. Eventually, the trail turns into a little gully. This can be seen on parts of the Sherburne Pass Trail, and even more dramatically on the Long Trail between Smugglers Notch and Sterling Pond (which is not in our Section, thank goodness).

Speaking of waterbars: I took the Sherburne Pass Trail south from Sherburne Pass on the last weekend in October to "put the trail to bed" for the winter. In the first six tenths of a mile, guess how many waterbars there are! [Look for the answer on page 11, Ed.] If our part of the Long Trail averages even one third of that number of waterbars per mile, we have about 400 just on the Long Trail, let alone on our miles of side trails. Help clean them out! It's not hard work. It just takes a hoe. If your schedule doesn't fit our work parties, please call Trails & Shelters Co-Chairs Bill Robichaud or Steve Williams. They can tell you which parts of the trail need work and loan you our Section's tools to work on them.

On a positive note, perhaps now is a good time to recognize those who have participated in scheduled work parties over the last nine years. They are listed on page 11 with the years and number of days each volunteer helped clear trail, clean out waterbars, saw away blowdowns, maintain shelters, and do the other things that make the Long Trail a pleasant place to be. Many thanks to all who gave their time and effort! [My apologies to anyone we may have left out. Ed.]

Trail Crews Work on Killington Section

By Greg Western

[The following is taken from an informal report by Greg Western, Field Supervisor for the Green Mountain Club. Ed.]

I am writing to update folks on how the trail crew work went this year on the Killington Section.

The Vermont Youth Conservation Corps crews did eight weeks of work on Pico building solid trail through the muddy spots up where the trail crosses through the birches. Another crew worked four weeks on the Long Trail just north of the junction with the Bucklin Trail. It'd be great to hear what folks think of this work! A note for next year: the GMC has already arranged with VYCC for another four weeks of trail crew on the LT somewhere north of Cooper. If folks have in mind specific spots they want worked on, just contact me sometime.

The Volunteer Long Trail Patrol added some more stairs and water bars on the north side of Bear Mt. south of Minerva Hinchey Shelter. They also, as I noted below, repaired some All-Terrain-Vehicle damage along the Patch Hollow Road and put ATV discouraging boulders in the old road way.

It turns out that the boulders on Patch Hollow Road were placed in such a way that they will make the trail difficult to ski on. This was a mistake, as we did not intend to block ski use of the trail. I looked at the trail with Bill Robichaud and a couple of local folks from Spring Lake Ranch who frequently ski back there (Becky Bates and Peter Grace) and we figured out a better way to arrange the boulders so that they won't obstruct skiing.

[On October 27 Greg and a group including Section Vice-President Connie Youngstrom returned to Patch Hollow and rearranged the boulders. Ed.]

A Note About Numbers

Smoke and Blazes started in 1948 as a monthly publication and continued so until about 1959 when it became a bimonthly. In about 1967 it switched to quarterly publication. Occasionally issues were skipped, especially in 1970 and 1971.

In general each calendar year was assigned a new "Volume", and "Numbers" were assigned consecutively from "1" through each year.

There is some lack of consistency in the months of publication, and there are some out-and-out errors in the numbering.

The following Table of Contents lists the issues in this binder showing the Volume, Number, and Date as printed and, where different, what the Volume, Number, and Date probably should have been,

Dedication

This set of copies of Smoke and Blazes is donated to the Rutland Historical Society in memory of my parents, Mary and Craigie Perkins and my aunt, Vera Perkins. They conceived the idea for a Killington Section newsletter in 1948 and served as editors and publishers for the first several years of its existence, cutting stencils, and running mimeograph copies in our living room. They continued as frequent contributors to the publication and as active members of the Club for over a half century. Fortunately, Dad had a pack rat proclivity which I seem to have inherited. By combining his collection of Smoke and Blazes with mine, I have been able to put together this complete run of the publication.

Wilderness:

A Vermont Tradition

Forest Watch Executive Director Jim Northup will describe Vermont's long tradition of wilderness preservation and will discuss current proposals for additional wild, roadless areas. Jim's presentation, part of the GMC sponsored James P. Taylor Winter Series, will be at 7:00 PM, Friday, 15 March 2002, at the UU Church, 117 West Street, Rutland. Admission at the door: members $5, nonmembers $8, kids free.

Dues To Increase

The GMC Board of Directors has made two changes in club-wide membership processing.

Effective 1 July 2002 dues will be increased to the following:

Single	$30
Family	40
Student	20
Volunteer.....	20
Single Life.....	750
Family Life.....	1000

Renewal date for a member who was paid up as of 31 July 2001 is January first, as in the past. Renewal date for a member who joined after 31 July 2001 will be on the anniversary of his/her joining. A member who fails to renew within a four-month grace period after his/her renewal date will be dropped.

Section Potluck and Annual Meeting

Elect New Directors and Vote on Bylaw Changes

The Killington Section will hold its annual meeting following a potluck supper starting at 5:30 PM on Saturday, 20 April, at Fern Cottage. This new location for us is located on the west side of Creek Road just north of the intersection with River Street. (See map, page 6.) Bring a dish to share and a place setting. Beverages will be provided.

Members will elect three section directors for regular three-year terms and one for a two-year term. For the three-year positions incumbents Ruth Gibbud and Herb Ogden are term-limited out after six years in office. Incumbent Bill Robichaud intends to stand for reelection. The two-year slot became open when Sue Thomas announced her retirement for personal reasons. Any section member is eligible to serve as a director. Nominations will be accepted from the floor at the meeting. (Following the membership meeting the directors will convene to elect section officers for the coming year.)

Members will be asked to ratify two bylaw amendments recently approved by the directors: (1) To delete from Article 2 the sentence that requires voting members to be at least 18 years old. (2) To delete entirely Article 14, which authorizes the section to set its own annual dues. (The latter change is required for conformity with the GMC club-wide uniform dues policy.)

After the short business meeting out-going President Herb Ogden will show slides of his trip to Iceland.

Member to Through Hike the AT – Again

Killington Section member, shelter adopter, and trail maintainer, Cindy Taylor-Miller, will be leaving the trailhead south of Springer Mountain, Georgia on 1 March to begin her second through hike of the 2168-mile Appalachian Trail. She knows what she's getting into. She made her first AT through hike a quarter century ago in 1977.

Cindy, trail name Mrs. Gorp, figures it will take her about 16 weeks to make it from Georgia to Vermont; she plans to be back home in Wallingford for a two week break in early July. Then it's on to Katahdin; six more weeks.

From the Editor

Meditations of a Cartophile

What could be a better way for a map lover to spend a few dreary winter evenings than to dig out the atlases and topo maps and to relive past hikes and imagine new ones? It's been a while since I abandoned any hope of bagging the Adirondack 48, or of conquering the White Mountain 46.

How about a more modest goal – say the high points of Rutland County? There are 27 towns and one city in the county and each must have, if not a peak, at least a highest point. Killington Peak, being on a town line, does double duty, so there are 27 high points.

I think I've located them all on 16 different topographic quadrangles. A surprise -- guess which quad has the most town high points. West Rutland with six! And close behind is Proctor with five!

On page 11 I've listed the results of my perusing. I'd like to hear from anyone who spots an error. Now the challenge is to visit these high points on the ground.

Getting the Right Word

While writing the piece above I figured that "cartophile" was a wonderful ostentatious word for "map lover". Unfortunately, I could find it only in one dictionary where it is defined as "a collector of baseball cards". Oh well – I still like it.

Due to a miscommunication I referred, in the November issue, to "Hog Hill Cemetery". Although no wildlife was spotted, I've learned that the true destination of our 15 December outing was "Hawk Hill Cemetery". Evokes a rather different image, doesn't it?

Help Maintain the Long Trail - Be a Sector Checker

Do you know why our group is called the "Killington Section" rather than the "Rutland Chapter" of the Green Mountain Club? When the GMC was founded in 1910 the founders' vision and primary focus was the construction of the Long Trail from Massachusetts to Canada. They divided the projected trail route into sections, each named after its most prominent geographic feature, and they named local groups to build and care for each section of the trail. Some of these local groups have come and gone over the years, and some have changed their names, but today we have, among others, the Breadloaf Section, the Sterling Section, the Laraway Section and, of course, the Killington Section.

As members of the Killington Section we all support the Long Trail financially with our dues, and many of us enjoy the outings and social get-togethers. But our name reminds us that our raison d'être is the care and maintenance of the "Killington section" of the Long Trail. Typical maintenance tasks include pruning trailside foliage, trimming grass and brush, repainting blazes, repairing or replacing directional signs, hoeing out water bars, and removing small blowdowns from the trail. Occasionally a large blowdown must be removed or a wet spot on the trail must be bridged or bypassed.

To give more members a chance for hands-on participation in trail care and maintenance the section directors, in the spirit of the founders, have sub-divided the Killington section of the trail into a number of shorter sectors. It is their hope that members, either individually or with a partner, will volunteer to select and take charge of the care and maintenance of one or more sectors. Sector Checkers periodically will visit their sectors, perform any needed maintenance tasks that they feel comfortable doing, and report to the Killington Section trails chairman on the condition of their trails and on the need for any major tasks for which more help is needed. Tools and guidance by experienced trail workers will be provided as needed.

The available trail sectors are listed below. If you're interested in becoming a Sector Checker for the Killington Section, or have questions about it, get in touch with Bill Robichaud or Herb Ogden (See Contact Information on page 2).

Trip Reports

Mount Antone

1 December 2001

By Steve Williams, co-leader

Thanks to Sue Thomas the group assembled at the Merck Forest Visitor Center. Unlike the previous southwest Vermont expedition, when one participant was lost while finding his own way from Rutland, and another appeared to be overawed by the peaks of the area, all declared participants were at the starting gate in good time.

To make the route more interesting, diversions via the McCormick trail and the ski trail were made as an alternative to merely following the "Antone Road" track. This led to complaints by a senior member of the party on the subject of going down rather than up, a valid point as it happened. However, in the interests of reaching the peak he was prevailed upon to stay with us; we hope that he saw the view from the top (over the northern part of the Mettowee valley) as an acceptable reward.

In the past six months there has been considerable logging around the McCormick trail, but with the exception of one very muddy patch at the top, the logging has opened up the trail considerably, also allowing glimpses westward toward the Adirondacks.

At the summit the party was rewarded with some sunshine, which made for a good lunch break with time to enjoy the surroundings.

The descent was via the Beebe Pond trail, which has some attractive stretches through stands of silver birch. Beebe Pond does not rate amongst the state's most scenic, but Birch Pond, passed next, does have some claims as a picnic and (Summer!) swimming spot. Following Birch Pond, further protests were heard about going up on a down part of the trail. Fortunately no other option was practical as a means of returning to the Visitor Center, so the leaders were able to survive that one, too.

With a total elapsed time of about four hours, the ten participants, leaders Steve and Diana Williams included, appeared to have enjoyed their Merck Forest visit.

Old Brandon Road

by Roma Pulling, leader

A few years ago we hosted a trip to various historic sites in Rutland that we called "Hiking Through History." This outing was another hike through history as the area traversed by the Old Brandon Road was where Brandon's earliest settlers established their farms. Brandon's first white settler, Amos Cutler, built his cabin in this area. He was followed by David June and his father-in-law, John Ambler.

Seven people and a dog assembled for this interesting hike. We spotted two cars in the parking lot at Otter Valley Union High School and crowded into our station wagon, to ride to the end of Carver Street, where we parked and started our hike. A sign here told us we were on property of the Vermont Land Trust.

As we followed the old road, now little more than a wagon track, we looked for signs of settlement and in addition to stonewalls found two cellar holes but were not able to identify the owners. Various signs have been erected locating farms by number but not by name.

Near the end of our hike we arrived at the old Hawk Hill, or June, cemetery. There are stones for David June and his wife, Prudence, and John and Sarah Ambler. John was the first settler to die, May 5, 1776. It was only a short distance from there to our cars.

This is a short, easy hike and one of great historical significance.

Stockbridge South Hill

29 December 2001

by Herb Ogden, leader

Nine people showed up for this old road walk. One of them skied most of the way but didn't dare go fast on the downhill for fear of running across a gravelly stretch. This was, of course, the leader, who had advertized this as a walk, snowshoe, or ski outing. Nobody brought snowshoes, and that was just as well. There was at most four inches of snow.

Leaving the cars at the T where South Hill Road turns north, we followed an old town road that is also a major snowmobile route all the way to Fletcher Brook. Along the way, we noted several cellarholes where houses are shown on the 1869 Beers Atlas and the 1891 Rutland quadrangle. We also found a little flat place that may once have been Stockbridge School No. 17. The only major sighting in the wildlife department was a big buck that bounded down the road ahead of us. We could hear some very excited dogs (beagles?) after something near an inhabited cabin near Fletcher Brook, but we never found out what it was.

After heading north about a mile on the Fletcher Brook Road, we turned west on a steep uphill road that led past three or four more home sites before bringing us back to the road we came in on. At the end of the outing, we explored the South Hill cemetery, including the grave of the deaf mute who was "KILLED by the fall of a Tree" at age 21. There were several interesting epitaphs. We were appalled to see that two of the oldest stones had been shot through with guns, however.

Pico Camp

5 January 2002

by Herb Ogden, leader

The ingredients were pretty good: a slightly breezy day just below freezing, a well-trodden trail, enough snow for snowshoes, and seven well-prepared hikers. The only drawbacks were an absence of wildlife and, above about 3000', an absence of views. In fact, by the time we reached the ski trail at the old Pico Junction, fog limited visibility to a few hundred feet.

So many people had already snowshoed the route that several of us just carried our snowshoes on the way up. We halted occasionally to enjoy the spectacle of the snow-clad trees, and we stopped longer at the Sinkhole to hear one of our number describe the cave that lies below it, which he and others have explored recently. They even found a couple of bats once. Once we got up into the switchbacks, the evergreens were even more beautifully frosted. It appears there had been some ice fogs up there recently.

It took us only about an hour and a half to reach Pico Camp, so we were early for lunch. This 42-year-old building was in pretty good shape except for some rotted framing around the big east windows. Using supplies the Leader packed in, we replaced two big missing window panes with Lexan™, secured some smaller panes that were in danger of falling out, patched the door where it had been gnawed, and added more sheet metal to the privy door, where it had been gnawed through.

The well-trodden snowshoe track continued on south, but no one seemed to have snowshoed up Pico Loop. The last entry in the logbook was by a party snowshoeing from Sherburne Pass to Cooper Lodge and then down the Bucklin Trail! The trail seems to be getting more winter use than last time I led such a hike, back in 1996, even though it is now only a side trail. Anyway, with the benefit of all the packing done by others, some of us pretty much flew back down, taking about 3/4 hour for the 2.4 mile descent.

Glen Lake Overlook

By Sue Thomas, leader

When I planned a winter hike to Glen Lake Overlook, my biggest concern had been that the snow might obscure trail blazes, seemingly painted by leprechauns at an average height of three to four feet off the ground. Needless to say, that wasn't a problem. In fact, snowshoes were left behind and we made our way cautiously around the lakeshore on a combination of ice, snow, and a few patches of bare ground.

Even the dogs were smart enough to stay off the lake, where open water was still visible – proving that they're more intelligent than the occupants of the one lone ice shanty just off shore. It had not yet sunk when we moved on to the short climb up to the cliff, where we had a snack and enjoyed the view, and arrived back at the cars just in time for Ray's Happy Hour.

Snake Mountain

27 January 2002

By Larry Walter, co-leader

Viv and I led a hike up Snake Mountain east of Vermont Route 22A, and south of Vermont Route 17 in Addison. We were joined by two other hardy souls for an enjoyable climb of about 950 feet to an open view from the top. We could see a good 180-degree panorama of the valley floor accentuated by Lake Champlain in the north and the Adirondacks to the west. The track was icy going up, but softened enough to afford some bite from our boots on the way back down. The lack of snow in the valley below looked more like the scene of a May hike than a view from the deep end of January. No one needed snow shoes, and aside from some day-old ATV tracks there wasn't a sign of any mechanized use of the trail at all. No wildlife were sighted, probably due to our lack of attention to the surroundings. Where's Mr. Parker when you need him?!

Anyone planning a hike up Snake Mountain should be aware that the new trailhead and parking lot are north and west of the prior access. (Take Wilmarth Road east from Route 22A and then hang a left onto Mountain Road for a couple hundred feet to the parking lot on the left.) The hike is easy enough and rewards you with a wonderful view and a nice place to eat lunch.

Little Rock Pond

2 February 2002

By Connie Youngstrom, leader

The day greeted us with brilliantly blue skies and frosty cold air -- a beautiful wintry morning glistening with rock-hard ice from yesterday's storm. Our group of five brave ice hikers, dressed for the cold and ready with poles and snowshoes, started off near Wallingford Pond access, heading towards the Long Trail and Little Rock Pond.

Walking on rutted icy tracks was tricky, to say the least. Once on the Long Trail, we headed south where the trail climbed gradually, following a north-facing slope to the pond. With the snow surface encased in a half inch of ice, crampon equipped snowshoes were a necessity today. Our crunching footsteps were so loud that conversation had to wait till we stopped for a rest. We found the pond ice and snow covered and the outlet stream full and rushing. Atop nearby Green Mountain ice covered branches sparkled in the sun. Lunch was in the sunshine at the little bridge where we had a nice view of the pond and mountain.

I found an interesting variety of debris, or windchaff, on the icy snow after the high winds last evening. Some of these included: beech nut husks and tan leaves, shreds of paper and yellow birch bark, hemlock branchlets with tiny cones attached, red spruce and balsam needles, red spruce cones, scraps of all sorts of lichens and mosses, and bits of tree bark, twigs and larger branches of many different trees. Few animal tracks were spotted due to the storm, but I did see one set of coyote tracks and a set of deer tracks near the pond. Near Wallingford Pond we found a set of otter tracks. It's bounding gait and many slides must have occurred during the height of the storm before the sleet and snow changed over to rain.

5 December 2001

By Jake Sherman, Secretary

Present

Herb Ogden, Bob Perkins, Al Pulling, Bill Robichaud, Sue Thomas, Gretchen Crowley, Connie Youngstrom, Mark Youngstrom, and Jake Sherman

Secretary's Minutes

The minutes of the January 2 and March 31 meetings were approved. These minutes have already appeared in Smoke & Blazes.

Treasurer's Report

As of the present there is $1,388.93 in the checking account, $1,375.49 in the savings account, and $747.36 in the Kirk Fund savings account. There is $14,639.37 in Kirk Fund CDs, the same as last year. There are 62 individual members in the section, 52 family members and 14 life members. Allowing two individuals for a family membership, the total number of section members is 128.

President's Report

Clarendon Gorge Parking Lot -- The Appalachian Trail Conference (ATC) is putting out to bid a $53,000 job for paving of and improvements to the Clarendon Gorge parking area off Route 103. In addition to the paving, the job would involve improvements to the bulletin board as well as to the trail on both sides of the road. The work may be done next summer. Meanwhile, vandalism continues to be a problem at the area with the cars of even day hikers suffering broken windows. We are desirous of working with the main club and other organizations to increase patrols of the parking lot.

New Pico Shelter -- The GMC is planning to build a new Pico Camp on the relocated AT/LT on the west side of Pico. The biggest brook crossing along this stretch is located 1.8 mi. south of Route 4 and the proposal is to build the shelter 0.3 mi. away from the brook to the south along the same contour. This brook is the last reliable water source heading south. The shelter would be 0.3 mi. off the trail. The shelter is far enough around the mountain so you begin to lose highway noise. To further minimize noise we persuaded them to reorient the shelter so it would face south.

GMC Director's Report

Al reported that the agenda at the September meeting dealt with "the usual money matters." Part of the land around the Waterbury headquarters has been purchased and negotiations are continuing for the other, larger, part. Some shelters have been built on the Waterbury property to house GMC help; in winter they will be rented to skiers. There was no discussion at all of the Champion lands nor was there any mention of a proposed trail from Mt. Equinox over to Merck Forest. The last Long Trail News contains the annual report.

Old Business:

Governor Clement Shelter -- After much discussion of possible solutions to ongoing problems of vandalism and rowdiness at the shelter, it was voted unanimously to request a meeting with the Shrewsbury Select Board to get their input and put forward our ideas. It was suggested that Roy Arthur of the Vermont Association of Snow Travelers (VAST), Gary Salmon of the State Forest Service and Shrewsbury resident, and Mark and Connie Youngstrom, also Shrewsbury residents, be invited as well. The full array of options from putting up signs to banning parking, having periodic visits by law enforcement, digging trenches, gating the road, relocating the trail, and building a new shelter continue to be on the table. We were somewhat incredulous to hear from Dave Hardy that according to the Forest Service because the shelter is on public property we can't even put up a sign. We are asking him to go back and find out if this can really be true if legally use of the AT is restricted to pedestrians. Herb's strategy features a combination of signage, a parking ban by the town, and enforcement by Forest Service personnel. It is distressing that some guidebooks advise hikers to avoid stopping at Governor Clement, the LT's oldest shelter, because of possible harassment. Meanwhile, efforts to get stonework repaired have not met with success, as the stonemasons are still too busy.

Distribution of Outing Schedules

- Sue takes the outing schedule to the Rutland Herald and sends it to The Mountain Times. Bob mails it to The Rutland Shopper and Sam's Good News. It was suggested that the Black River Tribune, Vermont Sports, the Brandon-Pittsford Reporter, Manchester papers and other radio and TV outlets might be good places to send it to. Bob said he would be happy to send it to any other print media to which we would like to have it sent. Jake will see that schedules of our hikes are available at Eastern Mountain Sports in the Diamond Run Mall.

Use of Non-Members Addresses

It was felt that non-members who go on hikes and sign our register should receive a schedule of future hikes along with a letter inviting them to join the section. Mark and Connie offered to draft the letter along with input from Sue Thomas. While we want to encourage membership, we want to make it clearly understood that you don't have to join to go on the hikes.

New Business:

Policy on Physically Handicapped

Hikers -- After considerable discussion, it was unanimously voted that a copy of the GMC's Trip Leader Handbook along with a cover letter be sent to hike leaders. The letter would attempt to summarize the leader's responsibilities in such situations. While all are welcome to come on hikes, questions can arise over how much obligation there is on the part of the group to aid the handicapped hiker and whether hike plans ought to be modified to accommodate those with disabilities. Ben Rose, GMC executive director, has asked Herb to draft guidelines for dealing with handicapped hikers that will hopefully clarify these and various legal issues.

By-Law Changes -- Changes to two of the section's by-laws were unanimously approved. Eliminated from Article 2 was a sentence stating that all voting members shall be at least 18 years old. Article 14 defining the section's policy on dues was eliminated as well since all dues policies are now set by the main club.

Annual Meeting -- There was discussion of a date for the section's next annual meeting. None was set but it will take place sometime between late March and mid-April. We will look into Fern Cottage as an alternative to the Unitarian Church depending on cost. It was proposed that a 45-50 minute film on the training of the 10th Mountain Division would make a good program.

Nominees for Directors -- The terms of a number of directors and officers, some of whom are ineligible for reelection due to having served two consecutive terms, will expire at the next annual meeting. After some discussion of potential replacements, it was unanimously approved to put off further discussion of candidates until the next directors meeting. By this time there could be a thorough review of the membership lists.

Trails & Shelters Report -- Bill Robichaud opened by submitting his resignation as Trails & Shelters co-chair. Bill has been seriously disappointed during the past year by what he considers very poor turnout for work parties and walk-throughs and expressed frustration with trying to care for the trail with this lack of support. Jake expressed appreciation for all the time and hard work Bill has put into the section's trails for the past several years. Bill continued that it was his belief that the section was simply no longer interested in traditional trail maintenance and that the solution lay in "adopters," each of whom would commit to caring for a segment of the section. Some of these adopters could come from our ranks while others would be designated by the main club. After much discussion, there was a feeling that while "adoption" had much merit, traditional work parties should not be abandoned. Herb contended Bill was being overly pessimistic and that attendance at work parties had not changed all that much in 10 years. There was also concern that adopters might not be able to live up to their original good intentions. It appears that the future will involve some combination of the two approaches. The next issue of Smoke & Blazes will feature an article on the section's new program of trail adopters.

Taylor Series -- The next Taylor series program will take place Friday, March 15, at 7:00 PM at the Unitarian Church. The program will feature a slide talk by Jim Northup, executive director of Forest Watch, a Montpelier-based non-profit advocacy group calling for the creation of new wilderness areas in the state and the maintenance of existing ones. Connie and Sue will again handle refreshments and Sue will take care of posters and signs. We again want to display the GMC exhibit that was there last year. Last year's program attracted 30 people and at least that many should come this year.

Trail Sharing - A request was made by Connie Youngstrom that a short section of trail between Spring Lake and Patch Hollow be maintained in such a way that it is usable by cross-country skiers as well as hikers. It was unanimously approved that a letter be sent to the GMC expressing this request.

Upcoming Meetings -- The GMC Executive Committee will be meeting on Tuesday, Dec. 11 at the Forest Service primarily to formulate its positions on wilderness expansion. At 6:30 that evening there will be at the Rutland Intermediate School Auditorium a statewide Forum on Wilderness that will include representatives of the logging interests as well as those of a wide range of environmental groups.

Killington Flagging -- Mark Youngstrom reported that trees have indeed been cut along a flagging tapeline from Cooper Lodge down to the West Glade Trail. Ruth Lamb, the shelter adopter, had previously notified Allen Wilson of ASC about this and been told the purpose was to aid skiers who accidentally got lost on that side of the mountain find their way back to the trail. It was felt that this was not a good precedent and that Killington should have cleared it with the club or at least asked. We would like Dave Hardy to verify the violation and contact Killington on behalf of the GMC.

Adjournment

The meeting was adjourned at 9:41 PM with several more agenda items yet to cover. The next meeting will take place Jan. 29, 2002, at 7:00 PM, again at Herb's office.

Killington Section, GMC Directors Meeting

29 January 2002

By Sue Thomas, Acting Secretary

Present

Herb Ogden, Bill Robichaud, Al Pulling, Connie Youngstrom, Bob Perkins, Sue Thomas

Secretary's Minutes

The minutes of the 5 December 2001 meeting were read and approved.

Main Club Director's Report

Al reported that the Main Club has approved dues increases, to go into effect this summer, as follows: regular member, $30; family, $40; individual life, $750; dual life, $1000; student/low income, $20.

The Champion Lands were not discussed.

Herb and Bill think we should be keeping an eye on main club expenses. Bill asked whether we get any funds from the Appalachian Trail Conference (ATC) for the shared portion of the trail. Herb asked Al to suggest to the Main Club that they minimize bureaucratic details with ATC that take up time and therefore money.

New Pico Shelter

We're not sure if GMC has money budgeted. Bill thinks that Killington (Resort) may not be able to make good on their promise to help with expenses. Should Killington Section think about donating money from our Kirk Fund?

Bylaws

Bob will print notice of proposed bylaw change in the next Smoke & Blazes.

Section Elections

Terms of directors Ruth Gibbud, Herb Ogden, and Bill Robichaud are expiring. Ruth and Herb are ineligible for reelection due to term limits. Names of several members were suggested as possible new board members and officers.

Trail Maintenance

Should we continue to have work parties? General feeling is yes, but Bill is not interested in leading them. Herb will lead the high elevation walk-through. Sue will ask Jerry Parker to lead the low elevation walk-through. National Trails Day is 1 June. Should we approach Eastern Mountain Sports for sponsorship or recruitment? The Main Club has told Herb that Trail Adopters should report to the Main Club. The board doesn't like this idea: wants to maintain local control. We should still have a trails and shelters chair to oversee local projects. Should we consider using plastic rather than painted blazes?

We need to buy new tools as needed to bring us up to the following complement: 3 hoes, 4 short clippers, 4 small saws, 4 pick axes, 2 haul hoes, 3 shovels, 3 grass whips, 3 large saws, 4 long bypass loppers, 2 pry bars, 4 first aid kits.

Bill feels axes are dangerous and shouldn't be provided to volunteer crews.

Al will check on the price to rent or buy a power weed whacker.

Volunteers

Is anyone contacting people who check off "volunteer" on their membership forms? Decided to discuss, at the annual meeting, a new post of volunteer coordinator.

Membership

Connie and Sue will draft a letter to be sent to new members.

Trip Leaders

Connie has received new trip leader handbooks from the Main Club. She will mail one to each leader on the next few schedules.

Trail Standards

Herb will advise the Main Club of our position in favor of maintaining the trail near Spring Lake to be suitable for skiing.

Governor Clement Shelter

There will be a meeting at the Forest Service office on North Main Street at 3 PM on Thursday, 28 February about the problem of undesirable activity at the site. A law enforcement representative will be there to clarify the question of whether access can be limited on the road.

Adjournment

The meeting adjourned at 9:00 PM.

Killington Section Annual Meeting

By Jake Sherman, Secretary

The Annual Meeting of the Killington Section of the Green Mountain Club was called to order at 6:40 PM, April 20, 2002 by President Herb Ogden at Fern Hill Cottage in Rutland, following a potluck supper. Herb welcomed the group and thanked Sue Thomas for arranging for use of Fern Hill. About 30 were present; all introduced themselves.

Secretary's Report

The minutes of the 2001 Annual Meeting as printed in the February 2002 issue of Smoke and Blazes were unanimously approved.

Treasurer's Report

The report by treasurer Al Pulling was approved with one correction. The section has $4,064.20 in assets. Currently there are 115 members, a gain of 27 from the year 2000. As of the end of 2001 there are total assets in the Kirk Fund of $15,852.53. Herb explained that the Kirk Fund was established years ago by Dorothy Kirk of Rutland in memory of her husband George. Its purpose is to provide funds for maintenance of trails & shelters in the Killington Section. The practice has been to expend only the interest.

President's Report/Trails and Shelters Report

President Ogden combined both reports. He explained that the Trails and Shelters Committee was co-chaired by Steve Williams who takes care of paperwork and e-mail and Bill Robichaud who takes care of work on the ground.

The Governor Clement Shelter is jointly maintained by the Green Mountain Club, Appalachian Trail Conference, and the U.S. Forest Service. Because of vehicle abuse the club is pursuing three actions: (1) asking the Town of Shrewsbury to prohibit parking, (2) placing a line of obstacles (possible boulders) to prohibit the access of full size vehicles (there is no way to keep out ATVs), and (3) posting signs prohibiting parking. If this were done, people could be ticketed since it is illegal to use motorized vehicles off town highways. However, usage cannot be restricted to certain groups on government land. Herb wasn't sure if this would work. He needs to have contact with the snowmobile club and meet with the Shrewsbury selectmen. If the selectmen approve, exceptions would need to be made to permit parking to repair the shelter. If vandalism continues, we would ask them to abandon the road and we would gate it (north of the northerly bridge).

A Revoltin' Development?

So many of our important social issues generate extreme polarization: a women's right to choose versus a fetus' right to life, a land-owner's right to a manufactured home versus a neighbor's right to maintain his property value, a logger's right to his livelihood versus a spotted owl's right to its habitat, Tom and Brad's right to marry versus – well, you get the idea. In each case folks on both sides believe strongly that they have the high moral ground.

It can be surprising, humbling and, I hope, enlightening, to find oneself, suddenly, on an unfamiliar side.

The City of Rutland has raised some objection to the plans of the Green Mountain Club to build a new shelter near the recently relocated Long Trail on the west side of Pico. The proposed shelter site is on federal land in the Appalachian Trail corridor but it is also in the drainage area of the Rutland water supply. Are we now the ugly developers threatening our own drinking water?

Of course not. Clearly a new shelter with a modern composting toilet is preferable to having hundreds of hikers making do (so to speak) on their own all over the mountainside. We hope and expect to reach a satisfactory arrangement with the city and by this fall, to have a much needed replacement for the aging Pico Camp. But this episode has reminded me, at least, that there may indeed be two sides to every issue.

Coolidge Range Ridgerunner 2001 Season Report

By Daniela Molnar

[Daniela Molnar is the Ridgerunner who was hired by the GMC to be its presence on the Coolidge Range during the 2001 hiking season. The following is a lightly edited version of her report. It doesn't necessarily reflect official club views but contains much of interest from a thoughtful, close-up observer. Ed.]

When I began this job in early August, I did not really know what to expect as a ridgerunner on the AT/LT. I quickly learned that I was to play many different roles: a trail worker responsible for a large stretch of popular, highly-impacted trails, a shelter maintainer for several heavily used (and abused) shelters, a public contact point for the GMC, an interpreter and protector of Vermont's high places for a diverse and constantly shifting population, and the list goes on. The Coolidge Range Ridgerunner faces the challenge of quickly adapting to constantly changing needs in an extremely high-use area. In this report, I will mainly address matters of concern to the GMC and to the 2002 Ridgerunner. I want to stress that although this report may make my summer sound difficult and tiresome, I thoroughly enjoyed my time in this powerful area and learned a great deal from my experiences there.

Shelters

As the Coolidge Range Ridgerunner, I spent most of my time at Cooper Lodge and its environs. It is the highest-use shelter in the Coolidge Range, with about 180 overnight visitors between early August and mid October 2001. My time working at Cooper Lodge has led me to believe that it would be in the best interest of the Green Mountain Club, the American Skiing Corporation and Coolidge State Forest to take down Cooper Lodge. Cooper Lodge is old, wet, perpetually dusty and cold, and is prone to vandalism year round. It is a vortex for human abuse, which in turn results in the disturbance of the fragile ecology of the region. The shelter itself is structurally flawed: the roof leaks, the windows have no glass because the glass is smashed as quickly as it is installed, the dirt floor is rife with mouse holes and droppings, and the bunks are lopsided. As if these inherent flaws were not enough, hikers and tourists regularly leave trash at the shelter. Most hikers that I met did not like the shelter. They found it cold and uninviting, and their initial dislike of the shelter perpetuated the vicious cycle of abuse.

The American Skiing Corporation, [is] the large conglomerate that owns Killington Resort, Cooper's close neighbor . . . [A]ny shelter easily accessible from the nearby ski trails will be prone to vandalism and disrespect, and this abuse will extend to the ecosystem around the shelter. Cooper Lodge is an easy two-tenths of a mile downhill from two major chairlifts. As long as Killington Resort is in existence in its current form, Cooper Lodge and the surrounding boreal forest will be treated with disrespect.

Another well-known problem shelter in the Coolidge Range is the Governor Clement Shelter. Because the road that goes directly to the shelter is likely to remain open by the discretion of the private landowner who controls access to the road, there is not much hope that this shelter will become a safe place for hikers at any point in the future. [Actually the road is a town highway and the property belongs to the federal government. The GMC is working to find a way to control vehicle access near the shelter. Ed.] Just in my short time as a ridgerunner, I received a steady flow of reports of harassment, illegal tree cutting, loud drunken parties, and even physical assault. I never stayed at the shelter because I did not feel safe there. The GMC Guidebook discourages hikers from staying there, and I actively discouraged overnight use of the shelter, as well. What is the use of a shelter that hikers cannot use? Why is the GMC paying to maintain a shelter that is not used by hikers and is abused by non-hikers? The cry that the shelter is "historic" seems an unworthy justification. It is old, yes, but it is not preserved, which makes it simply old, not antique. Taking down the Gov. Clement Shelter seems like the only logical way to deal with the abuse of the area. If it remains standing, the abuse and violence will continue. [The Killington Section has not, as yet, given up on preserving Gov. Clement Shelter. We are trying to locate a stonemason who will work on the walls and chimney. Ed.]

If Cooper Lodge and Gov. Clement Shelter are to be taken down, one or two new shelters will need to be built. Although I have not researched the details of locating a new shelter, my experience in the area says that a good place would be the old site of the Tamarack Shelter, on the south side of Little Killington, at the junction with the Shrewsbury Peak Trail. [The suggested site at the current Shrewsbury Peak Trail junction actually is about a half mile south of the of the former Tamarack Shelter site. Ed.] At 3600 feet, the forest in this area is not as delicate as the present location of Cooper

Lodge, but it is still a high-elevation ecosystem. An even better spot may be about one mile south of the Shrewsbury Peak Trail junction where a small spring ran all summer (through a severe drought) and the forest begins to transition to a less-sensitive hardwood forest.

Because there is a composting toilet system already in place at Cooper Lodge, I would recommend leaving the tent platforms and making it a tenting site only. This would not attract winter visitors and would thus greatly reduce the threat of vandalism. It seemed that most visitors to Cooper Lodge preferred to camp on the platforms, anyway. The established tenting sites at Gov. Clement should also remain. I believe that the site's "nocturnal carousers" would be much less enticed by a tenting area than a shelter.

The other shelters in the Coolidge Range, Pico Camp and Clarendon Shelter, have their own share of challenges, though these are much less dire than Cooper Lodge and Gov. Clement. Pico Camp is a cozy little cabin, and although it receives its share of littering and some illegal fires, I believe that it should remain standing as long as it is not directly threatened by the expansion of Pico Resort. It is a popular lunch spot for hikers and receives moderate overnight use despite its location on a side trail. If it is to remain standing even one more season, the privy hole is full – the privy must be moved immediately.

Clarendon Shelter is a very peaceful shelter with few problems. . . . [Possibly due to an oversight, Clarendon Shelter lies on private land outside of the LT/AT corridor. The GMC may have little ability to control any undesirable activity there. Ed.]

The Coopah Poopah

This new composting toilet faces its share of problems, but is operating relatively well. It receives very high use during the summer months, and is used by skiers during the winter months as well. There is certainly a need for close management of this facility. The catcher fills up quickly, especially during July and August, and there is always a lot of liquid in the catcher. New, eye-catching signs urging people to PLEASE not pee in there seemed to help considerably, and a new bucket to hold bark mulch helped encourage people to use the mulch more. The signs should definitely be replaced if they are not there at the start of the 2002 season, and the bark mulch bucket should always be kept full by the ridgerunner. Also, it is important to talk to people about the significance of the composting process – why it is important, what it does, and why to NOT pee in there. A drainage system such as the one that exists at Camel's Hump would greatly help the Cooper Pooper compost more effectively.

Killington Peak

The Coolidge Range is certainly high-use. Between early August and mid October, I encountered 1,296 people: hikers, thru-hikers, tourists, school groups, and others. Most of these people were tourists or day-hikers that I met on or near the summit of Killington. The summit is very much a part of the Killington resort. There is no vegetation left to protect on the bare, rocky summit, so the job of the Coolidge Range ridgerunner is different from the "stay on the rocks" job of the summit caretakers of Mt. Mansfield, Mt. Abraham, and Camel's Hump. Killington summit duty consists mainly of being a talking brochure for the constant stream of tourists that circulate quickly on and off the summit. The average visitor would stay on the summit for no longer than three to four minutes, during which time he or she would inquire about the names of the surrounding peaks and sometimes warily ask about the nature of my job. Having checked the destination off of their lists, they would then depart.

I had difficulty relating to so many people on such a surface level, so I rarely succeeded in adding depth or substance to the peoples' insubstantial experience of the summit. I felt like I was in a shopping mall, not on top of a mountain. I think that most of my difficulty relating to the big gondola crowds is personal. I certainly feel that I was able to create more successful summit experiences as the season progressed, but I am simply not as suited to that type of encounter as another person might be.

I think it is important that in hiring the 2002 Coolidge Ridgerunner, the GMC take into serious consideration the applicants' propensity for relating to large crowds in the ways described above. There is certainly enormous potential for a ridgerunner on summit duty to make an impact on the gondola crowds, but the person who is best suited to this type of work may not be the same person who is best suited to the other, very different aspects of the ridgerunner's duties. Most of my time as a ridgerunner was spent either alone doing trail work or with small groups of hikers at shelters, and I feel that I excelled at these types of interactions, but often felt confused as to how to best relate to the summit crowds. The Coolidge Ridgerunner is expected to be a summit caretaker, multiple-site caretaker, and a trail maintainer. These are all hard jobs, and they are all very different. It may be in the best interest of the GMC to decide which of the duties of the Coolidge Ridgerunner is most important to the GMC, and to hire accordingly.

Trails

The trails in the Coolidge Range are in generally good condition but require constant maintenance because they are so heavily used. I cleared several blowdowns, but most of my time was spent brushing in and clearing waterbars. The work is constant but not overwhelming, but it is important to stay on top of it and not let the trails get trampled, which can happen fast. Tom's 2000 End-of-Season Report has some good suggestions on how to manage the trails effectively.

A Word on VYCC Crews

There were two Vermont Youth Conservation Corps crews stationed in the Coolidge Range for the month of August, one just north of Cooper Lodge and one just south of Pico Camp. The groups worked hard, accomplishing impressive and much-needed rock drainages and staircases. Both groups were initially welcoming, inviting me to dinner and asking me to lead discussions about Leave No Trace ethics. Many thanks to the Killington VYCC crew for their openness, hospitality, and enthusiasm; they contributed a great deal to my experience and to the trail. Unfortunately, my experience with the Pico VYCC crew was not as positive. The crew leaders encouraged a competitive, antagonistic relationship between my work on the trail and their work on the trail. They seemed to feel threatened by my questions and suggestions. I feel that there is a need for greater communication and cooperation between the GMC and the VYCC, both on an administrative level and in the field. The welcoming, cooperative attitude of the Killington VYCC crew is commendable and is a good goal to work towards.

Ideas for the Future

The Coolidge Range is a problematic area of the Long Trail because of its proximity to Rutland, the most crime-ridden city in Vermont, and its aggressive "development" by the large, absentee corporation that owns most of the range. During my time as a ridgerunner, I often felt a sense of uselessness in the face of matters over which I had no control. A person who has stated authority, like a police officer, is better equipped to resolve many of the problems that plague this region. I did not feel comfortable or empowered to approach the locals at Gov. Clement; the well-intentioned "unofficial caretaker" at the Clarendon Shelter did not listen to my strong suggestions; all that I could do to counter the abuse of Cooper and Pico shelters was to pick up the trash I found left there. It often felt like my job consisted mostly of picking up trash, which is a discouragingly reactionary (rather than preventative) approach to management of such a beautiful and sensitive region.

The 2002 Coolidge Range Ridgerunner would benefit from approaching the job with knowledge of its difficulty and by being creative and flexible in dreaming up strategies on how to deal effectively with the continual abuse of the region. A proactive, optimistic, dynamic person with the ability to transform a discouraging, difficult situation into a worthwhile eye-opening challenge will benefit greatly from the job and will be able to create needed changes in the Coolidge Range.

Thanks to all the good folks at the GMC for your flexibility, receptivity, and support. Keep up the good work, y'all.

Cooper Lodge is maintained by Ruth and Sandy Lamb. There is a problem with people skiing off the roof. A possible solution is to make the roof steeper, although some might consider this a further challenge. People also jump off the roof in summer and this loosens the screws resulting in leakage. Pete Ketcham said that he was not aware of any conversation to restrict use of the shelter.

Herb reported that an improved parking area is now under construction at the LT/AT trailhead on VT 103. He also thanked Connie Youngstrom and Sue Thomas for organizing the James Taylor Lecture. Herb announced that the Trail Sector Checkers were Kathleen Wood for Killington North (Cooper Lodge to US 4), Connie and Mark Youngstrom (Lottery Road to Lower Cold River Road), and Herb Ogden (Canty Trail/Blue Ridge Mountain). The role of the Trail Checkers is to walk the trail at least once, make minor repairs, and report any work needed.

Smoke and Blazes

Herb thanked Bob Perkins for a great first year. Bob remarked that he was having fun doing it and thanked everyone who submitted hike reports. He reminded members that anything is welcome. His intent is to publish Smoke and Blazes in February, May, August, and November. He urged hike leaders to submit schedules a month before the publication date.

Outings Committee Report

Sue Thomas urged leaders to call as far ahead of time as possible to schedule hikes and to submit their reports to Bob Perkins.

Historian's Report

Bob Perkins reported that there were no new initiatives but reminded members that all GMC memorabilia is welcome. The Rutland Historical Society has agreed to be a repository for donated materials.

Green Mountain Club Director's Report

Al Pulling reported on the situation regarding the Jonesville Bridge over the Winooski. The old bridge has finally been removed and will be replaced, but in the meantime LT hikers have no way to cross the river. Fording is not recommended because releases from a hydroelectric plant can rapidly affect the water depth. Pete Ketcham from the GMC reported that a member of the Ottauquechee Section has donated a 16 passenger van that will be used to shuttle hikers on both sides of the river at posted times. The provision of a footbridge is stalemated because an adjoining landowner is not willing to give the club access rights. Work is being done on a possible relocation involving the State and the towns of Duxbury and Bolton.

Old Business

The Killington Director's recommended that the Club amend the bylaws as printed in the February issue of Smoke and Blazes. This action would delete the part of Article 2 that requires that all voting members be at least 18 years of age. It would also delete Article 14, which authorizes the section to determine its dues, since dues are now set by the Green Mountain Club. The recommendation was passed with one abstention.

New Business

The problem of an outhouse at a proposed new Pico shelter was discussed. The problem is that the newly relocated LT/AT crosses the Rutland city watershed and city ordinances require that privies within the watershed be equipped with a full septic system. Even though the shelter the GMC proposes would be equipped with the latest composting/combustion technology, it wouldn't meet the present ordinance. We are therefore negotiating with the city Public Works Commissioner to get permission to build an outhouse. If no shelter were built, there would be no shelter between Cooper Lodge and Tucker-Johnson Shelter, and if one were built without a privy it would undoubtedly lead to contamination of a nearby brook. Pete Ketcham reported that the GMC has submitted an Act 250 application (which is more than 1" thick for those interested in reading it!) for the building of a new shelter and privy on the relocated trail. The goal is to fly the shelter in by August if there are no challenges to the permit. Eric and Laura Tobiason of the Ottauquechee Section are volunteering to build the shelter.

Sarah Lowry has been jointly hired (GMC/ATC) as Coolidge Range Ridge Runner from the end of June to mid-October. She will be responsible for basic trail maintenance. It was suggested that there be a Ridge Runner report in the next Smoke and Blazes.

Pete Ketcham reported that the new shelter must be accessible for those with mobility impairment. There is a public perception that the Architectural Barrier Act, which provides for such access, conflicts with the idea of a "primitive hiking experience" but Pete advised that it was not in the best interest of the Club to be against the ABA.

Herb asked for some direction regarding the relocated Pico Shelter if negotiations do not go well with the city. He reported that there were three options: (1) do not build a new shelter in the city watershed and maintain the current Pico Camp as long as we can; (2) encourage the National Park Service to be aggressive with the city since federal land is not subject to local regulation (going through the Act 250 process is a good faith effort, but not required); or (3) urge the city to amend the ordinance to allow the Club to build the shelter since that would be the best solution to the waste situation. If no agreement could be reached the members voted to urge the city to amend the ordinance to specifically permit the GMC to build a shelter with a privy (which would have an incinerating composting system). There were no members who urged an aggressive stance and only one member who was in favor of abandoning the project.

Herb reported that the second three-year terms of Ruth Gibbud and Herb Ogden were expiring and they could not be reelected; in addition the first three-year term of Bill Robichaud was expiring. He also pointed out that in 2003, Al Pulling's term would be expiring and he could not be reelected, although Sue Thomas and Gretchen Crowley could be reelected for second three-year terms. In 2004 the three-year terms of Bob Perkins, Jake Sherman, and Connie Youngstrom will expire and they will not be eligible for reelection). It was moved and seconded to place the following on the ballot for three-year terms to expire in 2005: Bill Robichaud, Barb Griffith, and Steve Williams. The nominees were accepted and approved unanimously as a single slate.

The meeting recessed for the Director's meeting. Following a brief recess Jake Sherman reported that the following were elected: President -Steve Williams, Vice President-Barb Griffith, Secretary-Jake Sherman, Treasurer-Al Pulling, and GMC Director-Herb Ogden. Herb declined in favor of Lynda Hutchins. Al Pulling was elected the Alternate GMC Director.

It was moved and seconded to adjourn the meeting for a slide program on Iceland presented by Herb Ogden; the motion carried. The meeting was adjourned at 8:15. Following the program, Jake Sherman on behalf of directors and section members thanked Herb Ogden for his service of six years as president. Herb did a great job and provided exceptional leadership. He will be much missed in that capacity.

Killington Section Hikers Take a Breather at Brown Bridge

Trip Reports

Grandpa's Knob

16 February 2002

By Gordon & Helen Cawood, leaders

Snowshoes were not needed for the hike up Grandpa Knob in Castleton on February 16. Trucks and snowmobiles on the service road left us more ice than snow. Sixteen hikers on this joint Bread Loaf/Killington outing trekked to the open summit. Viewing was good if you consider dark clouds over both the Green Mountains and the Adirondacks to be good viewing.

We talked about the experimental wind turbine that was installed on the peak in 1941. It had two steel blades, each weighing 8 tons, forming a 175-foot circle. It operated 16 months until one of the blades failed. The broken blade was tossed 750 feet! All that is visible today are four stanchions, once supporting the 107-foot tall tower.

We also checked on two unusual bedrock outcroppings, called "hogbacks." The crowns had been shaped by normal weathering; while the bases had been eroded by running glacial ice melt, giving the outcroppings a top-heavy appearance. Thank you all for coming. Your company brought nice hiking weather and made for a very pleasant outing.

Herrick Mountain

9 March 2002

By Larry Walter, co leader

The Herrick Mountain cross-country special came off with a minimum of hitches. The hardest part was figuring out how to coordinate all the vehicles in an effort to leave enough people-carriers spotted at trail's end. After some heroic spring-heave driving on the south end we managed to get all ten hikers to the trailhead.

The weather was near perfect with an uncommonly warm breeze and blue skies. The first and best viewpoint on the south end of the main ridge served as a good place to take a lunch break. The 170-degree vista includes parts of Lake Bomoseen, the back side of Birdseye, Ira, Grandpa's Knob, Route 4 and the entire approach, summit and easterly slope of Herrick Mountain. At least one member of past Herrick hikes remembered having no view, so apparently the locals have cleared off some of the vegetation.

We eventually hit enough snow to warrant occasional use of the 'shoe's. A couple of hardy souls managed to post-hole through the white sections. To our surprise (kinda), there is now a brushed ATV/sled trail all the way to the summit. We bailed off the southeasterly side of Herrick onto increasingly better logging roads to a 3:00 PM rendezvous with our waiting vehicles.

Aside from one nasty little pitch up a snow-chute (good team work prevailed) and a couple false summits, the hike was fairly tame. We only spotted a couple guys headed up the northerly ATV trail in the morning, with no other humans sighted.

Those who wish to hike the same route (from Spruce Knob to the northerly end of the old Middletown-Ira Town Road) should contact the locals for parking and access permission. I have names and numbers from some past survey work in the area.

Poultney Rail-Trail

By Ray Catozzi, leader

If you hadn't been out hiking this past winter with all the snow and cold weather, a nice short trip on a flat, no-elevation-gain trail was the perfect way to start your hiking season. We took the Delaware & Hudson Rail-Trail from the Route 30 crossing into the village of Poultney. It was almost like walking around your own neighborhood, but we were out in the open countryside with no snow or rain. A dog or two, and nine of us enjoyed a pleasant afternoon walk. I would recommend this way to start your hiking season if you spent too much time indoors during the winter watching television.

Mount Moosalamoo

7 April 2002

By Gordon & Helen Cawood, coleaders

It must have been spring fever. We have never had so many calls about a hike (about 29), or so many hikers (21) participating in one of our hikes. Beautiful hiking weather may have had something to do with it. But the early callers could not have anticipated that.

We began the hike at the Branbury State Park campground, taking Ethan Allen Trail to Ethan Allen Cave. We checked, but Ethan was not in. He must have decided that these accommodations were rather too Spartan. Ethan Allen Trail continued to Hawkins Road, Summit Road and Bear Pond Avenue. In spite of the urban nomenclature, there was no blacktop. Crag Trail and Pitch Pine Trail were more rugged, being most rugged after we stopped at Pitch Pine Point for lunch and a view of Lake Dunmore.

Cold Spring Trail, Iroquois Trail and Burnt Mountain Trail brought us to the summit of Burnt Mt. A ledge to the west gave us a good view of the Adirondacks and the hill in Orwell where Lynda Hutchins lives. Another to the east and south took in Mt. Moosalamoo and Lake Dunmore. A short retreat from Burnt Mt. brought us to Upper Plains Road, just north of Kampersville where cars had been spotted.

Many thanks, all, for coming. We enjoyed the hike and your company.

Mount Aeolus

27 April 2002

By Ray Catozzi, leader

I had climbed this mountain with all the old marble quarries and the large Indiana Bat cave many years ago, but I wasn't certain now of the right trail up the mountain. I was put in touch with Rick Pingree, a local caver, and he said, "Yes, I can show you the route to the cave and beyond." So he and I went down there and up the quarry road to the cave. Now I was all set to lead the group of 15 hikers there a few days later.

'Twas a great sunny day and we hiked up a good quarry road, past three or four quarries, and then to the bat cave, which is closed off with a large metal gate covering the large opening. Entering the cave is prohibited most of the time so as not to disturb the sleeping bats. We passed two nice clearances with nice views of the Valley of Vermont and just past the cave was a third where we stopped for lunch.

After lunch we headed off the quarry road onto a nice trail that started up the last half mile or so to the top of Mount Aeolus. Easy going at first, then we hit a short, steep pitch that a slight covering of snow made difficult for some of us. Then the trail leveled off again for a few hundred yards. The another steep, winding pitch, with more snow under foot, which proved too much for a few of us, so we sat down and waited while the hardy ones went on to the top of Aeolus. Not much of a view up there, but those who climbed can now say they climbed it!

All 15 of us had a nice pleasant walk back down to our cars.

Brown Bridge

5 May 2002

By Roma Pulling, co-leader

The day of the hike was one of those perfect days hike leaders dream about but don't usually get. Also, we planned a half-day hike, a schedule that appeals to many people who think 9 AM is early. So we had a large group of 22 hikers at the park and only lost four of them. (Just kidding! Four people decided to cut the route short and found alternate means of returning home.)

The route from Tamarack Notch to Brown Bridge is a popular one with 4-wheelers and mountain bikes as well as hikers; so we found it surprising that we met no one. Recent rains had made a mess of the trail in spots where we had to detour off to one side. Wild flowers were not as numerous as hoped. We did see red trilliums, colt's foot and one lone dogtooth violet. A few hobblebushes were in bloom although those in other locations had long since gone by.

Brown Bridge is located in Shrewsbury over the Cold River where it crosses the Upper Cold River Road. For the benefit of covered bridge hobbyists, it was built in 1880 by Nicholas Powers and is of town lattice structure.

Even though we were competing with the Loyalty Day parade, we were pleased with the hike's success.

Mystery Hike

11 May 2002

By Ray Catozzi, Leader

Where did we go? I led the group of 13 in five cars up Route 4 to where the new LT/AT crosses the highway. I suggested we could go south on the AT all the way to Springer Mountain in Georgia, but we couldn't be back in time for supper.

So we went north to Willard Gap, where the Long Trail and the Appalachian Trail separate. A short distance further on the AT we came to the junction with the north loop of the Deer Leap Trail. Up this trail we went, over three short, steep pitches, but with nice easy stretches in between, to the top of Deer Leap Mountain. Then down a short, steep trail to a small brook crossing and up a short, steep trail on what I call the lower Deer Leap dome. We soon joined the east loop of the Deer Leap trail and ambled down and out to the Deer Leap overlook.

Many of our group had never been there before and were overwhelmed with the view of Pico, Killington, Blue ridge and the mountains all the way to New York State. It was windy and cold so we quickly got down in a hollow between some rock outcroppings and enjoyed our lunch in the warm sunshine.

After lunch we descended the east loop to rejoin the AT, but for only about 50 yards. We left the AT and went down the old LT/AT, now called the Sherburne Pass Trail, to the Inn at Long Trail. As we prepared to get in our cars for the drive home we looked back and saw three fellows rock climbing straight up the high, perpendicular Deer Leap cliff. We watched and admired them for quite a while, as we sipped a glass of homemade dandelion blossom wine.

From the Editor

It Was a Jungle Out There

I've proposed the name "Jungle Junction" for the intersection where the new Long/Appalachian Trail leaves the old LT/AT (now called the Sherburne Pass Trail) about a half-mile south of Pico Camp.

In the 1930s there were three trail junctions in the vicinity of Pico Peak. "Pico Junction", about one-half mile north of Pico Camp, was where the old LT/AT stops climbing, and swings around to the east. From Pico Junction the Pico Loop Trail climbed directly to the peak and then down to the camp (then Pico Shelter). Another trail from Pico Junction, the West Side Trail Around Pico, contoured around to the west.

This West Side Trail rejoined the LT/AT about one-half mile south of the shelter, very near to today's junction. This spot came to be called "Jungle Junction" because of the tremendous tangle of blowdowns in the area caused by the great New England hurricane of September 1938. Damage was on a par with that of the 1998 ice storm. By resurrecting the name "Jungle

Long Trail South of Pico Peak
September 1938

Junction" we can commemorate a major trail maintenance event and at the same time provide a unique and alliterative name for a significant trail intersection.

To complete the 1930s junction story: from Jungle Junction the LT/AT continued south toward Killington along the east side of the ridge while a parallel trail provided an alternative route west of the ridge. These two routes joined at the third junction -- the one farthest from the Route 4 trailhead. We called it "The Far Junction".

Utah's National Parks

By Roma Pulling

After more than a year since our last trip--time for the airlines to refine their security procedures--we flew to Salt Lake City for another trip through southern Utah and the red rocks and canyons that I love. It took more time than usual to clear security, during which Alfred had to remove his shoes for inspection, but I don't mind the time as long as they get it right. And we were sabotaged only by the weather when we landed in Newark in a thunderstorm and were tossed around rather more violently than was comfortable.

When time allowed we took short hikes in each of the parks. Weather was extremely hot but dry so was not a hindrance. The elevation was another matter. The change from Rutland's 500 feet to (in some places) over 10,000 is something that's hard to ignore. But we came through and returned with many pleasant memories. I will highlight three of the more outstanding trails:

Cedar Breaks National Monument in southwestern Utah near Cedar City protects a spectacular rock formation known as the "amphitheater." Measuring three miles wide and over 2000 feet deep with brilliant shades of red, yellow and purple, it is truly worth seeing. We took the Ramparts Trail, starting near the Visitor Center, and reaching Spectra Point at 10,285 feet elevation. We hiked on for a short distance encountering widely scattered patches of snow before deciding to return to our car. By the way, "breaks" is an old word for badlands, and juniper trees growing in the park were mistaken for cedars by early explorers.

Capitol Reef National Park near Torrey protects the Waterpocket Fold, a "wrinkle" in the earth's crust. It also preserves white domes thought to look like a capitol building and ridges which the early settlers called "reefs." Some of these settlers were Mormons who established farms along the Fremont River, and some of their buildings stand today. We chose a trail leading to Hickman Natural Bridge past many interesting rock formations. The bridge is impressive and situated over the trail so we were able to walk under it. We learned the difference between natural bridges and arches. Bridges are formed by erosion from running water. Arches are formed by other means of erosion, one example being the result of freezing.

We had never found a way to drive to Hovenweep, a national monument on the Utah/Colorado border. But since our last attempt a paved road has been constructed from the Utah side, crossing a portion of the Navajo Indian Reservation. We hiked two miles in 87° heat, starting at the new Visitor's Center and returning there. We were in the Square Tower section of the monument and encountered the ruins of many stone structures built 700 years ago by the ancestors of our Pueblo Indians. Hovenweep is an Indian word meaning deserted valley.

We have derived much pleasure from visits to our nation's parks. Stay tuned for our next trip.

Trip Reports

Tiny Pond

24 February 2002

By Sue Thomas, leader

We couldn't have asked for a better day to hike up to Tiny Pond in Tyson; the sky was blue, the snow was white, the sun was warm, and the birds were singing spring-like tunes. We could have asked for a bit less ice however. The trail up the ridge is extremely steep, and I never felt so much like a bowling pin as when the hikers above me began to slide back down in my direction. With the aid of crampons, spiky snowshoes, ski poles, and sheer luck we all arrived at the pond intact and had our lunch sitting on the ice in the warm sunshine

The pond is at a reasonably high elevation, so there was plenty of snow, but none of us trusted the ice enough to cross over. By venturing out a few yards, however, we could stand on the surface of the pond and look out over the valley beyond the beaver dam.

After lunch we continued on around the pond to look at the beaver lodges, passing tracks made by snowshoe hare, fishers, and grouse. The beavers were nowhere to be seen, no doubt pouring over home improvement catalogs and planning their spring projects.

I'd scouted out an alternative route on the Mount Holly side, so we avoided the extremely quick though undoubtedly painful trip back down the way we'd come, thus cheating Lucy, who works in the x-ray department at the hospital, out of some job security, for all arriving home safely.

Little Rock Pond and Green Mountain

8 June 2002.

By Steve and Diana Williams, leaders

Under the guidance of Transportation Coordinator Sue Thomas thirteen enthusiasts left Rutland to meet with hike leaders Steve and Diana Williams at the trailhead parking lot at the intersection of the LT and Mount Tabor Road. The arrival of the cars at different times led to allegations of speeding. There being no tickets in evidence these allegations were fortuitously moot.

The two-mile hike to Little Rock Pond is an easy one, a gradual slope with limited wet spots, and considerable use of puncheons over poorly drained sections of the trail on the approach to the pond. The pond looked clear and inviting. There was some talk by one member of the party about swimming to the other side, but the concept never advanced beyond the verbal stage. Sue Thomas brought to our attention the small shelter which used to be located on a small island in the pond; it was replaced by the larger Lula Tye shelter, first on the west bank, and later in its present position south-east of the pond.

The group shortly reached the "decision point" where any intimidated by the prospect of the ascent of Green Mountain had the opportunity to branch to the left, follow the pond loop trail and return to the trailhead on the LT. There was a unanimous vote to continue up the Green Mountain Trail. Whether this result was due to confidence in the leaders, the adventurous spirit of all, or a belief in the GPS equipment carried by two members of the group remains unclear.

An hour's climb, including a few rocky passages, brought the group to a grand overlook providing an eastwards vista back towards the pond; an excellent spot for lunch. Following lunch some two hours were required for the steady downgrade back to the parking lot on the Mount Tabor Road. In many places the trail took a gentle descending angle across a steep slope, many of which were covered with fine stands of large and well-preserved evergreens.

Regarding sighting of flora and fauna, we had the benefit of having with us both Ray Catozzi and Rick Tilgree who provided a good overview of many of the plants on view. Regrettably this writer is rather weak on the subject; hence seekers of the facts are referred to Ray and Rick. Regarding fauna, considerable excitement was caused when the advance members of the group were following recent moose prints down the trail when suddenly there was movement by an active quadruped a short distance away. All were ready for a moose sighting when an anticlimax appeared in the form of a black Labrador, whose owner shortly appeared ahead of us. The only other livestock sightings were two snakes by Mrs. Leader who will normally go to considerable lengths to avoid them. All three survived the two encounters unscathed.

On the groups return to the trailhead parking lot, Ray brought the hike to an eminently successful conclusion by making available the libation he so successfully produces. Thank you Ray.

Baker Peak, Mount Tabor

15 June 2002

Rained out; rescheduled for the fall.

Snake Mountain

By Ray Catozzi, leader

Twelve stalwart hikers drove to Addison to climb the last prominent peak on the northern end of the Taconic Range. We hiked up the usual route, which used to be a road leading to a hotel on the southern end of this wonderful mountain. The hotel is long gone, but the gorgeous view out over the beautiful dairy farms, 1000 feet below us to the west, and 30 to 40 miles of Lake Champlain in the distance, attracts many hikers all summer long. Besides our twelve there were probably a dozen and a half of more folks eating lunch and enjoying the view.

My plan after lunch was to follow a trail that seesawed back and forth over the ridgeline and descended to Route 17 to the north. We all hiked to the northern end of the ridgeline where we split. Some, including a couple of drivers, returned the way we had come so they could drive to Route 17 to pick up the rest of us: the courageous few.

The trail turned east for 100 yards or so, and then came out on an ATV road. Down this road we went, with many switchbacks, and soon came to level ground. But the road then turned east instead of continuing out to Route 17, which we could see across a long view of tall grass. One hiker suggested that we leave the trail and hike across the grass to the road, which we did, passing through a farmer's yard and out his driveway. Wondering how long we would have to wait for our ride, we found a shady spot beside the highway. We had no sooner settled down than the cars pulled up next to us. Only a five-minute wait! Wonderful; and a wonderful hike. If any of you readers of Smoke & Blazes haven't climbed Snake Mountain, put it in your future plans. You'll never be sorry.

Long Trail, Cuttingsville

By Andrea McQuade, leader

Cooler temperatures and sunny, clear skies brought out 15 hikers to explore this section of the Long/Appalachian Trail. After we crossed the suspension bridge, we met a fellow who was hiking to Massachusetts to attend a wedding – not his own, but was there a tuxedo somewhere in that gear? After our initial ascent, we stopped at one point overlooking Route 103 and back toward Rutland, followed soon after by another lookout that gave us a view of the Rutland State Airport. Our timing was just right to see a plane land.

We continued on, stopping at the Minerva Hinchey Shelter for lunch, where we enjoyed the company of several other hikers. At this point, some of our hikers left us to return to cars parked at Spring Lake Ranch and the rest of us continued on to Route 140. Shortly before we reached the end of our hike, we checked out another lookout point that gave us a view of White Rocks. This spot is somewhat obscured by trees, but perhaps this would make a good work project someday! The hike was a great opportunity to meet new people who we hope will join us again for another outing.

Treadway Mountain

20 July 2002

By Gordon and Helen Cawood, co-leaders

Five Bread Loafers, five Killingtonians and Fred Torrisi from Alaska climbed Treadway Mountain in the eastern Adirondacks on July 20. We started from Putnam Pond State Park (off NY Route 74), skirted the southern border of Putnam Pond and proceeded to Treadway Mountain trail. After stopping for lunch at the eastern summit, most of us continued on to the western summit where we took in views of Pharaoh Mountain, Pharaoh Lake and many other Adirondack mountains. We knew where to look for the Green Mountains, but they were lost in the haze.

Thanks for coming: Debbie Ramsdell, Barbara and Al Stiles, Sue Thomas, Barbara and Barry Griffith, Diane and Steve

Williams, and, of course, Fred. We enjoyed your company and appreciated the good weather you brought with you.

White Rocks/Ice Beds

27 July 2002

By Barbara & Barry Griffith, co-leaders

We started the hike from the Picnic/Parking area with 13 hikers looking for a cooler climate than the 80/90 degree weather that we have been experiencing. Following the blue blazed trail we came to the hogback and followed a series of switchbacks to the first overlook of the White Rocks Cliffs. The view of all those boulders cascading down the slope is impressive. Makes one want to learn more about the geology of Vermont. The White Rocks area is in the Green Mountain range. Another overlook to the Taconic Range and Otter Creek below (0.3 miles) before descending to the Ice Beds (0.5 miles) where we were not disappointed in the plunge in altitude and temperature. The brook that comes out of the rock base was as refreshing as we remembered! There were many hikers enjoying the coolness of the area. After a pleasant respite we returned back up to the overlooks before descending to our vehicles. A good way to spend a warm summer day.

White Road, Mendon

4 August 2002

By Bill Robichaud, leader

White Road is an old logging road constructed in the 50s on the southwest side of Pico. It was a warm day for a hike but as we proceeded up the trail we were greeted by a refreshing breeze. The only complaint, raised by many, was that there were no viewing spots. This would be difficult to change as the trail is in a wooded area.

Our trail intersected another old road that we followed up the west side of Ram's Head Mountain to a plateau surrounded by evergreens at about 3100 feet where we had our lunch. Nearby was an old abandoned hunting camp covered with blue plastic.

On our trip back four hikers decided to return the way we had come. The rest of us took a spur trail to the south that took us to the Bucklin Trail.

We found the Bucklin in good shape but noted that the two large rocks at the upper stream crossing were still out of alignment. As the flow of the stream was low we had no problems crossing.

Killington Section Directors Meeting

4 June 2002

By Jake Sherman, Secretary

Present: Steve Williams, Barbara Griffith, Sue Thomas, Bob Perkins, Bill Robichaud, Herb Ogden, Connie Youngstrom, Lynda Hutchins, Gretchen Crowley, and Jake Sherman. The meeting was held at Herb's office, 92 Center Street, Rutland.

The new section president Steve Williams opened the meeting at 7:05 with a welcome and introductions. There was no action on the secretary's minutes of the annual meeting, which will shortly appear in the upcoming issue of Smoke & Blazes.

Place and Format of Future Meetings

It was decided that we will stick with Herb's office, as it is handy and central. Barry Griffith's office could serve as an alternative if necessary. All liked the 7:00 P.M. starting time.

Trails & Shelters Report

After six years as president,

Herb has assumed the perhaps equally demanding role of Trails & Shelters chairman. There were a number of items needing attention

Pico Shelter Update

The news here is excellent. The City of Rutland has agreed not to contest the club's building of a new Pico West Shelter in the city watershed. The city has agreed to our version of a campsite agreement calling for a privy with the latest in compost incineration. It will therefore not be necessary to go through the Act 250 process. A May 27 e-mail from Peter Antos-Ketcham of the GMC included thanks to Herb for his support and counsel throughout the project.

The shelter itself is to be constructed by Erik and Laurel Tobiason of the Ottauquechee Section. The ABA compliant privy is being constructed by Jeff Bostwick of the Burlington Section. Pete will be working with Dick Andrews on construction of the permanent compost incinerator.

Naming of the New Pico Shelter

It was unanimously decided that the section would recommend to the main club that the new shelter be named in honor of longtime section member and officer W. Churchill Scott. Jake will forward the recommendation in the form of a letter to Waterbury. In light of Churchill's many decades of service to the GMC and the Killington Section, his years as a fire lookout on both Pico and Killington, and his work with the CCC in the Coolidge Range in the 1930's, that this honor would be most appropriate. It was also felt that two shelters bearing the name of Pico, Pico Camp and the new shelter, would likely prove very confusing to hikers.

Governor Clement Shelter Update

Herb met with the shelter adopter, Roy Arthur of VAST (the Vermont Association of Snowmobile Travelers). Roy found no problem with two of our proposals, posting signage and putting boulders along the level stretch of the town highway, but wanted to check with his club on the parking prohibition. If VAST likes all three of our proposals, then the next step is for our two groups plus any other interested parties to meet with the Shrewsbury selectmen. Barb and Connie, who are Shrewsbury residents, could make the contact and lead the effort. We could probably gain access to the equipment needed to move the boulders through Gary Salmon. Meanwhile, it was reported that the outhouse at Gov. Clement has been vandalized with a chainsaw.

Walkthrough & Maintenance

Our section was checked on some recent walkthroughs and found to be in close to perfect shape. A few waterbars need to be rebuilt on the Canty Trail. With regard to the Bucklin Trail, it is in good shape but two large boulders that were installed in 2000 as stepping stones at the upper Brewers Brook crossing migrated several feet downstream last winter becoming no longer usable. The rocks need to be moved back upstream but the flow is swift at this time. As it happens, for years we have been asking the GMC to build a bridge but they have claimed it would only wash out in the spring.

After much discussion, it was agreed that we would request that the main club move the boulders back as a short-term solution and as a long-term solution that a bridge be built. We feel it would hold.

Regarding the Sherburne Pass Trail, Bill Robichaud arranged with Killington for them to take care of it at the top north of Pico Junction. There are some blowdowns. Sue Thomas reported that south from Killington there are some low wet areas. It was felt that the water bars would not do any good in dealing with these areas.

Sector Checkers

Herb distinguished between sector checkers and trail adopters, noting that the former have less responsibility and are mainly to report problems. Quite a few portions of the section are still lacking sector checkers. People are still needed to cover the following: Vt. 140 to Minerva Hinchey Shelter; Gov. Clement to Jungle Junction; U.S. 4 to Willard Gap, and the Bucklin Trail. Herb has a list of those parts, which have been adopted. Ideally, sector checkers should check their sections twice a year. One problem is that some of the sections cover quite a bit of distance; however, Killington has a policy of letting GMC volunteers use the gondola.

Shelter Adopters

This program is managed by Waterbury, which selects the adopters. We believe all of our shelters except for one are taken at this point. Herb will check with the GMC on this as well as who has responsibility for Tucker-Johnson Shelter.

Welcome Signs

We need to change some names and phone numbers on the welcome signs that our section has been posting at shelters and road crossings within the section. We need to make up at least 20 to cover the road intersections and another six for the shelters. We'd like to get more of those little protective bulletin boards made and plan to ask Bill Carris about this since he volunteered to make trail signs. Steve will mail the new signs to the sector checkers who can post them. Again, a distinction was drawn between sector checkers and trail adopters. The latter are chosen by and report to Waterbury and have more paperwork to fill out.

Financial Report

There was no treasurer's report as Al Pulling is in Utah. However, a full treasurer's report was presented at the annual meeting April 20 and the figures are just about the same.

Smoke & Blazes

Bob Perkins again won high praise for his editorship of the quarterly newsletter. Bob has introduced photos and a personal editorial column among other innovations. Bob expressed frustration that the May issue had been delayed for several weeks because the outings schedule was not complete. Sue Thomas, as co-outings chairman, said that from her perspective the problem was getting hike leaders to commit to particular dates. The problem was expected to be resolved soon and the newsletter mailed. Bob once again expressed his appreciation for the hike reports and said it was perfectly okay for the leader to appoint someone else for this task. Photos were welcome also.

Taylor Series Lectures

We're not happy with the way this year's Taylor Series event went. Attendance was very poor, even embarrassing. A big part of the problem it was felt was the steep $8 admission mandated by the GMC, which sponsors the program. Sue suggested a free section-sponsored slide show and potluck would draw a much better attendance. The ideal time would be in February or March of next year. Sue said she will make some phone calls to gauge interest and picture availability and Bob will get something in Smoke & Blazes. The Rutland Historical Society stores and maintains our photo albums.

Sale of Postcards

About 20 years ago the section had printed a considerable quantity of postcards as a moneymaking idea. There are two scenes -- one of the Green Mountains from Creek Road in Rutland and one of Stratton Pond. The GMC logo is on the back. The postcards did not sell as expected and the question has arisen what to do with them. It was suggested that Waterbury could sell some. Or we could just give them away at potlucks and other presentations. Some might also be used to communicate with potential members. Sue Thomas is still willing to draft a message for this purpose.

Communications with Waterbury

The GMC Annual Meeting is coming up this Saturday. Our new GMC Director Lynda Hutchins is unable to attend because of prior commitments and Al Pulling, the alternate director, is away. Herb said we will be receiving minutes of the meeting. Meanwhile, Linda will relay to the main club our desire to have a bridge built across Brewers Brook on the Bucklin Trail.

Clarendon Gorge Parking Area

It is reported that the paving project is just about completed. Barbara Griffith has noticed that piles of trash are being left there and they just sit for weeks. She will look into the situation. She said there is an individual who's been picking trash up in the vicinity and bringing it to the lot. This individual has also taken to kicking out so-called squatters who camp along the river. Bill thought that the repaved lot would also be featuring a manned tourist information booth, which could provide some oversight, but apparently this is not the case.

Rutland County Physical Activity Coalition

This is one of a couple of new groups trying to promote walking and physical activity in the county. We will be sending them our hike schedule.

Pine Hill Park

The Rutland City Recreation and Parks Department is interested in getting grants to build and improve trails in the city's Pine Hill Park. We support this project. Herb offered to attend their meetings and report back.

Next Meeting

The next directors' meeting was set for Tuesday, Oct. 1, at 7:00 P.M. again at Herb's office.

As reported in the August 2002 issue of Smoke & Blazes, we have a new shelter on the west slopes of Pico. After some difficulty in finding a date convenient for all those involved, Sunday, November 10, not coincidentally the last Sunday before the start of the main hunting season, was selected for the naming and dedication ceremony at the shelter. 'Plan B', to hold the ceremony at the Long Trail Inn, was held in readiness in case the weather made the trip to the shelter impractical. On November 7th, with six inches of snow on the trail, this appeared increasingly likely. However, three days of warm weather removed essentially all snow from the trail and Sunday presented great fall weather conditions with temperatures in the sixties.

The ceremony comprised two parts, naming the shelter after Churchill Scott, a long term and major contributor to the Killington Section, and dedicating it to the memory of Alice Ference, who lost her life while hiking the Appalachian Trail. Given that Churchill and his wife Virginia were able to participate at the Route 4 trailhead, but not to make the hike, Ray Catozzi, a

From the EditorSo, what else is new?

When I first moved back to the Rutland area after having lived "away" for half a century I frequently was asked whether I found much to be different. I immediately mentioned the Wal-Mart parking lot that has replaced the train station, the new Route 4 West, and the entire new neighborhoods east of the now paved Stratton Road. I quickly added, however, that to my delight, the natural scene was just as I remembered it. I was thinking of Pico, Killington, and Mendon "peeking" over East Mountain and of the Taconics with Mount Herrick forming the western horizon.

But as I got back into the woods and mountains I found that the natural scene was not entirely unchanged. The wild turkey and the coyote were not part of the Vermont of my youth. The moose, then found only occasionally in the Northeast Kingdom, now appeared in my Mendon back yard, in a Rutland swimming pool, and in a Shrewsbury cow pasture. On the other hand, in five years of tramping I've seen only one porcupine. They used to be so ubiquitous that even a bona fide conservationist felt no more guilt in dispatching a shelter-eating Porky with a heavy club to the snout than he felt in swatting a black fly.

The view from Blue Ridge, and the stone quarry scar on Pine Hill are now obscured by forest growth, but one must keep a sharp eye out now to spot an elm tree. What I at first took to be a beautiful stand of lupine near the Creek Road turned out to be purple loosestrife. Eddy's Ice Pond and East Pittsford Pond are no more; they are returning to meadow and woods. There are now zebra mussels in Lake Champlain and Eurasian milfoil in Bomoseen. I remember more monarch butterflies and fewer cardinal songbirds than I see today.

Last but not least (except in the literal sense) we must now contend with the parasite Giardia lamblia.

Trip Reports

Flat Rock, Clarendon

18 August 2002

By Roma Pulling

The day of our hike was a real scorcher. In fact it was one of a string of uncomfortably hot and humid days, and we thought, "Who would want to hike on a day like this?" But sixteen of them did. Fourteen of us met at the park, and two more waited for us near the beginning of our route, as they lived in that area. We hoped they would be helpful in finding the inscription on the rock, purportedly from Revolutionary times.

Starting on the Quarterline Road in Clarendon, a round-trip hike to the rock would have covered perhaps a mile. So, as we had promised a four-mile hike, we started near where the road turns to dirt and did a road walk. Temperatures there were actually more comfortable than in the city as there was shade under trees beside the road and, thankfully, no pavement. It being Sunday afternoon, we saw more traffic than usual but were able to avoid any close encounters.

From a barricaded track leading into a pasture, we hugged a hedgerow and, upon reaching its end, we turned sharply to our right and crossed another field to a knoll near the edge of a forested area. There we entered the woods and almost immediately were standing on rock, although it was anything but flat. We followed it for some distance and I'm sure could have continued to do so, but we were summoned by our two young friends, who had found the inscription. Perhaps due to erosion over a long period of time, we couldn't make out any words, only letters that looked like "BENF." Reports have it that at one time there was a metal plaque on the rock, but it apparently has been removed.

As we emerged from the woods on our return hike, we noticed a woman motioning and calling to us. This was the landowner, Helen Grembowicz, who had given us permission to walk there. She wasn't able to hike with us but had driven across the field to meet us. We chatted with her for a few minutes about the rock and the possible significance of the lettering. Our return trip to our cars was uneventful, and we were pleased to be able to renew an outing that had been taken by the section in the past.

Blue Ridge Mountain

By Steve Williams, co-leader

A welcome crowd of sixteen turned out to join leaders Steve and Diana Williams in hiking the Canty Trail to Blue Ridge Mountain. Had this number not included a majority who knew their way to the trailhead an immediate problem would have resulted in taking six vehicles out of the meeting point, reversing direction onto Route 7 and going right onto Route 4. Naturally all but two of the vehicles were separated during this maneuver, the two fortuitously being the Williams, who did know where they were going, and the Cawoods, who did not. Debacle averted.

The first few hundred yards of the Canty Trail are owned by one of the Killington Section members, Bob Perkins. Fortuitously Bob was with the group and accepted the honor of leading through his property, where his father used to run a family camp, of which the buildings remain to this day. From this point on, Herb Ogden, Section Checker and aficionado of the Canty Trail, took up the pole position with Steve Williams acting as sweeper. Herb is to be congratulated on the general condition of the trail. He did advise, however, of the intent to install more water-bars on some of the steeper parts of the trail. Given the prevailing dryness their absence was by no means felt on this occasion.

Herb pointed out one of the geological features of the trail, a round sinkhole caused by glacial activity. He also led the party to the (just wet) falls at about the halfway point; falls which the Williams had completely missed on their trial run two weeks earlier.

The summit was reached precisely in accordance with the guidebook's 2 ¼ hours, which may or may not prove anything at all. Given the largely clear skies prevailing, there was an excellent view towards Pico, Killington and Deer Leap. The party then moved over to the western outlook to enjoy lunch in sight of Rutland, the Otter Creek Valley, and Bird Mountain and other peaks on the western side of the valley.

On returning to the trailhead, Herb pointed out another historical feature. Old Turnpike Road, where the trail originates, preceded the Sherburne Pass as Rutland's route east over the Green Mountains. At the time of writing it is only passable by motor vehicles for a limited distance, though a trail of some sort does still proceed to Route 100 on the east side of the Green Mountains.

Susie Peak, Clarendon

By Ray Catozzi, leader

I've climbed Susie Peak (also known as Edmunds Peak), which straddles the Clarendon-Ira town line, several times so I was familiar with the route. From the parking spot on the North Tinmouth road it crosses a power line; follows a short trail up a low, wooded hill; and passes through an opening in a stonewall into a large meadow. Crossing the meadow diagonally, the route connected with a nice gravel road that led up by a couple of summer camps to the ATV road that it followed all the way to the top of the mountain.

This time, however, we had problems. The power company had cleared all the brush under the power line and piled it high on both sides of the clearing. The brush piles hid the trail up the hill so we bushwhacked until we found the stonewall opening. Now we were on the right track.

After hiking up the camp road about a half mile I started looking for the beginning of the ATV road, which was supposed to start just below the first camp. I couldn't find it. I figured someone had intentionally blocked the ATV road entrance so we hiked past the camp and looked for some other way to the top of the mountain.

We soon found a new logging road taking off up hill to the right, so we followed it for quite a ways, and in the right direction, and soon we connected up with the ATV road. Hooray, we found it! We were then all set to hike the rest of the way. The ATV road was rough and steep near the top, but we are hikers. We all made it to the clearing on Susie Peak, sat down, eat lunch, and enjoyed what view there was on that foggy and cloudy day. On a clear day you can see the Rutland Airport as well as the southwest part of Rutland City.

On the way back down we stayed on the ATV road all the way to the camp road. I then could see how we missed it on the way up. We followed the camp road all the way to the town road about a quarter-mile south of our cars. Next time I'll know where to find the hidden ATV road, I hope.

Baker Peak

5 October 2002

By Barry & Barbara Griffith, leaders

This hike was rained out last spring, and as the weekend and Hurricane Lili both approached this fall we worried that history would repeat itself. We listened to rain throughout the night, but awoke to dry and clearing skies.

Ten hikers ascended the old carriage road now called the Lake Trail. After crossing McGinn Brook we continued our climb heading north up the Baker Peak Trail to its junction with the LT/AT. From there the last one-tenth of a mile to the summit over the exposed rock edges presented the most challenging portion of the hike, but our party rose to the occasion. We were sheltered from the passing storm's winds at lower elevations, but felt their full force at the summit. We hunkered down to enjoy a well-earned lunch, and spectacular views up and down the Vermont Valley.

After eating we set off south on the LT/AT down the easterly side of the ridge until we arrived at Griffith Lake. In the late 1800s lumber baron Silas Griffith regaled guests at his lodge here in grand style. The buildings are long gone, but the setting remains. We enjoyed its beauty before retreating to the west down the carriage road to our waiting vehicles.

Bald Mountain, Mendon

By Andrea McQuade, leader

Eight of us – seven club members and a visitor from New Jersey – enjoyed this hike that is so close to Rutland. We experienced all kinds of weather – overcast skies, rain, wind, sunshine – and views of the fall foliage in Shrewsbury, the Cold River valley, Dorset Peak, and the Otter Creek Valley. The Rutland Lookout is partially obscured by trees, but we were able to identify familiar landmarks. Everyone commented on the amount of leaves, especially the green ones, still on the trees at this time of year.

Quimby Area, Killington

By Herb Ogden

Five of us decided the weather forecast was not bad enough to cancel this history hike. In fact, when we parked at the Killington Town Offices on River Road, the sun even shone briefly. Unfortunately, by the time we reached the end of our 1300-foot climb at the 2523-foot peak between Taylor Pinnacle and Rounds Pinnacle, showers were changing to drizzle, and we had only local views. Still, though we couldn't see the Coolidge Range, the nearby views were beautiful, especially since the foliage lingered late this fall.

After lunching at the peak, we followed the Appalachian Trail farther east to the 1990s logging superhighway that connects Stockbridge South Hill with Notown via Little Sherburne. Where the new road turned west, we continued straight on the grass grown road that it replaced, soon coming to the remains of a large house about 100 feet west of the old road. From the Killington Land Records, it appears this was the homestead of Asa Woodard, who moved from Stockbridge and bought land in the Quimby area from 1812 until 1829. It is now a large, deep cellar hole with exceptionally good dry masonry.

The huge chimney pile in the middle probably served several fireplaces. Other signs of bygone settlement are terracing and a few apple trees.

We followed the old road south across a small brook. Where the road used to continue south only ten years ago to pass a small cellar hole, it is now grown up in brush, and we headed straight for the little Woodard Cemetery, the last resting place of Asa and Mary Woodard. Asa's stone says he died in 1845, aged 74. Mary died five months before him, aged 72. There is no sign of other graves and scant space for them in the little rock-walled plot on the side of Quimby Mountain overlooking the Coolidge Range. Atlases from the 1850s and 1860s show no house – indeed, no road – in this area, so the big Woodard house probably had fallen down by then. By 1845, agriculture on hillside farms above 2000' was declining. Perhaps no one lived in the big house after Asa died a widower.

Retracing our somewhat sodden steps, we followed the logging superhighway to its junction with the Quimby Road and soon were glad to be in the gorge of Quimby Brook, out of the wind. For about the last half mile to the River Road, the Quimby Road was the original route of the Appalachian Trail, relocated in the 1980s by the hard work of the GMC Ottauquechee Section. Some painted out blazes are still visible. Coming out onto the River Road, we were opposite the Town Offices, ending a pleasant outing.

Who was Quimby? Darned if I know! His house appears in the 1869 Beers Atlas of Rutland County, apparently somewhere southwest of the vacation camp that occupies the site of a lumber camp near the top of the Quimby Road. Either it has vanished without a trace or the camp stands where it used to. No Quimby appears in the town land records, so he must have been a renter. But a mountain, a brook, a road, and a neighborhood are named after him.

Stony Brook, Stockbridge

27 October 2002

By Roma Pulling, leader

The day before our hike brought rain in the valleys and snow on the peaks, which brought me new concerns: Would the road in to Stony Brook, never in excellent condition, now become impassable? Would the rocky trail, covered with snow, become treacherous? Would Alfred, my co-leader, who had undergone angioplasty a few days before, climb to the shelter and do injury to himself? As usual, my worries were blown out of proportion, and we had a successful hike.

The closest thing to a problem that we encountered was a small tree that had blown down across the road. The driver of the lead car decided to drive through the treetop, followed by the other three cars. But on our return trip another driver took the lead and very sensibly stopped near the blowdown. Several of the hikers together were able to push the tree off the road.

As we started back to our cars, a gentle rain started to fall. On the way back to Rutland it rained harder, but it was not a problem on the trail.

The original Stony Brook Shelter, on the Appalachian Trail near its junction with Stony Brook Road, was built in 1958 by the Norwich University Outing Club. Over the years it had become dilapidated and was too accessible to the public; so it was replaced in 1997 by a new shelter, three-quarters of a mile west, built by Erik and Laurel Tobiason. The old shelter has been dismantled.

Minerva Hinchey Privy Party

9 November 2002

By Herb Ogden, leader

"Trail Party" is what the Rutland Herald calendar section called this, and it does have a more pleasant ring to it than "work party." Besides, this particular outing was unusually un-serious, anyway. Despite my fears of not having enough people to move the Minerva Hinchey Shelter privy to a new hole, a dozen people showed up on this fairly warm, sunny day. People took turns digging the new 3' hole while the rest took turns supervising. Then we all bodily picked up the less than two-year-old privy and put it onto its new foundation over its new hole. One person tried it out, to make sure the privy wouldn't fall into the hole. Then everyone lined up outside the door for a group photo, appearing to wait for a turn at the convenience.

After the Privy Council disbanded, a few people went north to the Airport Lookouts to check for blowdowns, and the rest went south to Patch Hollow, removing one small and one large blowdown along the way. Some folks made their first acquaintance with a one-man crosscut saw. We had a very pleasant lunch overlooking the Patch Hollow beaver pond, decided that the trail up Bear Mountain would be too slippery what with wet leaves and a few inches of snow, declared victory, and went home happy.

Killington Area Bushwhack

10 November 2002

By Herb Ogden, leader

While we were enjoying the dedication of Churchill Scott Shelter, I was asked whether it was practical to hike from there south along the Long Trail and take the Bucklin Trail down to Brewers Corners before nightfall. Because the ceremony lasted till around 2 p.m., I said I didn't think so, but I suggested an alternative: near Jungle Junction (the south end of the Sherburne Pass Trail), leave the trail, bushwhack about a tenth of a mile, and pick up some ATV tracks and logging roads that lead down to the Bucklin Trail about midway between the two brook crossings. About a dozen of the crowd wanted to do this, but transportation was a problem, so eventually we settled on a group of seven. Five had hiked south from Route 4 to attend the ceremony, while Larry Walter and Dave Coppock had lugged a chainsaw up the Bucklin Trail and then north along the Long Trail to reach the new shelter, clearing blowdowns along the way, and needed a shortcut back to Brewers Corners.

We climbed to the birch knoll with the huge glacial erratic, enjoyed a very windy view up there, and plodded through three-to-four inches of snow south on the LT to Jungle Junction. About 200 feet south of it, I headed downhill, hoping to find one of the faint tracks that end about a tenth of a mile downhill from the LT. After a little searching, we found one, and it was "all downhill from there." Actually, not quite. Farther down, after the faint track turned into a wide woodroad, the tank traps began. These are regulation deep waterbars, installed after a logging operation. They give the hike a sort of roller coaster effect. I think we were all glad to hit the flat Bucklin Trail.

We didn't see much wildlife, but Jerry Parker did point out a very fresh bear track in the snow, which greatly interested our one canine companion. There were also several moose tracks.

contemporary of Churchill's within the Section, spoke at the trailhead about Churchill's contributions to the Section and to the GMC as a whole. Please see page 11 of this issue for a review of Churchill's accomplishments.

For the hike to the shelter, Churchill was represented by his oldest son, Walter Jr., and his children Robin and Becky; his oldest daughter Linda and husband Ray and their son Keith; his son Kim, wife Sue and two children Britney and Zachary; his youngest daughter Candy and husband Clarence plus their two children Jill and Katie and, last but not least, his granddaughter Brianna, making some fifteen in all. While some lived locally, others had traveled from Connecticut.

Alice's daughter Jean and her son Douglas, who had traveled from New York City for the occasion, represented the Ference family.

Ben Rose, GMC Executive Director, who brought along his daughter Anya, and Pete Ketchum, Field Supervisor & Back Country Management Specialist, with his wife Katie, represented the GMC, Waterbury. J.T. Horn, New England Regional Co-coordinator, represented the Appalachian Trail Conference.

The party was brought up to forty by the addition of the shelter builders Erik and Laurel Tobiason and sixteen members of the Killington Section.

The two-mile hike passed by without event, though did require some effort by those of the Scott family not used to the hiking milieu. They, and in particular five year-old Brianna, are to be congratulated on their efforts. The party thus just about managed to congregate at the shelter at the scheduled time of one p.m.

After inspection of the shelter and a brief lunch break, addresses were made by:

- Steve Williams, President, who welcomed everyone on behalf of the Killington Section.
- Ray Catozzi, who further addressed Churchill Scott's contributions to hiking in the Rutland Region,
- J.T. Horn, who expressed thanks to the Mr. Ference (Alice's husband, Jean's father) for his significant financial contribution towards the shelter. J.T. then described the ATC's policy of naming shelters after those who have made major contributions to ATC activities, for example Churchill Scott. He then went on to describe the ATC's readiness to dedicate a shelter, as indicated by a plaque, to memorialize those with special attachments to the trail, for example Alice Ference and her family, who have made such a contribution to the financing of the shelter.
- Jean Ference, who spoke of the importance of the trail to her mother and her attachment to it.
- Ben Rose, who spoke of the relationship between the Waterbury GMC headquarters and the Sections such as Killington; GMC goals, and the importance of contributions by members to the ongoing maintenance and expansion of the LT/AT system.

To increase the festivity of the occasion, which in the writer's humble opinion was already very positive, and to follow a tradition initiated by Ray Catozzi at the end of hikes he leads, a toast was proposed to recognize Churchill Scott and remember Alice Ference. Again following Ray, the toast was Ray's vin non-ordinaire, Catozzi Elderberry Special. This was supported by cheese nibbles, naturally Vermont Cabot cheddar.

Katie Ketchum then demonstrated great energy as a photographer, taking appropriate groupings of the participants to record the occasion. These photos will, we hope, be a memorable addition to the video of the occasion made by Barbara Griffith to augment the video she previously made during the construction phase of the shelter.

Both the Churchill Scott name board and Alice Ference dedication plaque were then installed.

The party departed as the weather began to show signs of deteriorating. The majority descended by the LT/AT, while a few adventurous souls were led by Herb Ogden up to the ridge and then, via a "corner-cut" known to Herb, down onto the Bucklin trail.

In conclusion, the Killington Section of the GMC is extremely grateful to all who have participated in the financing and erection of the Churchill Scott Shelter; to those who helped organize the ceremony of November 10th and to those who attended the ceremony, in particular the members of the Churchill Scott and Alice Ference families.

Green Mountain Club Walking Song

By R. W. Saunders

Air: I Went to the Animal Fair

I joined the Green Mountain Club;
I felt like a regular dub;
The first four miles were only smiles
And then there came the rub.
My prayer for a rest was balked;
No matter how hard I talked,
They would not rest at my request,
But only walked and walked.

(Refrain in Monotone)

And walked and walked and walked
and walked
And walked and walked and walked.

Oh, but my feet were sore,
And some of my clothes I tore,
The mud was deep, the hills were steep,
And fences we climbed galore;
As onward the leader stalked
My prayer for a rest was balked;
They left me dead as on they sped,
And walked and walked and walked.

(Refrain in Monotone)

And walked and walked and walked
and walked
And walked and walked and walked.

Walter Churchill Scott

At its directors meeting on June 4, 2002, the Killington Section officers and directors voted unanimously to recommend to the main GMC that the new Pico West Shelter to be built on the relocated LT/AT south of Rte. 4 be named in honor of dedicated longtime GMC and Killington Section member W. Churchill Scott and be known as the Churchill Scott Shelter.

Churchill has been associated with the GMC and the Killington Section for nearly 70 years, most of that time as an active member assuming numerous leadership roles. Shortly after graduating from high school in 1932, Churchill joined the Killington Section trail crews under the direction of Willis Ross, who was a postal employee in Rutland. After serving on these crews in 1933 and perhaps in 1932 as well, he was recruited by Ross to be the caretaker of Porky Camp, a closed camp on Killington Peak near the present Cooper Lodge, where he spent the summer of 1934. After the hurricane of 1938 made the stretch of LT between Pico and Killington impassable, Churchill was one of a crew that cleared it.

Following military service in World War II, Churchill resumed his activity with the section serving as president for two years (1950-1951), secretary for twenty-two years (1961-1982) and treasurer for twenty-five years (1961-1985). During this time he also played a key role in the maintenance of trails and shelters. Following retirement from his career with the U.S. Postal Service, he returned to Killington Peak for several years working from the summit as fire lookout.

On June 12, 1999, at the GMC's Annual Meeting at Stratton, Churchill received an honorary life membership in recognition of his years of service to the Killington Section and the Club. Churchill's contributions were summed up as follows in the fall 1999 issue of the Long Trail News:

In 1934, at the age of nineteen, Churchill Scott began his long association with the GMC. In that year, he became caretaker at Porky Lodge on Killington Peak. Scott has been very involved in the Killington Section. Over two decades, he served as section officer and for many years, Churchill single-handedly kept the trails and shelters in the Killington Section going. He handled correspondence, finances, and did on-the-ground trail and shelter maintenance. He also led countless outings over the years and edited the section's newsletter, Smoke and Blazes.

Scott received his end-to-end certification in 1969. He encouraged his own children and Rutland area youth to discover the joys of hiking. Scott's first membership in the Killington Section was given to him, like other youth, because he joined the military during WW II.

We in the Killington Section are proud of Churchill's legacy and feel that his early connections to the GMC going back to the increasingly legendary 1930's together with his many decades of continuing service to the Killington Section make him very deserving of having this new shelter named after him. We believe that such a move would help to pass on the kind of history and dedication that he embodies to future generations of hikers. He has certainly been an inspiration to us in the Killington Section.

It was a dark and stormy night -

Patch Hollow, May 11, 1831
[This story, taken from the History of Wallingford, Vermont by Rev. Walter Thorpe (1911), was recounted by leader Barry Griffith to about two dozen enthusiastic Killington Section snowshoers at the scene of the crime.]

Away back in the early part of the nineteenth century there occurred "The Patch Hollow Tragedy." Rapidly returning to primitive wilderness is what was formerly well settled land. On the east side of Bear Mountain running in a northerly and southerly direction is Patch Hollow. At the time of the tragedy the Mount Holly road, as it was called, passed over the highlands, north of the present road, by way of Congdon's and Clemons'. About a mile east of the Clemons place the road branched off north running through Patch Hollow. Upon this road five families lived. At the south end, Luther Hale, who made wooden plows for farmers in the vicinity. Next lived David Patch, who had built a substantial house and reared a large family. Then came Simon Patch's and away to the right lived Edmund Patch.

Further on north, a little away from the road to the left, Rolon Wheeler had built a log house 24 x 18 and here was the scene of the tragedy. Wheeler had married a daughter of David Patch and was a man of violent passions and jealous disposition. Report said he was guilty of indiscretion with his wife's sister and the community to show resentment for such conduct, planned to turn out and give him a coat of tar and feathers and perchance ride him on a rail. They were well organized and comprised young men from the village, from Sugar Hill and even Shrewsbury. Threats were made so publicly that Wheeler hearing of them swore that if attacked he would defend himself. Visiting the village, he went to the blacksmith shop of Thomas Draper, made a large file into a two-edge knife and fitted it to a handle. It appears that Jarvis Learned had been selected to lead "the rioters" but on the appointed day he was called to attend his sister's funeral in Danby. He afterwards felt fortunate to think it was not his own. On the night of May 11, 1831, the party set out from the village. Several carried jugs of rum, one a bucket of tar, another a sack of feathers. The detachment from Shrewsbury got lost in the woods, either from darkness or too frequent potations, and after wandering about for a time went home and reported they'd had a great time with "Old Wheeler." Next day, hearing how the affair terminated they were glad to make it known that they had never reached the house. In a field south of the "hollow" the parties from the village and Sugar Hill met, compared the contents of various jugs and proceeded to disguise themselves. Isaac Osborne, at the time a foreman of James Rustin's hat shop, was appointed leader. The party followed along the road until they came to Wheeler's house and there called for admission. They claimed they were going fishing in Shrewsbury Pond and wanted some fire. Wheeler had placed

What's the point?

From sometime in the mid 1950s until sometime in the mid 1990s the Guide Book of the Long Trail, in describing the trail up the south side of Killington, mentioned a waypoint called "Consultation Point". What's the story behind the unusual name of this transitory landmark? Based on a conversation with my late father, Craig S. "Pinky" Perkins, I offer the following explanation.

In the early 1950s a group from the Killington Section set out to conduct one of the periodic relocations of that piece of trail. I don't know for sure who else was in that particular work party, but among Dad's frequent trail-working colleagues were R. Gale "Breezer" Spaulding, Clarence O. "Doc" Gaskill, and Malcolm (son of Willis) Ross. They decided this time to take a scientific approach. Taking into account the total elevation to be gained they selected an acceptable average pitch and resolved to maintain that average as an actual constant pitch throughout. I'm not sure that they used a surveyor's transit in the process but I know Dad owned one and it would have been in the spirit of the project.

As the day wore on, however, the careful calculation of switchbacks grew tedious, the crew grew weary, and the hour grew late. At some point they paused, consulted one another, agreed to abandon science, and struck out on a due north course for Killington. The strategy worked, the new trail was a success, and the point became Consultation Point.

One more point

Speaking of interestingly named points, perhaps the most intriguing is a lookout on Kit Davidson's Mount Zion property in Hubbardton that he calls Moot Point. But it's debatable.

against the door a rail long enough to brace against the opposite wall and feeling secure paid no heed to them. Finding it impossible to force the door, they pried a hole in the gable end of the roof and Isaac Osborne, James Sherman and Silas Congdon sprang into the house.

Then commenced a terrible struggle in the dark. Sherman got Wheeler by the hair and began to drag him out when Wheeler commenced to use his knife with deadly effect. The rail was knocked down and others rushing in from the outside added to the confusion. Benj. Brownell received a stab in the side. Jas. Sherman received fourteen wounds. Silas Congdon seized the blade of the knife in his hand and it was twisted round and wrenched from him, cutting out the inside of his hand. Isaac Osborne fell across the bed and died without a cry. During the struggle Wheeler slipped out of his shirt, dived under the bed, raised some floor boards, crawled under the house and made his escape into the woods. Meantime those within the house had got hold of Osborne's body and drew it about the floor thinking it was Wheeler. It was not long before they noticed the man was dead when they dropped the body and hastily left the house. In the meantime Mrs. Wheeler with many shrieks had run for her father's house. The "rioters", (for so they were termed in the indictment) hurriedly disappeared and James Sherman made his way to Dr. John Fox's home so as to get his wounds dressed. He informed the good doctor of the circumstances, urging him to hasten up to "the Hollow," fearing that someone was killed. Many times afterwards in recounting the experience, Dr. Fox claimed that what he saw within the log hut was the most terrible sight he could recall. By the dim light of a bit of tallow candle he noticed the livid body of Osborne on the bed and the cabin literally soaked in blood. It is a question how Wheeler, who had passed out entirely naked, spent the night in the woods. Before daybreak he fled into the Hartsboro section, stole a shirt from Mrs. Horton's clothes line and selected an unfrequented barn to spend the day in. It was entirely empty excepting two bundles of dry straw. With these he made himself a straw dress and thus clad made his way across country to his sister's home in a part of the town of Pawlet called "Tadmar." Here he was arrested the following day and brought back to Wallingford for trial. The court was called in the Hotel but so great was the interest that it moved to the Baptist Church. Upon hearing the facts of the case the prisoner was discharged. His acquittal was unexpected and it tended to intensify the excitement. After Wheeler's release he with his wife left town and afterwards lived near Danby Corners, from thence going to the great west.

The "rioters" in turn were held for trial in the county court and according to the records of Joseph Hagar and Reuben Wood were fined $60.00 each, and James Huntoon, James Sherman and Herman Mighells $40.00.

For the foregoing account I am indebted for my information to Dr. J. E. Hitt, who wrote an article upon this phase of Wallingford's history and before it was printed was at great pains to see it was authentic. The dreadful tragedy must have left its blight upon "Patch Hollow" for shortly afterwards the dwellings were unoccupied and it has never since been used for residence.

Trip Reports

Mount Tom, Woodstock

16 November 2002

Barbara Griffith

Marsh-Billings-Rockefeller National Historical Park is Vermont's only National Park and the only National Park to tell the story of conservation history and the evolving nature of land stewardship in America. "No Shooting" signs helped us pick this area for a hunting season outing.

Undeterred by a snowstorm and reports of a pile-up of vehicles on the Killington Pass a party of 12 set off to hike the easy carriage roads of Vermont's only National Park in Woodstock, Vt. We added a couple visiting from Connecticut to make us a group of 14. This relatively easy stroll followed an old carriage road winding up an easy grade. We strolled around the "Pogue" (a pond tucked in the cleft of the mountain), marveled at an old drinking fountain being gravity fed from the pond and wound up to the top of Mt. Tom (elevation 1240 feet).

The spectacular view of Mt Ascutney (one of Vermont's monadnocks) was obscured by the clouds, however the view to the east and south was a reward for the minimal effort. Woodstock from the top with snow flying and the covered bridge was like a postcard. What an ideal place to relax and enjoy lunch. The amazing craftsmanship of the carriage road was oohed and ahhed over. One section was about 40 feet of stonemasonry to span a small gully. One could imagine being pulled to the top in a carriage pulled by a team of horses!

On the return we meandered around, visiting a log ski lodge that had a wood stove to warm us up. Down the trail we located a "two-seater" his and hers outhouse. Onward we passed the old bowling alley and the mansion. There are 20 miles of groomed trails in the 550 woodland acres for all to enjoy. See you on the trails!

Bear Mountain, But Not Beyond

28 December 2002

By Herb Ogden

This was going to be an over 5-mile hike or snowshoe from Wallingford Gulf to Vt. 103. Plans were changed by the heavy snowfall that began on Christmas Day. No longer did I have to worry about coping with a muddy or icy trail. Instead, I had to figure out whether our group of ten could make it all the way in over a foot of new snow. First I scaled back to a round trip to Patch Hollow, planning to return on the old road that leads south to the Long Trail. Eventually, some of the group did snowshoe as far as the top of Bear Mountain, about 2.1 miles from Vt. 140. On the way down, we caught up with the majority, who turned around after reaching the south end of the summit ridge.

Because the parking lot off Vt. 140 was not plowed out, it took us a while to get all the snowshoers to the trailhead after parking cars in a tiny pull-off to the west of the trail crossing and at the Sugar Hill Road. After a few misbehaving snowshoe bindings, the next problem was encountered when we entered the woods: not enough blazes. Even those of us who were familiar with the trail sometimes had trouble deciding where it went. Some of us spent considerable time bobbing our heads from side to side trying to spy the next blaze through the trees. This shows that the new GMC blazing policy is, as the GMC says, not designed for winter hiking. I'd like to blaze this stretch to the old standard: always have one in sight. The new policy allows this but does not require it.

Our lunch break was at the fine lookout on a short spur trail partway up the switchbacks. By that time, some folks' thighs were already getting tired of lifting a lot of new snow every time they took a step forward. Alternating the lead, we nevertheless pushed on up the mountain and got to the summit ridge in good spirits. From there, a few of us followed the swath for the beacon electric line along the ridge. With no snow on the ground, this is tough going, so this part was actually easier on snowshoes, over a thick blanket of snow that evened out the rough terrain.

Retracing our steps was a real joy, much easier than breaking trail on the way up. We all returned to the Wallingford Gulf Road in good spirits.

Patch Hollow

This was a hike with a hook—the chance to hear what happened at this secluded spot on the Long Trail one fatal night in 1831. Section members were joined by others who do not regularly snowshoe -- including a curious newspaper reporter -- along to hear the tale, which is recounted elsewhere in this issue.

We carpooled to our trailhead at Spring Lake Ranch, with Bob Perkins' VW van filled with hikers leading the way. The drive up the narrow, icy road to the parking area added adventure to the trip before we even put on our packs! We were joined at the Ranch by a Shrewsbury contingent, bringing our total to 27 hikers.

Snowshoes and one pair of skis were donned. We struck off heading south along the well-marked trail, grateful for the snowshoes in the deep snow left by recent storms. After about a mile of moderate elevation gain we reached the ridge and went across to the headwaters of Patch Creek, where the secret of the Hollow was revealed.

The D&H Rail-Trail
By Moonlight

18 January 2003

By Herb Ogden

Like my first outing this season, the moonlight hike had to be changed from its original route. It was supposed to go from Shrewsbury's Upper Cold River Road to Gov. Clement Shelter, where we were supposed to enjoy hot drinks around the stone shelter's fireplace. After several weeks of snow, however, there was at most space for one car to park at the triangle on the Upper Road. I thought about a ski and snowshoe outing to Clarendon Shelter via the old Gaynor Road instead, but the Vt. 103 parking lot was not well plowed. Besides, the stream that runs down the old road had not entirely frozen over, and the descent on skis was very tricky. So I settled for the combination of Castleton State College's huge parking lot and the nice level trail that was made after the old Rutland & Washington Railroad was abandoned about twenty years ago. (Tracks now end at Salem, New York.)

Though the temperature was around zero, ten of us started south on the Delaware & Hudson Rail-Trail, six on skis and four on snowshoes. The skiers had a fine time. Though many snowmobiles had used the trail, it had been so cold since the last snowfall that the surface was still powder snow. The snowshoers? Well, they, um, had more time to thoroughly take in their surroundings. The skiers turned around near the two-mile mark; the snowshoers had to stop sooner so we could all finish together.

The surroundings were worth taking in. Soon after we left South Street, the full Frost Moon rose. The night was still. No wind blew. The bitterly cold snow squeaked beneath our skis and snowshoes. Where the railbed cut through pastures, horses stood sleeping in the cold. Lights shone from houses near and far. As the moon rose further, we could see the details of the Taconics around us and of the trail ahead of us, right down to the snowmobile runner tracks. Even though the temperature was now about seven degrees below zero, everyone enjoyed being out in the moonlit landscape.

To top off a successful outing, former GMC Director Wally Rogers invited us all to his house, which is in sight of the rail trail, for hot drinks. He gave us that and more, namely an excellent soup, cheese, crackers, and cookies. This will be a hard act to follow.

By the way, the very next night, four of us from the Unitarian Universalist Church skied the rail trail all the way from Poultney to Castleton, 7.2 miles. It took us about three hours, because we stopped often to enjoy the scenery and talk of many things in the moonlight.

After many nights of sub-zero temperatures and days with icy winds, we felt very fortunate that the day of our hike was comfortable and the snow was ideal. We gathered 19 people, starting with 14 at the park. We were joined by five more at Gifford Woods.

Parking our cars near the maintenance shed on Route 100, we loaded two plastic toboggans with supplies, strapped on our snowshoes and headed for the campground. Alfred and one other hiker stayed at the lean-to to start a fire while the rest of our group with veteran hike leader Jerry Parker in the lead started up the trail. We followed the Appalachian Trail at first but then bushwhacked south for a ways before swinging back toward the lean-to. Jerry said it was pure luck that he came out at our destination, but we knew better. We studied many animal tracks, most of which were hard to identify because snow had drifted in, but Jerry was sure that one set of large prints were those of a moose.

At the lean-to Alfred had a cozy fire burning and water heating in the old Killington Section pot. Hot dogs were soon cooking on a barbecue fork, sticks and aluminum foil and tasted delicious with hot beverages furnished by the club and cookies for dessert. After satisfying our appetites, we hiked back to our cars and returned home. To our friends in Florida, you don't know what you're missing!

Mount Independence

Andrea McQuade

Twelve of us pretty much had the place to ourselves as we snowshoed around this Vermont historic site. In 1776 American Revolutionary War troops built a fort here, across Lake Champlain from Fort Ticonderoga, hoping to prevent a British attack from Canada.

We stopped at a number of places along the trails to learn about the different structures including the barracks, the hospital, and artificers' shops, as well as the garden area, the floating bridge connecting the two forts, a quarry, and a crane that was used to lift supplies from the shore 200 feet below. Co-leader Lynda Hutchins' lively commentary helped us visualize these places, especially because so much of them was covered in snow.

For lunch we stopped on the shore of the frozen lake, where we had a great view of Fort Ticonderoga, snowmobiles, and ice fishermen. Our hike also offered opportunities to view animal tracks, porcupine quills, rabbit fur, and two foxes by the side of the road. At the end of our hike, we stopped at the picnic tables, enjoyed snacks, and heard a ghost story told by Sue Thomas.

Hiking and history - both factual and haunted - what a great combination!

Robert Frost Mt., Ripton

19 February 2003

Gordon & Helen Cawood

A large group of 21 hikers assembled for this hike. There were ten Breadloafers, six Killingtoners, two Burlingtoners, and three nonmembers. We started at the junction of Lincoln-Ripton Road and Norton Farm Road and headed west on the snowmobile trail.

It was a beautiful, sunny day. Nevertheless, it was cold, moving the faster members of the party so far ahead that it was impossible to keep count. But, all the cars disappeared at the end of the hike, so we're sure that we lost no one to any pedestrian-snowmobile encounters. Killington member Bill Lucas, though visually impaired, could follow the well-defined trail with impressive speed.

The snowmobile trail was wide and hard packed and led to the peak of Robert Frost Mountain where we were greeted with a chilling westerly wind and no one chose to stay there for lunch. However, three of the party continued a short distance down the snowmobile trail as it continued west where there was a good view of Bread Loaf Mountain and others in the Green Mountain chain

Section Directors Meeting

6 February 2003

By Jake Sherman, Secretary

A meeting of the section directors was held on Thursday, Feb. 6, 2003 at 7:00 P.M. at the offices of Herb Ogden. Present were Steve Williams, Barb Griffith, Lynda Hutchins, Sue Thomas, Bob Perkins, Herb Ogden and Jake Sherman.

Secretary's Minutes -- The minutes of the Oct. 1 meeting were approved as submitted.

Trails & Shelters Report -- Herb gave an extensive report covering a number of areas. He noted that as a result of new federal funds becoming available the Forest Service had asked the GMC to come up with ideas for capital improvement projects along the Appalachian Trail.

One possibility might be moving or replacing Clarendon Shelter. It is presently not on federal land and it would be desirable if it were. However, no one is pressuring us to move it at present and in fact it is well maintained. If it were moved, criteria for a new location would include a reliable water source and good distance from any road.

Also, the GMC is planning at some point to build a new shelter between Gov. Clement and Cooper Lodge, possibly with an eye to ultimately removing both.

Tucker-Johnson Shelter, north of Route 4, is not our responsibility but a few years ago had support beams torn out. There is concern it is too close to developments.

Herb will check on the status of the proposed trailhead parking lot on Rte. 4. There was engineering done on a proposed $60,000 plan a couple of years ago but nothing has happened. The site's pretty rough and can get quite muddy, particularly in spring.

The main club agrees with us that a bridge is needed over Brewers Brook on the Bucklin Trail. There might be delay on construction, however, because of handicapped access concerns. It is supposed to be wheelchair-accessible.

There is also a move to put in composting privies at both Minerva Hinchey and Clarendon Shelters.

Except for some blowdowns between Wallingford Gulf and Minerva Hinchey, the trails are in pretty good shape.

Herb recommended we purchase a one-man crosscut saw. Also, inquiries will be made about getting our saws sharpened.

It was suggested that during spring walk-throughs we pay particular attention to possible relocation sites for shelters.

Gov. Clement Shelter -- Barb Griffith reported on her second meeting with the Shrewsbury selectmen and local landowners regarding measures to protect Gov. Clement Shelter.

She noted that while cabin and camp owners along the road "feel very abused" they didn't want the road closed. However, the selectboard is agreeable to having the side of the road near the shelter bouldered to prevent access by full-size vehicles. The state can take care of this but not till late June.

The selectboard also requested that Barb's husband, Atty. Barry Griffith, draft an ordinance banning parking from dawn to dusk along Gov. Clement Road. It is our understanding that once signs are in place the ban can be enforced by the Forest Service. The section has also suggested to the selectboard that there be a sign on the Upper Cold River Road near the intersection with Gov. Clement Road notifying potential parties of the parking ban.

Thanks were extended to both Barb and Barry for pursuing the issue with the selectboard.

Annual Meeting Date -- Several possible dates for the annual meeting were discussed with April 12 finally being selected as our first choice. Also discussed was the need to fill two director positions. We will need a candidate for treasurer as Al Pulling's term will be up and he can't be reelected. Herb is willing to continue as Trails & Shelters Chairman but wants to step down as a director.

Sue Thomas again brought up her difficulty as outings chairperson in getting hike leaders to commit in a timely fashion to particular dates. However, if she doesn't get these dates pinned down in a timely fashion it holds up publication of Smoke & Blazes.

Kit Davidson Property -- Kit would ultimately like to leave his property in Hubbardton, which overlooks the battlefield and has provided the club with many hikes and outings over the years, to the state. But he would like us to maintain the trails and also wants the GMC to hold an easement as a check on the state. Nothing more has been heard recently. Lynda suggested checking with Waterbury to see what they know about it. Sue spoke to Kit recently. He has laid out some additional cross-country ski trails on his property and would like everyone to use them.

Guidance To Outing Leaders --

The section has put together a one-page list of suggestions and recommendations for trip leaders to lead safe and successful hikes. One of these is to assess whether hikers with special needs should undertake a particular hike and, if not, attempt to dissuade them from participation.

Younger Members -- We would like to do things that would attract younger members to the section. Lately we have had in fact a lot of new people on our hikes. It was suggested that this is because there has been a run of easy hikes. It's been found that younger people, particularly with children, do not want anything too intimidating. It was suggested that perhaps we offer two hikes on a Saturday -- one difficult and the other easy -- but we don't have enough people for that.

Section Website -- Deb Weggett has offered to set up a website but needs input from us. Steve suggested we accept her offer and Bob agreed to act as our liaison. It was suggested that there might or ought to be an area for section news and announcements on the main club's website.

GMC Director's Report -- Our new GMC director Lynda Hutchins gave a very extensive report from the last club-wide meeting. Much of the discussion concerned plans for the South Barn, which a few days later was consumed by fire. It was a substantial blow resulting in loss of property, guidebooks, and even some archival material. On the positive side, a new edition of 50 Hikes in Vermont is due out this spring and the Long Trail Protection Program has less to do lately being "a victim of our own success."

Unfortunately, income has been going down and there is a budgetary shortfall of $80,000. Ways are being sought to reduce expenditures, increase funding, and over the next few years attain "sustainability." Lynda would be pleased to relay any questions and concerns from our section at the annual meeting.

Forest Plan Revision -- Sue Thomas reported on a meeting held by the Green Mountain National Forest concerning its revision plan. The meeting was more for the purpose of laying out a timeline than dealing with issues. In 2003 there will be a series of monthly local meetings for the purpose of defining issues, and then in 2004 draft statements will be developed for inclusion in the EIS (Environmental Impact Statement). It's important we be represented as a counter to the logging people and the snowmobile interests.

Rutland County Physical Activity Coalition --

Bob Perkins has been acting as the section liaison to this group which consists of numerous local groups and agencies interested in promoting walking and physical activity. The group has already published a map of suggested walking routes in Rutland City and has appointed a County Walks & Trails Committee on which Bob is serving.

Other than thanking Sue Thomas for the excellent cookies, there was no other business. The next meeting will be the annual meeting on April 12.

Not very original

According to Esther Munroe Swift's Vermont Place-Names there are, in Vermont, no less than eight Bald Hills and eight Bald Mountains. She counts our Mendon summit, a frequent Killington Section outing destination, as a "Hill" but the United States Geological Survey Topographic map rates it as "Mtn."

And in Fairlee there's a Bald Top Hill.

Andrea McQuade and Roma Pulling elected Directors at Killington Section annual meeting

By Barbara Griffith,
Acting Secretary

The annual meeting of the Killington Section of the Green Mountain Club was called to order on 12 April 2003 by President Steve Williams. A warm welcome was extended to Dave Hardy, the Field Supervisor from GMC headquarters in Waterbury and Susan Morgan, the speaker from Vermont Institute of Natural Science (VINS).

President's Report

Steve summarized the Club's involvement with our new shelter, which is named for Churchill Scott and dedicated to the memory of Alice Ferrance. Churchill was President of the Killington Section from 1950-51, Secretary from 1961-82, and Treasurer from 1981-85. For many years he ran the Club, the outings, the finances, and the mail. Churchill was a "heck of a guy" to have done all he did for the Club.

Thanks were given to Erik and Laurel Tobiason for the shelter construction, to Jeff Boswick for the construction of the handicapped accessible composting privy, and to Jerry Parker for the tent platform. A thanks also was given to Deb Weggett for getting the Killington Section web site up and running.

President Steve reported the following outing statistics:

- * Number of outings 39
- * Number of participants 176
- * Fewest per outing 5
- * Most per outing 31

- * Average number per outing 13
- * Sue Thomas attended 30
- * Andrea McQuade attended 28
- * Barbara Griffith attended 25
- * No. attending 20-30 outings 6
- * No. attending 10-19 outings 4
- * No. attending 3-9 outings 29
- * No. attending 2 outings 17
- * No. attending only 1 outing 120
- * % attending 1 or 2 outings 78

Report from Waterbury

Dave Hardy made the following points:

1) Eric and Laurel, who built the beautiful Churchill Scott Shelter, will be constructing a new shelter at Bromley in the fall. In August the materials will be flown in and the shelter will be built in September. The privy will be a handicapped accessible composting privy. Anyone wishing to help out can contact Marge Fish.

2) A new bridge over Brewer's Brook on the Bucklin Trail is on the schedule

Does size really matter?

Half of the population insist that it doesn't; the rest of us worry that maybe it does. The Killington Section today has 182 members of whom 136 live in Vermont. The population of Rutland City is about 17,292. Some sixty years ago in 1940 the numbers were 81 and 17,217. So, are we and the city stagnant; or are we stable? Should we be doing more to increase section membership? If so, what?

It's understandable that the Burlington Section, with a city population of 38,889, has 910 members, but how come the section in Montpelier, population 8,035, has 394 members, and the Ottaquechee Section, in the Upper Valley with no real hometown, has 255? (Of course, on the other hand, the former New York Section, with a base population of many million, had only a few hundred members.)

I'm no believer in the bigger-is-better school. I've often said that if I wanted to live in Chittenden County (or New Jersey, for that matter) I would have moved there. But I think I would feel better about the long-term prospects for the Killington Section if we could attract a larger number of young, active, local folks who would learn to love the Long Trail as we do.

The statistics on our outing attendance, reported by President Steve Williams at the annual meeting and elsewhere in this issue, were an eye-opener for me. Should we be concerned that more than two-thirds of the folks who come on one of our outings never come again and probably never join the club?

Our average hike attendance of thirteen is probably about as many as we would want. Should we schedule more outings? How about different outing types – cycling? kayaking? rock-climbing? bush-whacking? nature-studying? overnight camping? How can we encourage those who show a spark of interest?

Let us know what you think. Letters to the editor, on this or any subject, are always welcome.

Trip Reports

Merck Forest, Rupert

15 February 2003

By Steve & Diana Williams

Having heard from our Rutland transportation coordinator, Sue Thomas, at eight in the morning, that she feared that no-one would turn up as a result of the prevailing temperature, it was a pleasure to find a total of six willing souls to join the leaders, Steve and Diana Williams, at Merck Forest shortly after 10.00 a.m. (Merck Forest is located between Dorset, Vermont and Salem, New York).

Merck Forest has the advantage of a welcome, i.e. warm and hospitable, Visitor Center, which is valuable for orientating participants at the beginning and snacking at the end of an outing. The warmth is provided by a brick fireplace of a special Finnish Design that provides impressive heat storage with a high-energy efficiency. For those technically minded the Visitor Center also contains the batteries for storing power from the Trust's solar panels and wind turbine, plus the inverter to provide the 110 volts a.c. used on the Trust property.

The selected route was a circular one of some 3 ½ miles and coming within a few hundred feet of the summit of Spruce Peak. The intermittent views, north, west and south before reaching the turn-off to Spruce Peak, provided a good overview of the terrain of the 3000 acre Merck Forest Trust property, and of the southeastern Adirondacks. The route was partly on old farm/logging trails, easy to follow, and partly on hiking trails, somewhat less easy to follow in view of the recent snow. Snowshoes were certainly an advantage, particularly on the hiking trail portion.

The leaders had attempted the side trail to Spruce Peak the previous week, but in light of its steepness and absence of markers beyond the starting point, had deferred the ascent for more adventurous spirits, who may indeed have been included in the party. However, at that juncture, Sue gave the party the benefit of her experience, namely that there is no view from the summit meriting the attempt. This having been said, interest in the peak diminished, and the party continued on Gallup Road, first east, with views over towards the Mettawee valley, then north and west and back to the starting point. The Visitor Center was then the venue for lunch, topped off by Diana's hot chocolate and brownies.

For the record, the temperature on arriving at, and finally leaving, the Visitor Center was a consistent minus nine.

Brewers Brook Bridge Site And Back

9 March 2003

By Herb Ogden

Thirteen people and two dogs showed up for this easy Sunday afternoon outing. There had been rain and snow in Shrewsbury earlier in the day, but nothing had fallen along the Wheelerville Road and the driving was easy except a bit muddy. From Brewers Corners, we headed up the Bucklin Trail, following snowmobile tracks to near the bridge about 1,000 feet up the trail. From there to the next brook crossing, the crusty snowshoe and ski tracks were hard enough so several folks didn't bother to put on their snowshoes. This was a far cry from a few weeks ago, when the snowshoe tracks ended soon after the bridge and all I found was a very old single ski track in deep snow from there on up. Unfortunately, the solid track also caused one of the dogs to lose a toenail, so Pat and Omar headed home shortly before the rest of us climbed the hill above the upper crossing.

The crossing had a solid looking snow bridge, but we stayed on the north side of the brook and discussed the plan for a new bridge. Then we had a moment of silence to honor Churchill Scott, whose funeral was the day before. Churchill had probably passed this place over a hundred times in his long life of service to the Killington Section.

We opted for some variety on the way back, and crossed Brewers Brook at the site of a logging road bridge that existed till about ten years ago. Scrambling up the south bank, we followed the logging road to its junction with the old Killington Stage Road, making quite a racket crunching along the crusty track. The Stage Road was a snowmobile superhighway at this point. I wished I'd had my Flexible Flyer! Very soon, we were back at Brewers Corners.

Few realize it now, but Brewers Corners is the site of a manmade stream alteration. As the 1892 USGS Rutland Quadrangle shows, Brewers Brook used to hit the Wheelerville Road near Brewers Corners and then flow south into Eddy Brook. When the City of Rutland developed the watershed, it diverted Brewers Brook to flow north, where its water winds up in the reservoir.

Bald Mountain, Mendon

By Dale Christie

The weather was just what everyone had hoped for—just what the doctor ordered. . Although my doctor probably wouldn't have approved of my participation because I had been sick for the previous week and had not yet fully recovered. But I was not going to miss one of my favorite mountains. . Also, I was fortunate to have an experienced and knowledgeable co-leader in Joanna Graves. I knew that if I had a lapse in judgment due to my medication, I could count on her to keep the group from getting lost.

There was quite a range in the ages among the ten hikers. The youngest member was about 10 and the eldest—we'll be kind with this estimate and say at least 60. This age difference led to quite the contrast in conversations. Some doubt about the success of the hike was spreading early. This was because of a story about a previous GMC hike at Bald Mountain that involved a hiker getting lost and separated from the group. Thankfully no one got lost this time.

Thanks to the good weather, there was no rush to finish the hike. There was plenty of sun and snack, and the unique mountain offered us many beautiful vistas from different locations on the trail. With the clear skies, the view was endless and even the moon paid us a daytime visit. Despite the doubt about a lack of snow as the winter season neared its end, there was plenty of snow to walk on. There was even enough snow for a nice snowman at the Rutland Vista. After that the extra snow allowed for a few snowballs to be exchanged among the hikers. There was plenty of fun as the snowballs flew. Even though some of the folks had previously visited Bald Mountain, it was enjoyed by all.

Catamount Trail, Mendon

22 March 2003

By Andrea McQuade

Six club members set out on snowshoes from the trailhead below Pico, headed for Brewers Corners. The snow was wet, heavy, and deep in many places along the trail, except where the brooks and streams were starting to open up. The weather was overcast with fog and rain, obscuring some nice views.

Along the way we saw signs of woodpeckers, moose, ruffed grouse, and a tiny bird's nest balanced in the branches of a tree. A roll of film dropped on the trail produced only blank pictures, rather than an interesting story. To avoid more steep climbing, we took a side trail, which led us to the middle of the Wheelerville Road. We were content, at that point, to remove our snowshoes and walk up the road to our cars.

Saltash Mountain (almost)

30 March 2003

By Mark & Connie Youngstrom

Fifty degrees, a heavy gray sky, gusting wind and rain in the forecast; it was a typical early spring day. Thus 11 adventurers set out to bushwhack up Saltash Mountain. Perhaps climbed almost 250 years ago by planners of the military road from Fort Number 4 to Ticonderoga, Saltash's 3286-foot peak sits just over Shrewsbury's east border with Plymouth, forming a significant landmass between Eastham and the Route 100 valley.

Our group started from Bailey Road, snowshoeing along an old road that leads to the abandoned site of one of largest sugaring operations in the state. We then crossed a snowmobile trail. Mark took a compass bearing, pointed up the hill, and the procession proceeded up the flank of Saltash. Connie led the way, followed by Jerry Parker. Up through the remains of the old sugarbush, the leaders, ignoring the careful directions offered from the rear, continued to list to port, and crossed a beautiful stream bridged with snow. The woods were beautiful and there was significant snow depth. Upward we continued, following our leaders.

A long rock outcropping appeared to the north and we shoed along its base. Jerry thought he saw a good spot for a bear den. Sure enough, 20 feet toward the base were fresh bear prints in the snow. It must have just emerged from its winter's nap. Our two leaders then continued upward, until there was no higher to go. A small open area on top offered beautiful views, including a nice view of Saltash peak just to the south! Sure enough, those breakfast doughnuts had settled a bit too heavily in their left legs, causing our leaders to veer too far north, and we were on the summit of 3060-foot Bear Mountain looking at a pretty, gladed saddle between us and Saltash. Oh well, it was a first time up Bear for everyone, a very nice summit with fresh bear tracks along the way, so there were no disappointments. Lunch was consumed with a lot of chuckling.

With rain threatening, we slid down quickly on our snowshoes, stopping for a group photo on a large maple branch, which dipped to the ground like a giant wooden swing. Just as we got to our cars, the clouds let loose and it started to pour. Good timing.

A great day. We recommend Bear Mountain for a nice day hike (maybe you'll end up on Saltash).

Bristol Bushwhack

27 April 2003

By Barbara Griffith

Jerry Parker lead our party of 6 out to find the crash site of an Army Air Force plane that went down during World War II. Our weather didn't look very promising as it was dark and drizzly, but we believed the weather report of clearing, which it eventually did.

The story goes that a five-plane squadron left Burlington for Plattsburg AFB. One plane was delayed to take on a passenger that had blood poisoning, and left later than the other four. That plane ran into inclement weather and ended up crashing into the Bristol Cliffs Wilderness area. It was two weeks before the remains of the men and plane were discovered.

We "bushwhacked" (does that mean that the person behind you gets whacked by the bush that you release?) up to a vernal pool where we found frogs eggs and other pool activities. There were several streams to cross and most made it over them without getting wet. Onward - or I should say downward - to a spectacular waterfall cascading down the cliff. With the water so high it was breath taking.

Then upward to the cliffs for an overlook where we decided to have lunch. Partway through we observed four turkey vultures whipping by seeming to pursue a hawk. Suddenly we were interrupted by a raptor that didn't like our presence. Believing that we had unknowingly come near a nesting site we packed up and quickly departed the area. Upward some more to another cliff area where we once again came near a raven's nest dangling on the cliffs. Again these birds made it known we were not welcome and we quickly departed.

We bushwhacked some more up and across the slope coming out west of North Pond. Jerry located the site of the plane crash south of North Pond. It was scattered over quite a large area. Several pictures were taken to capture the "moment" and Barry took a GPS reading to be able to find the spot easily next time.

Down the slope where Jerry retrieved belongings to carry all the way back down. We all were glad that we had decided to ignore the morning weather. It turned into a beautiful day and quite an adventure.

Flowers in bloom: the first- yellow and white violets, colts foot, Trilliums, Spring Beauties Animal signs: Moose, deer and rabbit droppings. Several "Bear" trees with scratch and bite marks. Apparently bear prefer red pine trees. Also bear hair clinging in the bark and sap of the trees. Pileated Woodpecker trees, coyote scat. A red eft in the trail, wood frog eggs and the first garter snake of the year!

Mount Zion, Hubbardton

3 May 2003

By John Hale

Mount Zion in Hubbardton comes in two parts, Major and Minor, but there are also the Japanese Garden, the Waterfall, and Moot Point. We saw them all on Saturday, May 3rd.

We were only nine, which was a little surprising because the weather was perfect—in the 50's, windy, with full sun; and we had a personal guide in Kit Davidson himself, the property's owner.

We started off going down and then up through open meadows just greening with the new hay crop. Then into the woods following the old stone wall and then the creek, which was running high because of the recent rains, to the Waterfall. There are actually a couple of really significant falls of water of about 30 feet down into a rock gorge.

Some of us got wet feet re-crossing the creek, it being too early in the season for the stepping stones to have been replaced following the winter wash out. But we were back in the sun and on our way up through the meadow to the Japanese Garden.

This is a very peaceful place centered on a huge boulder around which Kit has created a pool and from the top of which water falls down the face into the pool. Ladders give access to other large boulders and there are Adirondack chairs all over the place to facilitate quiet meditation.

We next scrambled up the escarpment which on one end is Zion Minor and Moot Point and the other is Zion Major. Did I mention that at no time, except when you are in the woods at the Waterfall, is there ever a place without a fantastic, long distance view. We ate lunch on Z. Minor and got drowsy in the sun before continuing on to Moot Point. (You just have to climb to a place called Moot Point at least once in your life.)

Zion Major is at the north end of the escarpment and there is a choice of how to get there—the baby trail or the really-really-difficult, not-suitable-for-some trail. We all agreed to take the latter at Sue and Andrea's encouragement. Let's just say that it was challenging and we all felt a strong sense of accomplishment when we emerged at the top of Z. Major. Here the view is north across the Hubbardton Battlefield with the Adirondacks in the distance, Whiteface being clearly visible on this clear, clear day.

Down the Mickie Trail back to the cars. What a day!

Buck Mt. from the West

25 April 2003

By Barbara Griffith

It was a sunny Friday beaoning to us to "get out and enjoy a fine Spring Day". After a winter of hiking in inclement weather, we decided to take advantage of the situation. We were a party of three, leaving obligations and work behind. The "Green Trails" still had snow cover; however the close Adirondacks appeared to be clear and dry.

The trailhead for Buck Mt. was easy to find, well marked, and had a good-sized parking lot. The trail up begins along an abandoned carriage roadway with a rock base built into the hillside. At 1.5 miles of easy climb we crossed a brook with a small waterfall on the left. We saw remnants of stonewalls and were delighted to find small yellow violets in bloom.

At this point the climbing began with switchbacks. Only once did we need to take time to "find the trail". At about three miles we reached an outcrop with a view of Crossett Pond to the southeast, and Lake George to the West. We decided to make this our goal and dug in for lunch and full sun. The views were spectacular of the Greens, Taconics and Adirondacks.

Buck Mt is a 2334-foot summit. Our climb was probably closer to 2000 feet. The trip up took about two hours; the trip down, a little over an hour. Overall we hiked approximately six miles. The trail was in good condition. We would rate this a moderate hike and recommend it to all.

Lowe's Bald Spot, NH

3 May 2003

By Barbara Griffith

We were in North Conway, NH for a weekend Conference and of course had to get a hike in during our "free time". We arrived at the Appalachian Mountain Club's Pinkham Notch parking lot at 2 PM to find it full, but managed to eek out a spot in the overflow lot. The line of snow boarders and skiers up the Tuckerman Ravine trail was long and that trail well traveled. We chose an alternate route encountering only five or six people in the next three hours.

The trail followed the "Old Jackson Road" rising steeply only at two inclines. Otherwise the ascent was gradual. We crossed several streams, climbed steadily up rock steps, leveled off and heard traffic on the Mt. Washington auto road (not opened to the top yet due to snow.) After crossing the auto road we followed the Madison Gulf Trail to a short climb to Lowe's Bald Spot, about two miles from, and 1000 feet above our starting point.

The views were stupendous. Looking north we would see Mount Adams and Mount Madison. To the west is the headwall of Huntington Ravine topped by Nelson Crag and the cone of Mount Washington. The weather was perfect; the mountains breathe taking. The "Whites" are so different than the "Greens" that we are accustomed to. (Sigh—that Saturday morn a few exchange students were taken to see the "Old Man in the Mountain" only to find it gone—how sad.)

Someone will have to decide which ones are worth trying to restore. A lot had been moved out of the barn. The GMC was underinsured by 2/3. There is, or will be, a Building Committee to update the headquarters plan. This will be a yearlong process.

Secretary's Minutes

The minutes of the 2002 Annual Meeting, which were printed in the May 2002 Smoke & Blazes, were approved.

Treasurer's Report

Treasurer Al Pulling's report of the General Fund and the Kirk Trail Maintenance Fund were passed out to members and approved (see attached report).

Trails & Shelters Report

Herb Ogden reported the following:

1) Governor Clement Shelter: We are still working with the Shrewsbury

Selectboard to try to come up with a solution to the vandalism and partying. A thanks was given to Barry Griffith for his work on this situation. Suggestions have been to post "No Parking" signs, and to put boulders along the road.

2) Bucklin Trail Bridge: Bridge design is underway. Jerry Parker and Mark Youngstrom have advised using aluminum girders at this site.

3) Sector Checker Program. A Sector Checker's obligation is to check the trail and report back to Herb. We still need checkers for the Long Trail from Gov. Clement to Cooper, and for the Killington Spur Trail

4) Tools: We now have a new crosscut saw thanks to Waterbury.

5) Blazing and Signage: We need to reblaze the trail from Lower Cold River Road to Gov. Clement, and supply better signs at Brewers Corner and Clarendon Shelter

Editor's Report

Bob Perkins extended a Thank You for all the hike reports submitted for Smoke & Blazes. He suggested that if hike leaders don't want to write a report they might find someone else on that hike who would do it. If there are any other interests that members have that they wish to see in the paper let him know. We need to get the hike schedule in May for the June-August season. Leaders: PLEASE let Sue Thomas know of your plans.

Historian's Report

Bob Perkins asked folks to submit photos; the more the better. He would also like any other memorabilia that people have. We have an agreement with the Rutland Historical Society. They are archiving the Killington Section data and materials.

Outings Committee Report

Sue Thomas asked hike leaders to get their hikes in to her as soon as possible

Sue is compiling a memorial book to give to Churchill Scott's wife, Virginia. A request went out to members to write about their experiences with Churchill. Letters are still coming in. The book is here for this meeting.

GMC Director's Report

Lynda Hutchins, who is our representative on the statewide GMC Board of Directors, presented an extensive report on its recent meeting. Most of the items covered were of statewide interest and not of special import to our section.

The annual meeting of the statewide club will be at the Middlebury Snow Bowl on June 13-15

Elections

Steve Williams offered a slate of three for election to three-year terms as Killington Section Directors. The nominees were Andrea McQuade, Roma Pulling, and Sue Thomas. There being no nominations from the floor, these three were declared elected.

The Director's then met and elected the following officers for the coming year:

President	Steve Williams
Vice President.....	Barbara Griffith
Secretary	Jake Sherman
Treasurer.....	Roma Pulling
GMC Director.....	Lynda Hutchins

Program

Following the meeting there was a program presented by geology major Susan Morgan from VINS. The topic of the evening was A Long View of the Long Trail: Vermont's Natural History in a Nutshell. Susan told us how Vermont's geologic history has shaped the natural and human history of the state.

Killington Section directors hold routine meeting

By Jake Sherman, Secretary

A meeting of Killington Section directors was held on Thursday, 10 July 2003, at 7:00 P.M. at the offices of Herb Ogden in Rutland. Present were Directors Steve Williams, Barb Griffith, Sue Thomas, Bob Perkins, Roma Pulling, Andrea McQuade, Connie Youngstrom, Bill Robichaud, and Jake Sherman; Trails and Shelters Chair Herb Ogden; and guests Mark Youngstrom and Alfred Pulling.

SECRETARY'S MINUTES -- The minutes of the Feb. 6, 2003, board meeting, which have already been printed in Smoke & Blazes, were approved as submitted.

TREASURER'S REPORT - The treasurer's report was submitted by new treasurer Roma Pulling. There is at present $1,418.34 in the savings account, $1,651.60 in the checking account and $1,051.73 in the Kirk Savings Fund. Kirk funds also include three certificates of deposit totaling about $15,700.

TRAILS & SHELTERS REPORT -- The main item in Herb's report was the new bridge to be erected over Brewer's Brook on the Bucklin Trail. Construction of the bridge abutments is being done between July 14 and July 25 by the Green Mountain Volunteer Group under the auspices of the state forest service. We hope to complete the bridge this fall. The new span will be paid for by our section. A motion was unanimously approved to authorize the Trails & Shelters Committee to expend up to $4,000 from the Kirk Fund to build the bridge. Prior to the motion there was much discussion of the nature of the abutments on each bank, the nature of materials to be used in the construction process, and how they might be transported to the site. It is anticipated that a 25-foot span will need to be crossed once the abutments are in place. Every attempt will be made to minimize damage to greenery.

Youth Conservation Corps -- Two groups of the Youth Conservation Corps have been working in our section. The first is on the LT in the area of Snowden Peak working south from where they left off last year. The second is working on the Canty Trail, which ascends Blue Ridge Mountain from the Old Turnpike Road in Mendon. This group was encountered by Sue Thomas several weeks ago and told her they expected to be there for a month so they should be almost finished at this point. They had flagged numerous waterbars. Some of their work may end up being bypassed if the trail is rerouted but they understand this.

Cooper Lodge -- Herb has talked to the new adopter of Cooper Lodge who is Peter Dekker of Greenfield, NH. Peter has been hiking in our section for over 30 years. He thought putting up shutters at Cooper would be futile, as they would just be torn down again. He felt the spring was running just about normal and also felt better signage going north was needed to point out the LT. It was also noted that a sign for Cooper that used to exist lower down on the Bucklin is no longer there.

Tucker-Johnson Shelter -- The shelter was checked recently by Herb and Andrea. The entire shelter is leaning backward. Herb felt the problem could be dealt with by jacking up the structure and repairing the back sill.

Gov. Clement Shelter -- The door to the privy was found in the woods and reinstalled by Jerry Parker. It was not burned as had been thought.

Miscellaneous -- The Trail Checker program is going well. Every part of our section is covered. Jerry Parker is going to build a new privy for Pico Shelter. The walk-throughs went well though attendance on the second one was a little thin. Everything that was needed got done. A wooden sign near the Churchill Scott Shelter notifying that it is located on Rutland city watershed is being gnawed, chewed and literally eaten. Perhaps it is because the varnish used had tea in it. This will need to be repaired, as Herb is due to organize a site visit to

From the EditorGovernor in jeopardy

The current campaign to recall California Governor Gray Davis is evocative of a situation right here in Vermont. No; as far as I know, Governor Jim Douglas is secure in his position. But our Governor Clement Shelter on the Long Trail in Shrewsbury is not.

The shelter, built in 1929 and named for Rutlander Percival W. Clement, Vermont governor 1919-1921, is, I believe, the oldest Long Trail shelter still in use. The unique stone structure was designed by Wallingford architect Paul W. Thayer who later also designed the former Long Trail Lodge at Sherburne Pass.

Unfortunately, in recent years Gov. Clement Shelter has come under attack by a small number of selfish, thoughtless, and sometimes-malicious people who choose to party there, usually with alcohol and occasionally with firearms. Several through-hikers have been so intimidated that they felt it necessary, even in the middle of the night, to hike on to the next shelter. The situation has become so serious that Gov. Clement is the only Long Trail shelter, and perhaps the only shelter on the entire Appalachian Trail that hikers are advised to avoid.

The Green Mountain Club has tried, and continues to try, to find a solution to this complicated situation. The shelter is on public land and the road that leads to it is a public town road. The location is not on any frequent law enforcement beat. In fact, some of the rowdy behavior may not be illegal. Posting of signs, and requesting additional attention from the sheriff have been tried. Gating the access road has been considered. Current plans call for placing boulders to discourage vehicles from leaving the road, and possibly, with the cooperation of the Shrewsbury selectboard, a new no-parking ordinance.

If all of these measures fail to solve the problem the Club will have to seriously consider destroying the historic building and erecting a new shelter a couple of miles to the north away from the road.

What a shame that would be.

The Nature Conservancy maintains the trails at Shaw Mountain in Benson. The early flowers were in bloom. Spectacularly on display were the White Trilliums on the hill across the road. Their blossoms, creating such a thick blanket of white ground cover, made it appear that it had snowed the night before.

In bloom were wild ginger, bellwort, wild oats, trout lily, yellow violets, purple violets, purple spur violets, white violets, white trillium, Dutchman's breeches, miterwort (Bishop's cap), wild columbine, Canada mayflower, wild sarsaparilla, Solomon's seal, burdock, bloodroot, meadow rue, and sedge. There were probably more, but that was what we identified. Not to mention the garter snake basking on a sunny rock that Barbara pointed out to everyone.

Keep this hike in mind for early next spring if you missed this year's event

Beulah Hill, Bridgewater

18 May 2003

By Roma Pulling

In 1853 Daniel Robinson purchased 142 acres of farmland in Bridgewater Chateaugay on what later became known to his descendants as Beulah Hill. His family consisted of his second wife, Beulah Dimick, and three children. Daniel and Beulah were my great grandparents.

On hike day we met five people at the park and drove with three cars to West Bridgewater, where we picked up another hiker. We took two cars to Chateaugay and left one. The remaining two cars proceeded up the Gold Coast Road as far as possible, where we met my cousin Otis Robinson, another Daniel descendant, and the current owner of Beulah Hill. The hike north to the farm was easy with very little uphill but many muddy spots. Otis was able to point out several cellar holes, and we explored the Kellogg-Bassett Cemetery, with gravestones dated from 1813 to 1865 but with many fieldstone markers.

We stopped to admire wildflowers along the way, including dogtooth violets, blue violets, red trilliums, and a few yellow violets. We were passed on the way by two 4-wheel-drive vehicles, with Otis' daughter and family and some friends on their way to the farm to enjoy a hot dog roast. At the farm we were impressed with the way Otis has kept the fields mowed in order to keep them from growing up to brush. He pointed out the original location of the farmhouse, and we explored the foundations of the house and barns.

Our return to the spotted car was by a short but very steep section of road built by Daniel to give him easier access to Bridgewater Center, where he had business interests. This was a great way for me to connect to my roots, and I hope it was enjoyable to others.

Equinox Mists and Morels

24 May 2003

By Steve and Diana Williams

The Equinox Preservation Trust (EPT) is an approximately one thousand-acre parcel of land on the slopes of Mount Equinox in Manchester Village. It is managed on behalf of the owners of the Equinox Hotel by The Vermont Institute of Natural Sciences (VINS). The route followed was suggested by Susan Morgan, the director of the VINS Manchester office, who was the guest speaker at the club's recent annual meeting.

After a number of phone calls along the lines of "Are you really proposing to go with the rain predicted?" and the response "Yes, if it is anything less than a major downpour", it was gratifying to find ten others arrive to join the leaders. As it happened, rain was not continuous, and was never heavy, but did give the woods an invigorating freshness. Thanks are given to Ray Catozzi for leading the Rutland participants to the trailhead.

The route chosen was a circular one of some three and a half miles, with stops at two overlooks over the Battenkill valley: Robin's Lookout and Deer Knoll. During the course of lunch in a moderate drizzle at the latter, the leaders were challenged to produce a ghost or historical story to match those produced at other recent outings. At that time a twisting vertical mist was seen to be rising from an elevation beneath the knoll; some speculated that it was the spirit of Robert Todd Lincoln keeping an eye on Hildene. Besides this "mini" mist, there was significant cloud cover on the ridges on both sides of the valley. Though frequent brighter spots suggested the imminent appearance of the sun, this remained illusion rather than reality. As a small piece of history, "Mount Equinox" was so named because the first recorded ascent was made on the vernal equinox.

The route descended a steep pitch with some well-constructed steps and then took the party round the Equinox Pond. What appeared to be a fisherman's meeting was being held in the hotel's building at the pond. Outside, an instructor, whose attire suggested a female Indiana

Jones, was giving practical instruction.

The relatively flat trail back to the hotel was marked by the finding of morels, a cylindrical mushroom, by Jerry Parker who pointed them out to Dale Cobb, a visitor for the hike from Bennington. Dale explained how to distinguish an edible morel from its poisonous cousin, the false morel. Jerry had previously been concerned about this very point and, after receiving Dale's explanation, took one home for experimental purposes. As long as we see Jerry again we will know that we have at least one part of the morel story straight.

Cardigan Mountain, NH

31 May 2003

By Sue Thomas

I remember writing a hike report back in the mid-eighties about a particularly black-fly-infested outing entitled "They Were the Size of Crows!" Well, here comes the sequel! Even the usually windy summit provided little relief from the onslaught, though if you're going to be devoured by insects, I suppose you might as well have a nice view to enjoy as well.

Cardigan has one of the few remaining manned fire towers and unobstructed views of the Green Mountains and the Presidential Range. We eat lunch (and were lunch) beside an interesting collection of historical graffiti carved into the rock and dating back to the mid-1800s. As we descended no one dared lag behind or stop to rest for fear of being carried off – after all, they were the size of crows!

P.S. On the way home we stopped at Gillingham's store in Woodstock and stocked up on bug spray – too little, too late.

Bird Mountain Churchill Scott Shelter

By Ray Catozzi

Why was the Bird Mountain hike cancelled? A week before the scheduled hike I went up to the north peak looking for the trail that heads south up the ridge to the south peak, known as Castle Peak. I looked for it a year ago and couldn't find it. This time all I could find was a mess of treetops dumped all over the ridgeline – not even a glimpse of the trail. A logging operation! They couldn't care less about hiking trails that they cover up.

So I announced at our Main Street meeting place that Bald Mountain was cancelled but I told our small group about the history of the ten-foot tall Masonic monument that used to be there. Instead, we were going to hike up the new Long Trail south of Route 4 and visit the new Churchill Scott Shelter that was erected just last summer. A nice 2.5-mile hike up to the shelter, a nice lunch break, and a 2.5-mile walk back down to our cars. A very enjoyable hike.

I don't know if we will ever get back up to Castle Peak

Otter Creek Canoe/Kayak

29 June 2003

By Linda Hutchins

It was a fine, albeit hot and humid, summer day in June when the group of 11 enthusiastic seafarers sallied forth from the park meeting place to explore the mighty Otter Creek. Quickly it became apparent this was no ordinary GMC adventure.

After hasty communication and a few creative turns en route (prompted by an unseemly red light in downtown Rutland), the leader soon became estranged from the group of "followers". She made the reasonable (and brilliant, she asserts) decision to meet up with the rest of her party at the final destination, the historic covered bridge of Florence. Unfortunately, the rest of the group underestimated her ingenious foresight, and after a few unsuccessful and disheartening attempts at area search parties, made their way to the drop-off point (alas, the very same covered bridge of Florence). The party was thus happily reunited, and undaunted, traveled to the falls of Proctor and made ready to set sail.

Many obstacles awaited the group in their pursuit of adventure over the six-mile stretch of coursing waterway. Several unanticipated blowdowns and a half dozen unfortunate log jams prompted creative bank scaling, mud wrestling with the valiant vessels over vigorous terrain, untangling snags in branches swept up in the vicious current, and an encounter with a dismembered fawn who had lost out in a snafu with a mowing machine. But these minor impediments were not enough to discourage this group of seasoned adventurers, and only solidified their resolve to navigate to the famed Florence bridge.

A few hours later, the group, a tad harried but all physically intact (no mental anguish has been reported to date), arrived safely at the fabled covered bridge. It was widely agreed that the ducklings, hawk, turkey vultures, and good company were just compensation for what some considered a harrowing experience.

With promises of new members to rejoin the group on its next water excursion, the daring crowd disbanded and traipsed home (though rumor has it that some rehabilitated in the local pub).

Mt. Moosalamoo, Salisbury

5 July 2003

Joint hike with Breadloaf Section

By Gordon & Helen Cawood

Eleven of us took the Keewaydin Trail from the Campground up to the Oak Ridge Trail. The Keewaydin Trail on the east side of the mountain is seldom used and poorly maintained. The footpath was overgrown and barely visible in places. Fortunately, others in the party were astute in finding blue blazes and kept the leader on the straight and narrow. After the junction, we continued on the Oak Ridge trail to the north to the rock ledge viewpoint eastward where we enjoyed lunch and the company of some flying insects. Further north on the Oak Ridge Trail we came to the Moosalamoo Trail, providing an easy descent to the campground parking area.

After the hike, some of us motored to Voter Brook overlook and found that there really are views to behold.

Bridgewater Gold Mines

12 July 2003

By Herb Ogden

Because the Rutland Herald ran a big article on the Plymouth and Bridgewater gold mines the week before this outing, I was afraid we'd have too many people. Luckily, however, the group topped out at 19, a manageable number in the fairly easy terrain north of the Dailey Hollow Road. We did consolidate passengers into just four cars in Bridgewater Corners, though, because there is no parking area at the trailhead, just a wide shoulder that is not all that long.

From the Dailey Hollow Road, we followed an old road north along the east side of a pretty little brook, till we reached a four corners. The road west leads across the brook to a formerly farmed area. We took the road east, immediately passing an old house foundation. This appears to have been the W. Baker place on the 1868 map of Bridgewater and the 1869 Beers Atlas of Windsor County. Going straight ahead, we soon passed the foundation of the Baker barn and then followed a lane several hundred feet, passed an old well, then left the lane to go downhill to the entrance of the mine. The place where one leaves the lane is far from obvious. The lane eventually leads to the next road east on the 1868 map, which the 1869 atlas no longer shows.

Most everyone had brought flashlights and explored the several hundred foot horizontal bore. It was damp and cool, and its winter denizens, the bats, were gone. If anyone found any gold, they didn't tell me.

We took a group photo on the tailings pile at the shaft entrance and retraced our steps till we came to a fork. The right turn leads to a huge old three-sided foundation. I think the late W. Churchill Scott told me he'd heard it was a boardinghouse for the mineworkers. During the lunch break, some folks found interesting scraps of metal.

Heading downhill from the supposed boardinghouse, we soon passed a decaying little shed, the last standing remnant of the Baker place. I suppose the house was still standing in 1911, because the 1911 U.S. Geological Survey Woodstock quadrangle shows it at the end of a primitive road. It shows neither the boardinghouse nor the mine, however. In fact, no map I've found clearly shows the mine, though the 1869 atlas does show an unlocated "Hunt & Washburn" item in the general area.

From here almost to the next mine, the old road up the brook was pretty overgrown, though someone did clear it after the ice storm of the late 1990s. When a road that comes up from the boardinghouse joined it, the walking was much easier. Soon we were at the height of land and ready to look for the Mt. Hope Gold Mines, which show on the 1868 map and the 1869 atlas. A bushwhack of maybe 150 feet west took us to a gaping water-filled pit of considerable circumference and unknown depth. Nearby were other signs of digging. Backtracking to the old road, we soon came to the Pioneer Mine, also shown on both of the old maps. It is a big open pit mine with no obvious shaft, hidden from the road by a tall pile of tailings.

After leaving our last mine, we passed a little cellar hole just east of the road, and then descended gradually past the remains of a farm that shows on none of the maps. Presumably it had fallen down by 1868. It was starting to sprinkle when we crossed the next brook, so we forwent a visit to the J. Bugbee (1868 & 1869) cellar hole at the end of the road and passed up the short horizontal shaft mine that lies southeast of it and east of the brook. The next old farm was the E. P. Perkins place on the 1868 map. The 1911 map still shows it and the Bugbee place. Unfortunately, logging in the last year has filled up some of the foundation with slash. We took a photo of Bob Perkins with the "Perkins Place" road sign that someone had brought up there, then descended past one more cellar hole not clearly shown on any map, came out on the Dailey Hollow Road, and followed it back to the cars, passing a strange semicircular stone wall or foundation along the way.

Some of us took the scenic way home, past the old schoolhouse at the end of the Dailey Hollow Road, south to the Bridgewater Hill cemetery, and then steeply down to Route 4.

Anyone who is interested in the Bridgewater mines might want to read Vermont Mines and Mineral Localities, by Philip Morrill and Robert C. Chaffee, published by the Dartmouth College Museum in 1964. It mentions a "Carbeneau" mine near the Pioneer Mine. Perhaps that was the horizontal shaft we explored.

Mount Abraham

By Sue Thomas

Our Mount Abraham trek got off to an uncertain start when we discovered bridge construction in Lincoln, which detoured us hither and yon. The detour route did provide us with a beautiful view of our target though it was viewed with trepidation by some who thought it looked awfully big from that angle. One of the cars thought so too, and began to smoke alarmingly on the way up to Lincoln Gap. But all the hikers made the climb to the summit in much better shape – if not easily, at least cheerfully.

The summit affords a good view of Lake Champlain and the Adirondacks and, at 4,006 feet, is one of only three alpine tundra environments in the state. Our GMC caretaker answers questions and keeps watch to be sure no one treads on the fragile tundra plants. All 12 hikers and Shannon the dog managed to get back down the rocks in one piece, and luckily the car was feeling much better after its rest. Ever the detour seemed shorter on the way home, and we enjoyed the signs that reassuringly pointed the way to "Lincoln Center" along the dirt roads – too bad we had binoculars instead of opera glasses!

Catamount Trail, Shrewsbury to Mendon

26 July 2003

By Barry Griffith

The venerable Long Trail, a footpath in the wilderness from the Massachusetts border to Canada, is well known to all of us. The newer, parallel Catamount Trail was more recently marked off to afford cross-country skiers a similar path. This trek was originally scheduled for last winter, but inclement weather intervened, converting it to a summer hike.

As often happens, the initial decisions concerned the spotting of vehicles to accommodate our one canine and 16 human hikers. The majority of us headed to Shrewsbury, where we parked and walked in the town highway to Gov. Clement Shelter. We discussed the easy vehicular access to the site, and proposed "no parking" regulations that might be enacted to discourage use of the site as a "party" site for non-hikers. We also chatted with through-hikers, several of whom had started this spring in Georgia and were en route to Mt. Kahtadin.

After our "spotters" joined us, we headed south on the LT a short distance to its intersection with the so-called Poczubut Road, meeting the Catamount Trail and following it upward and westward. We enjoyed views of Mendon Peak, Little Killington and Shrewsbury Peak from north to east along the way. We passed the abandoned Poczubut Camp, stopping for lunch in the notch between Mendon Peak (to the north) and Robinson Hill (to the south).

After that it was downhill, continuing to the west and then turning to the north, with a nice view of Pico Peak on the way. We ended up at Brewers Corner, and our awaiting vehicles.

This route is not shown in GMC Guidebooks, but it is an access road, which is well maintained by VAST, and the State through the Calvin Coolidge State Forest, as depicted in the Catamount Trail guidebook. Check it out!

New Lost Pond Shelter

3 August 2003

By Roma Pulling

The old Lost Pond Shelter had been my destination several times starting in 1978, and a friend and I stayed there overnight several years ago. That structure was built on Cape Cod in 1965 by Louis Stare Jr., who then had it delivered in sections to Forest Road 10 by truck. When I read about a new shelter at the site I knew I had to visit again.

Six people met us at the park on Sunday morning, and we were off for Mt. Tabor in two cars. We drove to the end of Forest Road 30, where there is ample parking, and walked more than two miles, partly through Wilderness area, to the trail's intersection with the Long Trail. The shelter is slightly north of that point on the Long Trail. We met a hiker there who left shortly after our arrival. Finding comfortable rocks and logs, we ate our lunch.

Decision time! While some of us walked back to the cars, those who desired could choose to hike north by way of the Long Trail 2.7 miles to Big Branch parking lot, where we would pick them up. Five people chose that route. We picked them up in advance of a very heavy shower and delivered them safely back to Rutland.

Note for those who knew about Alfred leaving his glasses at the shelter:

What with other commitments and rainy weather, it was six days before we were able to walk back.

The glasses were there! What are the chances that this would happen anywhere else? An unknown person took them inside the shelter and stored them high and dry. This goes to prove a long-held theory of mine--that hikers are nice people!

Spruce Peak / Prospect Rock

9 August 2003

By Steve Williams

After a drive south on Route 7 from Rutland, the party assembled at the AT/LT trailhead on Routes 11 and 30 about a mile west of the Bromley ski area. Given the muggy weather of the previous week and the day's forecast of "cloudy, with some sunny patches but also the likelihood of showers and thunderstorms" the turnout of seven was not bad. The route was south on the AT/LT, 2.4 miles to Spruce Peak and a further 2.5 miles to Prospect Rock with modest undulations all the way. Our historians Barbara and Barry Griffith observed two features shortly after the start of the hike, a cellar hole and, not far away, a cast iron plate which appeared to indicate the one time presence of a charcoal kiln, presumably with some connection between the two.

Spruce Peak, reached by a 300-foot spur from the main trail, is a rock pile reminiscent of the Killington Peak, with good views northwesterly towards Mount Aeolus. The peak provided an open and convenient lunch stop.

In the next stage, as the party aimed for Prospect Rock, the weather moved on from the "cloudy with sunny patches" stage to the "showers and thunderstorms" phase. Some added waterproof covers: others demonstrated their Vermont hardiness by not doing so. The trail turned from its previous soggy stage to a streambed situation, which resulted in what could perhaps be called an aquatic sport as opposed to hiking. While the thunder was limited, the volume of the downpour was not. At one stage the writer noticed the interval between thunder and its associated lightening as being imperceptible. In the interests of the comfort level of the party he did not share the thought until later.

By the time Prospect Rock, an outcropping overlooking Manchester and Mount Equinox, was reached, the rain had diminished to a merely moderately wet level. At Prospect Rock the AT/LT joins the old Rootville Road, which is maintained to allow some high level camps to be reached. Arriving simultaneously with ourselves were two men in a pick-up truck on the way to one of the camps. They stopped for the view from Prospect Rock and were as surprised to meet our party as we were to meet them. From the Rock the writer pointed out the location of the Equinox Hotel that Abraham Lincoln was planning to visit in the summer of 1865.

The final stage of the trip was two miles down the Rootville Road to the outskirts of Manchester where a Jeep had been located to take the party back to the Route 11 and 30 trailhead, with the vehicle crowded but acceptably so under the damp circumstances.

Mount Hawley

16 August 2003

By Ray Catozzi

As advertised in the hike schedule, this year I found the route that eluded me last year. This year's route and last year's start from different points on the Whipple Hollow Road and connect near the top of the mountain.

Seven of us hiked up to the hang-glider launching platform. The view to the west and southwest would be wonderful but this time, as last year, it was foggy and misty with only the valley immediately below in good view.

We bushwhacked south from the launching platform for about 100 yard and came upon a nice level grass clearing on top of a large rock outcropping. The view here is right down to West Rutland and to the south. 'Twill be wonderful to get to that spot again sometime when the weather is clear.

My oldest son Jim, who lives in Pennsylvania and was up visiting, hiked up Mount Hawley with us. He's an Appalachian Trail section hiker as I am. We each have hiked over 1,000 miles of the AT the shelter for the city forester to make sure the club is doing all we're supposed to do.

KORZUN EASEMENT -- Aaron Korzun is a landowner off the North Lottery Road in Shrewsbury whose property is crossed by the AT/LT. He has a small pipeline crossing the trail between a spring on one side of it and his house on the other. After some discussion, a motion was unanimously adopted stating that the section approves the granting of an easement to Korzun. A copy of these minutes highlighting this action will be forwarded to Waterbury which will hopefully support us and so advise the NPS.

NEW REQUIREMENTS FOR CHAINSAW USE - New rules have been adopted by the Park Service stating that if you're out on the trail using a chainsaw or a crosscut saw you have to be certified and also be wearing certain protective gear such as chaps, helmet and goggles. The certification involves completion of a day and a half of training. The rules apply to all LT patrols, shelter adopters, and other volunteers. A member of our section, Larry Walter, has such certification and Herb will sound him out about the possibility of his offering certification training to others. The section has at least a couple of members who've been using a chainsaw for years and are quite expert at it, but they will still have to be certified.

KS CONTRIBUTION TO SOUTH BARN FUND -- After some discussion, the section agreed to contribute $400 to the main club for its South Barn Fund. The money will go toward rebuilding the South Barn, which was consumed by fire last February. The contribution is in line with amounts being contributed to the fund by other GMC sections.

COOLIDGE RANGE RIDGE RUNNER -- This year's Coolidge Range ridge runner is Adam Hall. He will be contacted by Barb with a welcome from our section. We would like his feedback on what is going on up there and what he perceives as problems. We would also like it if he could coordinate with Bill Robichaud. If possible, the directors would like to host him at a dinner or potluck sometime when his duties permit. Sue Thomas volunteered to explore various options.

KS TRAILHEAD NOTICES -- The new signs at trailheads informing hikers about the Killington Section have been a success but many need to be replaced. Steve will put together a dozen new ones and get 10 to Herb and two to Barb.

NEXT OUTING SCHEDULE -- The next outing schedule will cover September through November and is rapidly filling up. September and most of October are already filled.

Hike leaders are urged to get their dates and information to Sue and Connie as soon as possible.

NEXT SMOKE & BLAZES -- Bob will be going on vacation the first few weeks of August. Hopefully upon his return Aug. 18 he will find all the material needed to put together the next issue. The newsletter has been receiving much good feedback.

PUBLICITY PANEL -- At the last main club meeting the GMC presented the section with a folding display panel promoting the club and the LT. It is a good general display that hopefully could be placed in the windows of downtown storefronts and outdoor equipment stores or at the library. It was suggested that we could also make it "local" by adding pictures, maps, and other material related to the Killington Section. Andrea will pursue getting maps while new pictures will be taken on upcoming hikes. It may be advisable to add another panel that would focus exclusively on us.

GOV. CLEMENT SHELTER -- Barb reported that her husband Barry is working on drafting an ordinance for the Shrewsbury selectboard with regard to restricting parking from dusk to dawn. The selectboard doesn't want the road "thrown up" or gated but prefers this more moderate approach. Once an ordinance is adopted, the select board will have signs put up and arrangements can be made with Gary Salmon to have some boulders put up there.

DIVERSIFICATION -- What if anything to do about the statistic that 78% of new hike participants attended only one or two times was discussed. Various means of soliciting feedback both from newcomers and club members were discussed. It was suggested that easier hikes might attract more people, but Sue Thomas felt that our schedule already reflected a good balance of easy, moderate, and more challenging hikes. Sue also felt care needed to be taken with newspaper publicity as sometimes in its wake unmanageable numbers turned out for hikes. Steve offered to call Jack Crowther at the Herald. Steve will also draft a questionnaire that will be looked over by Bob and Sue.

GMC ANNUAL MEETING JUNE 14 AT MIDDLEBURY SNOW BOWL -- Our GMC director, Lynda Hutchins, attended the meeting and submitted a written report noting that the main club had a challenging year. In addition to the South Barn fire, endowment funds were down and there was a $13,000 budget deficit. Executive Director Ben Rose took members on a virtual tour of the LT pointing out areas that either have seen improvements or will need them in years to come. In our section, he noted that the Clarendon Gorge bridge would need repairs within 10 years. There are also ongoing discussions about the ultimate viability of Gov. Clement and Pico Shelters.

MISCELLANEOUS -- Members were urged to attend US Forest Service informational and planning meetings, which are held the fourth Tuesday of every month for the purpose of soliciting input from the public. Since the logging and motorized vehicle communities are always strongly represented at such sessions, it is felt that the hiking community would do well to make sure the powers that be are keenly aware that we are equally concerned about what goes on in the national forests through which pass many miles of the Long Trail.

ADJOURNMENT -- The meeting was adjourned about 9:15 P.M. The next directors' meeting has been scheduled for Thursday, 23 October, at 7:00 P.M. also at Herb Ogden's office in Rutland.

New bridge on the Bucklin Trail

By Barbara Griffith

The upper bridge over Brewers Brook is finished thanks to the 100s of hours of both volunteer and hired help. This 35-foot span is 1.2 miles east of Brewers Corners on the Bucklin Trail. The abutments are high enough so they should keep the bridge above the highest spring floods, ensuring this bridge will last a lot longer than past ones. Now, for the first time since the late 1960s, both crossings have been bridged, and hikers no longer need to think about whether it has rained recently before deciding whether to climb Killington on the Bucklin Trail.

Bravo! Many of you probably read the recent Rutland Herald article about the bridge, however you had to be there seeing it happen to appreciate what took place. Young workers lugged hundreds of pounds of heavy pressure treated wood, tools and equipment up the trail on their backs, in their arms, and dragging it in teams. Volunteers lugged bits and pieces up, as did passing hikers who would pause and grab something to drop off at the work site on their way up to the peak.

The bridge was preassembled at GMC headquarters under the direction of GMC Field Supervisor Greg Western, disassembled, and reassembled on site by volunteers and paid staff directed by Greg and by our own Jerry Parker. However that isn't the entire story. As the days went by the bridge went through an evolutionary process, spurred by engineering suggestions from our own Mark Youngstrom that were advocated on site by Jerry Parker. Spending several days with the bridge construction crew I was amazed how smoothly the work went. After getting all the material to the site the biggest problem was how to make the 35-foot span without the bridge ending in a big bow. Many a brainstorming session went into effect. Changes were brought about with Team intervention. Not one mind made the difference; it was always the culmination of the group decision.

This story is about the building of the Bucklin Trail Bridge over Brewers Brook, yet it is also a tribute to the many people who dug in and helped make it happen. I'll work in some clichés here. This organization works because of dedicated volunteers who ask for nothing in return. It's about the "silent ones" who do hours upon hours of work on the trail to make it a better place for all. As for those young workers, I personally feel that the future of America is in very capable hands and I am thankful that I had the privilege to spend hours in the outdoors with them.

From the Section President

Now that the season for trail and shelter construction and maintenance is essentially over it is appropriate to extend thanks to all those who have been active in construction and maintenance on the Section's trails during the year.

The major construction activities have been the Pico camp privy, ably led, prefabricated and directed by Jerry Parker, and the Bucklin Trail bridge, erected under the direction of Waterbury's Greg Western, with considerable support from Jerry, to a design by Mark Youngstrom. Greg in turn was supported by a number of Americorps and other volunteers from outside the Section, but also by a considerable number of Section members. Thanks to Jerry and to Greg and to all those who assisted them.

At the top of the trails man-hours league (outside the scheduled walk-throughs), we again find Bill Robichaud with more than eighty hours fieldwork, largely on the Bucklin Trail, but also on the Sherburne Pass trail and the LT/AT from Jungle Junction to a point north of Route 4. Thank you Bill.

With high honors there are Peter Dekker and Barbara Griffith with approximately twenty hours each; thank you Peter and Barbara.

With very honorable mention there are David Coppock, Barry Griffith, Ruth Hare, Ruth and Sandy Lamb, Andrea McQuade, Cynthia Taylor-Miller, Sue Thomas, Craig Tomkinson, Larry Walter and Deb Waggett who all made very worthwhile contributions. Thank you, one and all.

Very special thanks should also go to Herb Ogden, who heads the Section's Trails & Shelters Committee, and, besides his time on the trail, spends a lot of time off the trail gathering information and coordinating with the Waterbury GMC headquarters.

If for reasons of incomplete bookkeeping I have failed to mention

Killington Section Directors Meeting, 23 October 2003

By Steve Williams

President and Secretary pro tem

Present

Barbara Griffith, Andrea McQuade, Bob Perkins, Roma Pulling, Sue Thomas, Steve Williams, Herb Ogden, Lynda Hutchins, Al Pulling

Approval of Minutes

A motion was made, seconded and approved that the minutes of the July 10th, 2003, meeting be approved as presented.

Treasurer's Report

Roma Pulling reported the current account balances to be:

Checking Account:	$8.87
Savings Account	$1,422.78
Kirk Savings Account	$619.96
Kirk Fund CD's	$15,776.31

(Still to be paid from the above funds are the remaining expenditures for the Bucklin Trail bridge and materials costs due to Jerry Parker for the Pico Camp privy; see below).

Roma also advised the current membership to be 124.

Trails and Shelters Report

Herb Ogden reported on the near completion of the Bucklin Trail bridge and the expectation that Greg Western would shortly return from Waterbury to finalize the bridge by the addition of some stabilizing beams. Herb noted that the Forest Service would shortly expand the Bucklin Trailhead parking lot. Herb had previously submitted to board members a list of ongoing and upcoming work projects.

Herb advised that Greg Western had provided him with the names of two Green Mountain College volunteers who had expressed interest in participating in trails maintenance.

Herb advised that he had heard from Dave Hardy (Waterbury) who provided a map of the three locations he considered viable for the new shelter to be constructed in 2005 between Governor Clement Shelter and Cooper Lodge. Dave had also advised that there is no limitation on buildings at any one of the three sites. In discussion, the Board reached the conclusion that, pending a walk-through, which Herb will arrange in a timely manner, one of the two lower sites was preferred, from the viewpoints of access during construction and winter temperatures. Herb will so advise the Waterbury trails committee.

Herb noted that the Route 4 AT/LT trailhead parking lot is in bad condition from the viewpoint of ruts and run-off. The State is believed to be the first party to be sought to rectify the matter. Steve Williams will communicate with Ben Rose (Waterbury) to ask if Waterbury will approach the State on the matter. Reimbursement of Jerry Parker for materials for Pico privy.

It was proposed, seconded and approved that Jerry Parker be reimbursed $577.65 for the purchase of materials for the new Pico Camp privy.

Aaron Korzun Easement

The Section has advised Waterbury of its support for this easement.

Requirements for Chain-saw use in Appalachian Trail Corridor

Herb reported from his Waterbury discussions that the GMC position on the new requirements for chain-saw use is still being developed. It was agreed that the Section would take no further action regarding the training of its volunteer chain-saw operators, or their required safety equipment, until further word is received on the subject from Waterbury.

Ridge Runner

Steve reported that he had tried to reach Adam Hale during the previous two weeks to see if he had any comments for the Section resulting from his summer ridge running in the Section's area. Regrettably the connection failed to materialize and we must now await receipt of a copy of Adam's final report to Waterbury.

Killington Section notices at trailheads

It has been observed that not all trailheads have a copy of the Section's "Welcome to the Killington Section" notice. Members seeking to rectify this are requested to talk to Steve or to Herb in order to seek copies of the updated trailhead notice for placing at the appropriate location(s).

Walking across Posted Land without permission during club activities

After discussion this was agreed, as part of a club activity, to be unacceptable. The point was confirmed by the proposing, seconding and approval of a motion to ban such walking without the landowner's permission.

With regard to an attractive alternative to the Burr & Burton trail up Mount Equinox, which alternative has two posted sections with so far inaccessible owners, it was agreed that Sue Thomas would revisit the area to obtain the company or organization names of the two owners. Herb will then submit such names to the Vermont Secretary of State with the request that he (or she) advise the names of the contact individuals so that the Section can approach the two landowners with a request to be able to cross the two parcels of land.

Next Outing Schedule

Sue reported that this is well in hand and will be ready to be published in the next Smoke & Blazes

Next Smoke & Blazes

Bob Perkins reported that the November issue is in progress.

Publicity Panel

Andrea McQuade reported that this is now ready and will be on display at the Rutland EMS store on their "club days", October 24 and 25. She is seeking to contact Mark Foley who owns a number of downtown Rutland buildings in the hope that the panel can be displayed in one of them.

Rutland Herald Article

Steve reported that he had discussed the subject with club member Jack Crowther, who works for the Rutland Herald. Jack advised that the prerequisite for any article to be of interest to the Rutland Herald is newsworthiness. Consequently, at the time of the bridge construction on the Bucklin Trail, Steve called the Herald, which did indeed do an article on the subject. Hike leaders and Sue, in her role as outings' committee chair, are requested to see if there is a story associated with any given hike (such as the history associated with Patch Hollow). If so, he or she is requested to let Steve know, whereupon he will contact the Herald.

Governor Clement Shelter Update

Due to the pressure of other workload requirements, Barry Griffith's activities on developing a town ordinance to ban parking on the town road leading to the shelter have been delayed. Herb suggested calling on Norman Cohen and Becca Rice, other attorneys who also live in Shrewsbury, to see if they would be willing to work with Herb and Barry on the matter. The Board endorsed such an approach.

Survey Results

Steve presented the survey results, which were disappointing in terms of the responses received (14). There was a 65-95% satisfaction with the "length of hikes", "difficulty of hikes" and "frequency of requests to join a work party" questions. Additional activities proposed which received at least four in favor were cycling, canoeing/ kayaking and nature study. Two thoughts emerged from the ensuing discussion:

- Sue Thomas would be pleased to hear from anyone willing to lead one of these events.
- Members always have the opportunity to join other sections, which frequently run these events.

Report on GMC Waterbury Directors' Meeting September 20th.

Lynda Hutchins presented a comprehensive written report of the meeting and then verbally highlighted the key issues and decisions.

Website

Steve reported that from his recent view of the site it is working very well. However he noted, after linking to the Waterbury site, that only a single commercial page was operational. Pete Ketchum (Waterbury) confirmed that a problem exists with the site and is being worked on.

Andrew Nuquist letter of June 30th, 2003 (submitted by Lynda for the Board's review)

Andrew Nuquist (GMC President) received an offer of an $8,000 donation towards the club's impending 2004 budget deficit of $13,000 if the GMC Board "raised or pledged" $5,000, which Andrew relayed to individual directors in a letter, dated June 30th, 2003, regrettably emphasizing "pledging" rather than "raising". Lynda reported that, believing it inappropriate that directors, particularly those elected by the sections, such as herself, should be asked to donate financially in addition to their other contributions to the club, she so advised the GMC Board at their September 20th meeting. Steve advised that he subsequently attempted to reach Andrew to support Lynda's viewpoint and, in Andrew's absence, made the point to Executive Director Ben Rose, who said that Lynda's point had been well understood, and recognized, by both he and Andrew. Lynda stated her belief that the point should be made in writing and requested the (Killington) Board to endorse her sentiments in writing to President Andrew Nuquist. A motion was proposed, seconded and approved that this be done. Barbara agreed to write the letter.

Next Meeting

8.00 PM. Tuesday, February 3rd, 2004 at Herb Ogden's Offices, 92 Center Street, Rutland.

Post Meeting Note

Greg Western and a number of volunteers, including Barbara, Sue, Lynda, Bob, Jerry and Bill, completed the Bucklin Trail bridge on October 25th others who have contributed, such as the hikers who carried up wood from Brewers Corners for the Bucklin trail bridge, I apologize; your time is no less appreciated.

Besides the above, thanks also go to sector checkers Gretchen Crowley, Barry and Barbara Griffith, John and Nadine Horchner, Herb Ogden, Bill Robichaud, Cynthia Taylor-Miller, Sue Thomas, Deb Waggett, Vivian Walter and Mark and Connie Youngstrom who provide the status reports to Herb Ogden to make the system work.. I hope to see as many of you as can make it at the Potluck Supper scheduled for November 22nd.

Trip reports

Shrewsbury Loop

23 August 2003

By Barry Griffith

Fourteen human hikers, led by Dickens, began this trek at the AT/LT parking area on Route 103. We struck out on the Long Trail heading north, working up a sweat on the ascent. There was a welcome breeze on the ridge above, carrying a reminder of cooler weather to come. We paused at a scenic vista to take in the view to the south and west. We then continued on to Clarendon Shelter, where we had lunch and chatted with through-hikers.

After our repast we diverged from the Long Trail, continuing our walk up the so-called Gainer Road – a former town highway discontinued after the Great Flood of 1927. We paused to inspect large stone foundations, and a picture of the long-abandoned home of the Anthony Adams family, which stood here in the late 1800s, reproduced in Dawn Hance's history of Shrewsbury. We discussed the original settlers, who came here a century earlier.

In 1797 young John Bullard married Lucy Buxton in Barre, Massachusetts. The newlyweds came here to raise their family – among the original settlers of Shrewsbury. We were determined to visit the cemetery on their home farm where they were laid to rest – a quest unfulfilled on the last Section hike here. Barbara would have led us there directly. Her absence required some bushwhacking, but the objective was achieved! We memorialized our visit in the site's journal.

We continued to the north and uphill until we arrived at Shrewsbury's Lottery Road -- named for the way it was financed by the fledgling town in 1792. We moved on -- finally downhill -- to the east, pausing to inspect the site of Town School #11, established in 1840, long since abandoned.

We reconnected with the Long Trail and took it to the South, over Beacon Hill, and then steeply downhill back to Clarendon Shelter. Here we again diverged from the present AT/LT, Southerly and down the aforementioned abandoned town road. This connects with Vermont's first interstate highway -- the venerable Crown Point Road, laid out in 1759, during the French & Indian War. Continuing down we inspected CPR markers, to find ourselves back on Route 103.

A short jaunt westerly returned us to the parking lot, where our party had a chance to visit and traverse the AT/LT Swinging Bridge over Clarendon Gorge. A successful loop concluded, we departed with visions of hikes to come. Happy Trails!

Pico Camp Privy

13 September 2003, et al.

By Herb Ogden

Last summer, the small Pico Camp privy that the Section built around 1992 under the direction of former Trails & Shelters Chair Tim Welch was in such disrepair that GMC Field Supervisor Val Stori took it apart and put a "chum" in its place. I don't know why it's called a chum, since it consists of a toilet seat on a big box, with no walls to separate the user from the environment. I wouldn't feel particularly chummy when using one. Some of us were miffed that we weren't given the chance to repair what we had, but the result was good for us, as you'll see if you read on.

This summer, Jerry Parker took privy plans supplied by GMC headquarters, simplified them to suit a situation where supplies could be trucked to within 1,000 feet of the work site, and completely prefabricated the privy. On 7 September, Jerry and I scouted out the site and made sure Pico's service road was in decent shape for a loaded truck. The next weekend, a dozen or so of us hiked or drove to the site and hauled in two pickup truck loads of privy lumber, roofing, and bin. The larger part of the work party got the new outhouse mostly built under Jerry's supervision. Meanwhile, Bob Perkins and I replaced the rotted window frames in the Camp, cinched up and put a new 2x4 in the front wall, and put in a new windowsill to keep the weather out of the inside of the wall. The previous windowsill, installed around 1995, had disappeared totally, and, for several years, closing the windows had not done much to keep out the wind. During the week, Jerry returned to finish nailing down the roof before a big windstorm. The next weekend, Jerry, Barb and Barry Griffith and I returned to finish siding the privy, install the bench and seat, and do a little clearing on the 0.4 mile trail from the Camp to Pico Peak.

The new privy stands a few feet closer to Pico Camp than the old privy did, with its back facing downhill to make it easier to remove the bin. It is also much larger, lighter, and better ventilated than the old one.

Thanks to Jerry and to John Horchner for the use of their vehicles, and to Killington Ltd. for the use of the service road. And thanks especially to Jerry for building the privy at home and then directing the rebuilding at the site.

Mt. Antone, Rupert

20 September 2003

By Larry Walter and Viv Bebee

The weather was a little iffy at the onset of our hike up Old Towne Road. The Merck folks were hosting some sort of Oktoberfest/ Chevy Corvair Enthusiast/ Other Old Car People celebration so there were about 20 times more humans running around than usual. We parked at the lower parking lot by Route. 315 and set out for the visitor center. Once we passed the upper parking areas and barn, things quieted down considerably.

It took about two hours at a steady pace to reach the summit where we had lunch. The views were initially limited to a couple chains down the hill, but the ceiling lifted enough to get a nice peak at the sun, the Adirondacks and the approaching route. Tom kept an interesting record of our progress with his little GPS unit. We descended slowly though a couple brief showers, then though the throngs of Oktoberfesters to the parking lot.

Merck Forest has 28 miles of hiking and skiing trails ranging over 3,100 acres of forest land. Motorcycles, ATV's and snowmobiles are prohibited. Viv and I have stayed at two of Merck's cabins, all of which have a wood stove. Aside from an occasional farm tractor, you're pretty much treated to a quiet hike or ski. Be aware that there is no grooming of the ski trails, so you're probably going to be breaking trail on the more challenging routes. The visitor center is powered by an impressive array of photovoltaic cells and a giant fireplace with auxiliary power from a windmill up by the barn.

Old Baldy, Woodstock

21 September 2003

By Roma Pulling

The day of our hike was like an island in stormy seas, preceded by remnants of Tropical Storm Isabel and followed by a rainstorm that left one and three-eighths inches of rain in our gauge. Hike Day was the sort that hike leaders dream of: mostly sunny, cool and crisp. We met six hikers at the park, drove to Bridgewater and met five more hikers there.

Our destination was in the southwest part of Woodstock in Coolidge State Forest. Most of our hikers, including our editor, had never heard of it, but I had hiked it twice, the last time in 1986. Steve, the leader of that hike, was with us again and helped us choose the right trail. It followed an old logging road very gradually with a short, steep rise at the very end. We saw many flowers including goldenrod, fall asters, a very confused Canada violet which should have finished blooming in July, and most exciting, a large patch of bottle gentians.

The elevation at the summit of Baldy is 2,409 feet, and the view is at least 180 degrees. Steve pointed out Ascutney and Okemo with a peak at Killington through the trees. We ate our lunch there before returning to our cars to conclude a fantastic outing.

Black Mountain, New York

27 September 2003

By Ray Catozzi

The weather was fairly nice when we left Rutland, but completely clouded over when we stopped at the Vermont Welcome Center in Fair Haven to pick up our section president, his charming wife, and our lovely director to the main club. Oh yes, their names are Steve and Diana Williams and Lynda Hutchins. So the bunch of us proceeded to the trailhead east of Black Mountain. It was getting darker by then, but we could still see the trail and the signs.

Part way up the east trail we turned left on another trail that headed south, to a couple of nice ponds, and then west toward the northbound trail that would take us up to the summit. It was nearly noon when we reached the nice open Adirondack shelter near the pond so we stopped and had our lunch there.

After lunch we started up the steep, rocky, mile-long trail. Before we'd gone a half of a mile it started sprinkling and by the time we reached the top it was raining. There were only 12 to 15 people up there this time. On our last hike to Black Mountain there were probably 50 or more up there enjoying the view.

This day the view down the mountain went as far as 200 feet and then stopped in the thick clouds. The gorgeous view down the steep slope of Black Mountain was completely gone. When it is clear, it is a great treat to look down on Lake George, and watch all the powerboats, ferry boats, and the canoes and kayaks glide up and down the lake. I promised our group that I would put this hike on the schedule again next year and pray for a clear day.

It kept sprinkling, sometimes hard and sometimes lightly, so we stayed on top only about minutes while some group pictures were taken. Then down we went in the rain. The rain nearly stopped half way down to our cars. So it wasn't too bad a hike.

Mendon Peak

11 Oct 2003

By Barbara Griffith

Our apologies to anyone who showed up for the hike and got left behind. We had it on our calendar as a 9:00 AM hike. We thought that our description of a difficult bushwhack had kept many away. Only one hiker showed up so we headed out to Brewers Corner and met up with another who said it was billed as a 9:30 hike. Having a cell phone he reached his group who were waiting at the park. Oh well.

Three of us set off up the trail, a 40-minute walk on an old logging road. After crossing Eddy Brook we started a steady ascent up an ATV trail which runs along Mendon's westerly slope. No switchbacks -- straight up. Phew! This hike is not for the faint of heart. The trail stopped about 500 feet from the top and our bushwhack started. We got into short fir trees packed together, up mossy cliffs. An hour later, battered and tired, we came out within feet of the canister. This contained information about Mendon Peak being one of the top 100 peaks in NE. Yea! We made it!

Halfway into our lunch the 9:30 party joined us, making us a group of 6. With a 360-degree view of the valleys and mountains we enjoyed the fall colors beneath spacious sunny skies. To make this trip more of a challenge we all agreed on an alternate descent. Compasses and GPS in hand, we headed easterly along the ridge toward Little Killington. We hoped to come across a logging road or trail that would lead down to Eddy Brook. We descended past three ravines that were pointed out to be "flumes." These were used to slide the logs down the mountain to the brook below. Not finding a better route, we finally descended one ourselves to get down to the brook. More bushwhacking followed. Finally we located the logging road, and followed it past Stovepipe City and back to Wheelerville Road.

Seven hours after we began, we arrived back at our vehicles. Our party was tired and dirty, but all agreed that the challenge was worth the trip. See you on the trails!

Eagle Rock Freedley Quarry, Dorset

18 October 2003

By Larry Walter and Viv Bebee

The great Eagle Rock scramble unraveled at the last moment due to unplanned conflicts with the landowner. (I'll try to set up a January visit to the same). Viv and I dug out the hiker guides and settled on an alternative visit to Freedley Quarry in Dorset. It's a good thing we recon'd the quarry hike the week before, as the route was a little confusing.

The weather was cool, but agreeable for the 10 of us as we ascended through a farmer's field from Lower Hollow Road. At the top of the cleared fields we picked up a well-worn woods road that climbed southeasterly though a saddle. (Note: About halfway up this road, you ignore a side road to the northwest, which climbs, steeply to a small camp on the ridge. A short distance after this intersection the road forks, where you keep to the left.) After hitting the saddle, we took a smaller road about 500 feet to the north where we picked up a recently cleared (muddy) skid trail that descended northeasterly to the old Dorset Road. A couple minutes to the north on the Dorset Road and the quarry appeared on our left.

The quarry is an interesting, semi-open cut into the side of the hill, with deep pools of water where they had originally taken the bulk of the marble out. There is some old mining equipment still lying around, along with a lot of local graffiti. The pools freeze over in the winter and are frequented by skaters who don't mind a couple irregularities here and there.

We ate lunch at an overlook on the side of the logging landing and even caught a couple rays of sun in the process. The return trip was easy after the 20-minute backtrack up the logging trail to the saddle.

It looks like the approach from the Lower Hollow Road to this saddle would be an excellent jump off to the summits of Dorset Hill and Mt. Aeolus, but one should check with the local owners before hand. The fellow who owns the barn, across the street from where we parked, is the key contact for use of this route. Unfortunately, I did not get his name and number.

Mount Equinox

25 October 2003

By Ray Catozzi

Our hike was scheduled to go up the North Ridge Trail from Bear Town Gap and then down the Burr & Burton Trail into Manchester Center. I had learned ahead of time that a logging company and a rod and gun club had closed the North Ridge Trail to hikers. Our group of six decided not to ignore the NO TRESPASSING signs but to go up the 35-degree Burr & Burton Trail and to return by the same route.

Half way up the trail, which was wide enough for a jeep, we ran into an inch snow. Two-thirds of the way up, the trail narrowed to a steep, slippery path with two inches of snow. Other hikers had gone up ahead of us, but that made the trail under foot even more dangerous from slipping and sliding. As leader, I was having a terrible time climbing up this steep, rocky, snowy, slippery trail. I had to stop often to catch my breath.

Our group consisted of three younger members: Tom Shanahan, and Tom and Maria Walsh, plus three older ones: Steve Williams, John Hale, and me. I told the two Toms and Maria to go on up and not to wait for me, their fearless leader. By this point there was over three inches of snow. I had to stop every 50 yards or so, not only to catch my breath but also to rest my shaky legs. God, it's hell to get old! I stopped at least 25 times before we reached the Rock Overlook.

So much time elapsed that the young three were on their way back down that dangerous Burr & Burton Trail, but Steve and John agreed to stay with this tired old hiker, and to walk down the toll road. One of the three younger hikers would drive up to meet us.

We made it to the overlook and then up the last one-half-mile moderate trail to the hotel. There were several cars of tourists there enjoying the wonderful view in all directions. The hotel and restaurant are closed until next summer so we had to eat our carry-up lunch. The toll road was plowed so it was nice walking down. A couple of miles down the long, curvy, five-mile road Tom Walsh met us. He didn't have to pay the $8.00 toll road fee as he said he was on an emergency drive to pick up a worn out hiker – me! He brought us back to our cars at the trailhead in Manchester.

In spite of my darned old senior problems, the mountain is beautiful with great views of the Green Mountains to the east, the Taconics north and south, and the Adirondacks to the west. Try it the way we did – if you are young!

Bromley Mountain

8 November 2003

By Steve Williams

With a roster of fifteen and two dogs the party left the Route 11/30 LT/AT trailhead, heading north, at about 10.00 AM. The weather was great; about freezing, little wind (except at the summit) and a mostly clear sky.

The first destination was the new Bromley shelter and its associated privy, about one-and-a-half miles from the trailhead. This shelter was built in mid-September by the Manchester Section and looks out in a southwesterly direction. Materials were delivered by helicopter from the nearby Bromley ski area parking lot. All were impressed by the layout, quality and location of the shelter, though perhaps a little uncertain as to the impact of a south westerly wind on the warmth index.

The trail has been relocated for some six-tenths of a mile towards the summit. As the new section is better graded than the original trail it is assumed that the relocation is to reduce erosion. In any event, the new section is indeed easier walking than the original, with the benefit of a new vista, some three-tenths of a mile above the shelter, overlooking Stratton Mountain.

About three-tenths of a mile below the summit, the walker is disgorged onto a Bromley ski slope where, visible just ahead, snow was being manufactured. The party elected to make its way around the patch and come out at the summit. [See Steve's photo, opposite page. Ed.] A few brave souls made it to the top of the observation tower where the view was first class, as was the wind. All gathered in the ski area hut – totally enclosed – to enjoy the view and lunch in protected seclusion. As a result of the snow making, most, but not all, of the summit had a pronounced wintry appearance, leaving the impression that the mountain could not make up its mind whether to be in fall or winter attire.

After lunch, Jerry Parker and his dog Dickens left us to return the same way, while the remaining fourteen and one dog set out for Mad Tom Notch. After a steep descent for the first hundred yards or so, the trail undulates in a gentle fashion until, after some two-and-a-half miles, it has dropped some eight hundred feet to Mad Tom Notch. With leaves having long gone there are periodic good views to both east and west.

Leaders Steve and Diana Williams, having previously spotted their Jeep at Mad Tom Notch, were able to carry five others back to the starting point. Sue Thomas and Ray Catozzi were then kind enough to return for the remaining seven who were making their way down the Mad Tom Notch Road towards Peru.

Vermontivia

It was suggested recently by Herb Ogden that it might be fun to include in Smoke & Blazes some trivia questions on the subject of Vermont, the Green Mountains or, best of all, the Long Trail. We agree and are giving it a try.

For starters Herb offered the following:

Q1. Which crossing of a large brook on a Killington Section trail is where no brook used to be?

The following was inspired by a question put by Barry Griffith. Many of Vermont's 251 towns share their names with large or well-known cities elsewhere. There's Berlin, Germany and Moscow; Russia; Dover England and Calais, France; Jericho and Bethel, Palestine; and Halifax and Windsor, Canada. Then, in the United States, there's Hartford and New Haven, Connecticut; Springfield and Worcester, Massachusetts; Concord and Manchester, New Hampshire; Troy and Rochester, New York; Richmond and Arlington, Virginia; and Charlotte and Wilmington, North Carolina. All have like-named Vermont towns. It goes on and on. Even Orange and Bakersfield, California.

Q2. What is the largest (population) American city that shares its name with a Vermont town?

Q2a. Name two states and four foreign countries that share their names with Vermont towns.

In the early 1930s the Blue Triangle camp was built next to the brook near Gov. Clement shelter. It served until the late 1940s when it was disassembled and moved to the then pasture above Spring Lake where it became Spring Lake camp. In the 1950s it was moved again and became Sunnyside camp.

Q3: Why was the old Blue Triangle camp so named?

Answers will appear in the next issue of Smoke & Blazes. Let us know what you think. And please submit some posers.

Feeder Canal History Ramble

15 November 2003

by Sue Thomas, Leader

The Killington Section came thru last fall's hunting season unscathed and well fed, thanks to happy coincidence and a band of Red Coats. We began our history hike on a piece of the Feeder Canal bike path in Ford Edward, NY, which winds easily alongside the remnants of the old Champlain Canal, begun in 1817 to provide access for freight and passenger boats from Lake Champlain to the Hudson River

On the Feeder Canal

The Canal opened in 1822, linking the St. Lawrence River with New York City and enabling shipping of lumber, marble, and produce from the North Country to the busy port for the next 100 years. We enjoyed exploring the remains of the limestone locks and stopped for lunch by "The Five Combines", a series of locks which each lifted or lowered a canal boat about 11 feet in order to negotiate a 55 foot change in elevation. Someone commented that a time machine would come in handy so that we could actually see it as it was. That's exactly what we got at our next stop, the visitors center on Rogers Island, when we arrived to find a detachment of Revolutionary War era British soldiers occupying the site!

We got a much more cordial welcome than a band of "Green Mountain Boys" should expect. In fact we were ushered in for refreshments and the debut screening of a filmed reenactment of the Battle of Saratoga. (It debuted there because apparently no space in Saratoga could be found large enough to accommodate the 1400 costumed reenactors, horses, and cannons, so the film was shot in a Fort Edward farm field.)

Far from being sore losers, the Red Coats cheerfully shared their popcorn and explained the uses of their period equipment. Perhaps they didn't fully understand our enemy status, thrown off no doubt by the familiar accents of Steve and Diana. We decided not to press our luck in the face of bayonets and retreated back to the bike path, this time a section in Glens Falls that follows the Hudson River. Interpretive signs explain that the caves in James Fennimore Cooper's "Last of the Mohicans" are hidden behind the powerful waterfalls where the trail begins.

Having returned to Rutland unperforated by either hunters' bullets or musket balls, I say the day was a success.

Postscript: My brochure detailing the history of the Feeder Canal, which was nowhere to be found the day of the hike, has resurfaced after an extensive archeological dig in my office. I'd be happy to copy it for anyone interested.

Grandpas Knob

6 December 2003

by Gordon & Helen Cawood, leaders

Winter storm warnings prompted us to cancel this trip. Judging from the news reports a foot or more of snow fell in the Castleton area. Belgo Brook Road would have been a bad place to be stuck. There were five parties from Killington (six or more people) planning to hike, four parties (six people) from Bread Loaf and two other folk.

We promised our callers that the hike would be rescheduled.

Patch Hollow from the South

13 December 2003

by Herb Ogden, leader

Ten people turned out on a beautiful mid-December day for a loop hike from the Wallingford Gulf Road (Vt. 140) to Patch Hollow. Because the Wallingford Gulf trailhead parking lot on the Long Trail is not plowed, we left our cars at a plowed pull-off about half a mile west and walked back up through the wildest part of the gulf. Observing it at pedestrian rather than automobile speed, one can see why building a road through it was quite a challenge, and therefore why the first road between Wallingford and East Wallingford was the topographically less challenging Bear Mountain Road, which the Long Trail crosses 0.6 miles north of the Wallingford Gulf Road.

This was an ideal snowshoeing day. A day's rain had shrunk the foot and a half of fluffy stuff that fell the previous weekend into about half a foot of crunchy, but not icy, firm snow. Soon we were inspecting what appears to be a barn foundation just to the east of the trail. The Griffiths said they had looked around for a house foundation but found none. We crossed the Bear Mountain Road and crunched our way up the first switchbacks to the old road from the Bear Mountain Road north to Patch Hollow, described in the article the Griffiths quoted in the February 2002 Smoke & Blazes. At the south end of the hollow, the old road seems to disappear under the water of Patch Brook, which beavers have triple-dammed. There was much sign of beaver activity along the shore of the big beaver pond. We stopped for lunch and sat on a beaver-chewed tree trunk while Barry Griffith read us the article about the failed tarring and feathering attempt of 1831 that left one of the would-be tarrers and featherers dead in the cabin at the north end of the hollow.

Barry Griffith reads
The Legend of Patch Hollow

Occasionally following wood roads or the old Patch Hollow Road, and occasionally bushwhacking to stay away from steep shoreline, we found a small cellar hole in a flattish field with very old apple and maple trees. According to the same article, this would have been home to one of the Patch families in the 1830s. At the head of the hollow, we looked at the cellar hole of the cabin where the 1831 killing occurred, admired the view south, and rejoined the Long Trail for the hike south over Bear Mountain. Some of the rock steps were a little icy, but the hike up the mountain was beautiful, and the hike down was easy.

We saw numerous tracks of deer and small canines, but the only animals we saw were some crows. We were pleased to see no ATV tracks.

Mount Antone in Winter

3 January 2003

by Steve and Diana Williams, leaders

Misty, icy, wet, foggy, fun, invigorating, slippery, slushy, snowy, opaque.

These were the adjectives put forward by the four participants (the leaders having been joined by Sue Thomas and Lynda Hutchins) to describe the outing. Bill Lucas prudently decided that the ice underfoot provided a real safety hazard as opposed to a mere challenge and did not participate after the first quarter of a mile. He then retired to the Merck Forest Visitor Center where he produced some fine artwork on the blackboard. He did, however, receive credit from the Rutland Herald for starting, as their reporter, Gordon Dritschilo, did his research for his article (in the January 4th issue) before rather than after the outing.

The original scheme was to use snowshoes, but with the rain and thawing of the previous week, boots alone were decided upon. However, given that the cleats on snowshoes would have helped, but that the trail was in places bare, there is no clear answer as to whether snowshoes would have been the better option.

Having put forward the adjectives above, there is not much more to be said, except that "opaque" refers to the view obtained from the summit of Mount Antone, at which time the party was enveloped in mist. A vote on the optimum lunch spot was unanimous in favor of the heat in the Visitor Center.

From the leaders' perspective, it was a positive group whose members took all the vicissitudes of the day and the trail in their strides.

Perhaps the spirit of the day is best summed up by Lynda's comment to the Rutland Herald 'It was between this and doing my special-ed paperwork. This sounded more exciting. I really live for hiking.'

Jockey Hill

11 January 2004

by Barbara & Barry Griffith, leaders

We awoke at 5 AM wondering whether this trip would be canceled. It was 20 below, the fourth subzero night in a row. We reread the recent newspaper article in which Sue Thomas assured readers that Killington Section hikers go out in all kinds of weather, even subzero temperatures. We put another log in the stove and waited.

The hiking gods were kind. By 10 AM it was 40 degrees warmer. We assembled 14 hikers eager to shake off cabin fever. We headed off to Shrewsbury, and our trailhead by the Tin Shanty Camp. We struck out heading north on an old road, which sees most use these days as a snowmobile trail. The recent cold snap had left it ice-covered. We were alone. Along the way, Jerry Parker and Bill Holt helped us to identify tracks of deer, moose, bobcat, fisher cat, coyote, weasel and more. What an abundance of wildlife!

The Rock-on-the-Rock

The snowmobile trail passes around Jockey Hill to the north, coming out at Gov. Clement Shelter. We instead struck out and began a bushwhack to the summit. The snow was compressed, making snowshoe use optional. The climb was not easy, but not that long. We arrived at the top and our goal -- the rock on the rock.

There are those who believe that the Celts were some of the first settlers in Vermont. Years ago we were told that the "Rock on the Rock" is one of these ancient sites, and that at the Summer Solstice the sun shines through between the rocks. Taking a compass reading the rocks do point directly north and south.....So, with a stretch of the imagination one can see the sun shining through at the next solstice.

After lunch we headed down to the snowmobile trail below, heading over a slightly alternate route. Back to our vehicles and pictures atop the ice sculpture, then onward home.

Eagle Rock

18 January 2004

Larry Walter and Viv Beebe, leaders

Our destination was Eagle Rock and other mysterious parts in Castleton, Vermont. Eagle Rock is due east of Beebe Pond and Vt.. 30.

Because of prior scheduling conflicts, this was our second attempt to climb Eagle Rock. We were rewarded with favorable weather and a thumbs up from the local land owner.

We had a good turnout of 11 hardy souls. All parties successfully cleared a small logging operation at the starting point and scaled the introductory pitch. The group then patiently waited while their leader located the lookout. Although it was not a crystal clear day, we had a nice view to the west and northwest to Beebe Pond, Echo Lake, and part of Lake Hortonia. Lunchtime was spent watching the ice fisherman and a couple folks on a hand groomed skating rink. A small glitch: Sue failed to feed my addiction to trail brownies.

The next leg involved some cross country hiking to the northeast with a couple decent vistas, eventually dropping back down though an old Christmas tree farm to Ganson Hill Road, and an old, abandoned camp. All of us, save for four, chose the shorter alternative and returned via the road to our parking spot. Those remaining continued cross-country to the northeast onto a ledge with a nice view to the west. Had we continued on out that ridge, we would have eventually rimmed out with a view over High Pond. It was at this point, however, that an alert member of the bunch (not me) remembered that at least one vehicle had been blocked in by one of our cars. So we sprint/slogged back to the point-of-beginning only to discover that our land-locked companions had somehow managed to fit a full sized automobile through a space the size of a Wal-Mart shopping basket. It was just as well that we headed back a little early, since the sun was getting a bit low in the sky. All told, most everyone had a good time. Our "most inspirational" award goes to Jerry's canine friend, Dickens.

Should anyone wish to access Eagle Rock in the future, your contact is a nice fellow named Phil Marcell at 468-5238, in Castleton.

Hike and Wiener Roast

25 January 2004

by Roma Pulling, leader

What a difference a year makes! On January 25, 2003, we were at Gifford Woods with 19 hikers enjoying ideal snowshoeing conditions at 22 degrees, followed by a fantastic cookout. This year on January 25 we woke up to 13 degrees below zero. Conditions like that could be detrimental to anyone with health problems; so I told several people if they wanted to come to this neighborhood I would show them where to snowshoe and we could have a hot dog roast in the house afterward.

Not really expecting anyone to be waiting for us, we drove to the park in the morning and met one hiker! When we told him the new arrangement, he went along with it. We picked him up after his walk near the old city reservoir and brought him back to our house. We enjoyed sitting by the fireplace and then cooked our hot dogs in the microwave. Serving chips, hot chocolate and cookies to fill out the menu, we had a very pleasant social time.

See you in the spring, or at least in springlike weather.

Griffith Lake

14 February 2004

by Barbara & Barry Griffith, leaders

In the late nineteenth century the hills of Mt. Tabor were the personal fiefdom of Silas Griffith. In his glory days Vermont's first millionaire owned nine sawmills and at least three dozen charcoal kilns, employing more than 600 people. Griffith was an avid trout fisherman. To indulge his passion Griffith erected a "clubhouse" on the remote pond on the Long Trail which now bears his name. That project included construction of a carriage road, at no little expense, to bring guests and supplies from Danby village to his Griffith Lake summer home.

On Valentine's Day a dozen of us (plus Dickens) assembled to make the 3.5 mile ascent up the old carriage road, now called the Lake Trail. We were pleased to find the parking lot plowed and a snowshoe trail set before us. As we gained elevation we were rewarded by views of the marble quarry on Dorset Mountain to the west, and the Vermont Valley spread out below. By the time we reached McGinn Brook we were breaking our own trail, surprised by the amount of new snow at these higher elevations. We were pleased to have new Section members Chuck and Gail Helfer join us for their first hike with the Club, and gratefully acknowledge their yeoman trail breaking work! After pausing for lunch, we finally made it over the ridge, joined up with the Long Trail and followed it the short remaining distance to our destination.

Frozen Griffith Lake welcomed us. We scanned the Green Mountains further to the east, identifying Peru and Styles Peaks. We chatted with some amiable riders who had arrived here via the snowmobile corridor which runs north and south through the Big Branch Wilderness. We then bid adieu, comforted by the knowledge that our return trip was downhill, on a well set trail. After seven miles and six hours we arrived back at our vehicles, where we conversed with some other returning hikers before hitting the road. Dickens immediately fell asleep in the car, all of us tired but satisfied to have spent a good day in the great outdoors!

Buckner Preserve

7 February 2004

by Lynda Hutchins, leader

After some last minute jostling(should we stay or should we go?), and several changes of plan around the mixed bag of precipitation, ten of us stalwart (foolhardy?) snowshoers crammed into two vehicles to brave the minimally-plowed West Haven road leading to the Galick Farm. The trailhead was covered in virgin snow, but not to worry, we put some of our crowd to work shoveling out the parking area.

The 2.5-mile trek through the hills, fields, and forests of the Helen W. Buckner Memorial Preserve at Bald Mountain (at 3,400 acres, the largest and most ecologically-diverse nature preserve The Nature Conservancy owns in Vermont) gave us commanding views of the peninsula. Though several in our party appeared to be disappointed we did not come upon the likes of the peregrine falcon nor the eastern timber rattlesnake (some of the rare species that can be found at the Preserve, season permitting!), we were able to appreciate how the Poultney River sweeps the peninsula on the east, and Lake Champlain on the west and south.

The weather gods eventually smiled upon us and the sun even graced us with his presence. Although the trip leader had forgotten some of the more challenging aspects of the trail (there were no steep, ice-covered rock masses in the fall!), most of the eager participants managed to return with no other infirmities than wet buttocks.

emergencies. From discussion it appeared that there were no strong views pro or con. It was agreed that Herb Ogden will invite Gary Salmon of Vt. Forests, Parks & Recreation to our summer directors' meeting to discuss the matter. Related ideas considered were to place maps on trees adjacent to the Bucklin Trail (which is the route many lost skiers take) and leaving a rescue sled somewhere on, or close to, the trail.

Herb presented the idea of having toolboxes located at certain high elevation points, containing hoes and pry bars in particular. This idea was supported and Herb was requested to look into it further.

Waterbury staff will be working on the permit for a new shelter between Governor Clement and Cooper Lodge during 2004 (though it is not clear if construction is scheduled for 2005 or later).

There is an open question of whether a bridge should be recommended to the Waterbury HQ for Gould Stream (on the LT between the Upper and Lower Cold River Roads). This point needs further consideration.

Herb will contact Pete Ketchum (Waterbury) to see if the state can be persuaded to dig a drainage trench round the Route 4 LT trailhead parking lot.

Requirements for Chain Saw use in Appalachian Trail Corridor

Steve Williams reported from his attendance at a Waterbury meeting (see below) that it appears that user certification requirements will indeed be in force and that all should be prepared for it. Herb reported that some study is being made of the possibility of a shortened certification process for long time experienced chain saw users.

Next Outing Schedule

Sue Thomas reported that this is well in hand with no shortage of willing outing leaders.

Next Smoke & Blazes

(Pre meeting) Bob Perkins advised that this is well in hand. A request was made to Bob to include the Section's website address on the schedule page.

Publicity Panel

Post Meeting Note: Andrea McQuade reports that she continues to search for a downtown location for the promotional panels she has prepared and is cautiously optimistic about finding a good location shortly.

Governor Clement Shelter Update

Norm Cohen and Rebecca Price are working on a draft ordinance to put before the Shrewsbury selectmen. Barry Griffith will contact them to check on progress and, as soon as it is available, provide an opportunity for the directors and others (in the section) interested to review it.

In the longer term, should the ordinance not prove effective, then probably the shelter will have to be abandoned and the trail relocated. In this event a local skimobile club could well take over the shelter.

Annual General Meeting

Post Meeting Note: The selected date is April 24th for which date Sue has reserved the Lutheran Church hall and is also arranging a speaker.

Report on the GMC Waterbury Directors' January 24 Meeting

Being unable to attend on the revised meeting date Lynda Hutchins presented comprehensive meeting notes. From these Steve highlighted:

The impending GMC budget deficit for 2004/2005 of $45,000;

The high costs of the new headquarters plan ($965,000+),

The planned work on the Lamoille bridge during 2004, and

The annual general meeting planned for June 11-13 at Burke Mountain.

Report on participation in GMC Waterbury Volunteers' Focus Group meeting.

Steve highlighted the following points from the meeting:

Consideration is being given to the formation of specialist teams for certain tasks such as rock clearing and drainage (bridges and shelters being already adequately covered).

Many participants thought that a build-up to work days and the possibility of some socialization before or after is worthwhile

Several participants reported success with having a representative at EMS club days to be worthwhile. (Based on this observation the section will try to participate on the planned April 24/25 club days).

EMS has been willing to kick in $500 per project on certain trail days.

Website

Steve reported that from recent review this appeared to be working well; also that there is a link to the Waterbury website.

Next Meeting

Annual general meeting will be, April 24th, at the Lutheran Church Hall.

Other Business

After discussion of the benefits of Rutland Herald publicity, Sue was requested to notify Steve of any outings (e.g. Patch Hollow) where there is a story with either historical or other potentially newsworthy element, whereupon Steve will contact the Herald to see if he can induce coverage of the outing.

Rolston Roost razed; replacement to be raised

Located on the Long Trail five miles north of Sherburne Pass, just beyond the area assigned to the Killington Section, Rolston Roost Shelter (aka Rolston Rest), built in 1966, had seen many porcupines and better days. Supervised by Dave Hardy, GMC Director of Field Programs, and coordinated by Marge Fish of the Manchester Section, groups of volunteers demolished the structure and on 21 April applied a torch to the remains.

Later this summer a new shelter will be constructed on the same site. On the weekend of July 30/31 materials will be brought in and the foundation will be laid. The next weekend, August 7/8, Rolston Roost II will be built.

Volunteers are needed. Anyone wishing to help on any of these dates is asked to contact Marge Fish for information and directions. Phone: 802-824-3662 or, as she prefers, email: tortoise@sover.net.

In the February issue we asked:

Q1. Which crossing of a large brook on a Killington Section trail is where no brook used to be?

A1. The lower crossing of Brewers Brook on the Bucklin Trail. The brook flowed south into Eddy Brook until it was rerouted to provide water for Rutland City. (Herb Ogden).

Q2. What is the largest (population) American city that shares its name with a Vermont town?

A2. The expected wrong answer was Washington, DC (572,059). One out-of-state reader, not appreciative of the Vermont distinction between town and village, proposed Jacksonville, FL (735,617). Our answer: Baltimore, MD (651,154). (Barry Griffith).

Q2a. Name two states and four foreign countries that share their names with Vermont towns.

A2a. The states: Washington and Georgia. The countries: Holland, Jamaica, Peru and – drum roll – Georgia, a country since 1991.

Q3. Why was the old Blue Triangle camp so named?

A3. The camp, built about 1932 at a cost of $550, was a gift of the Blue Triangle Club of the State YMCA whose emblem is based on a blue triangle. Girls clubs from around the state, including one at Rutland's Longfellow School, contributed to the cost. The Blue Triangle was the only GMC shelter seriously damaged by the great hurricane and flood of 1938 and was disassembled soon thereafter.

Here's another trivia question: Vermont's first footpath in the wilderness was the venerable Crown Point Road, carved out during the French & Indian War in 1759 as a supply line between Fort No. 4 (NH) and Crown Point (NY).

Q4. In what Vermont town does the route of the Crown Point Road intersect the Long Trail? (Barry Griffith).

Outing Reports

Tucker-Johnson Shelter

21 February, 2004

By Andrea McQuade, leader

A group of new and veteran club members snowshoed from Route 4 to Tucker-Johnson Lodge on a wintry day. We had to break trail in some places, but overall the snow depth was manageable. After eating lunch at the Lodge, we decided to venture a little further on and headed for a lookout site recommended to us by other hikers we met on the trail. Light snow fell during parts of the trip, and our mascot, Dickens, made sure we kept up a good pace.

Ice Capades in Mendon

7 March 2004

By Sue Thomas, leader

Mother Nature played a nasty trick on us the week before our early March hike from Tamarack Notch to Brewers Corner – several warm, sunny days followed by a freeze turned the old road we planned to follow into a skating rink. Many a graceful double axel and spin were executed as we made our way up the icy hill, and the thought of the long slide down the other side filled us with dread. Luckily the far side of the hill seemed to be in a different climate zone, and soft snow made the descent uneventful. We stopped for lunch at McLaughlin Falls before joining the Catamount Trail for the final leg to Brewers.

Lake Bomoseen Cookout

21 March 2004

By Roma Pulling, leader

We have fired our weatherman! I mean, after delivering life-threatening cold temperatures the first time we attempted this outing, weren't we due nice sunny, warm conditions? But no, we got rain, sleet and snow. He/she is history. One potential hiker was even driven back home by slippery driving conditions on the mountain.

Al Pulling

"Doin' what comes naturally"

Nevertheless, seven people turned out and we got on with it. At the state park we occupied a shelter with a nearby grill before starting a hike on the Bomoseen Loop with Jerry and Dickens as leaders. We encountered light rain intermittently but were well bundled and took it in stride. There was some bare ground and a few patches of snow and no need to wear snowshoes. At one point we had a nice view of Glen Lake as we proceeded through the woods.

Back at the shelter, Alfred had a fire started, and we roasted hot dogs and enjoyed a great lunch with the hot cocoa and coffee provided by the Section. As we rested comfortably under the shelter roof, we could thumb our noses at a sleet storm outside. Our schedule afforded an early return home so that we were able to arrive safely before the snowstorm and slippery roads that occurred later that day.

Snake Mountain

3 April 2004

By John Hale, leader

We had the Club's oldest associate with us: 98 years old, not many teeth, but four legs and indefatigable, Dickens by name. We also had our share of mud on the old summit carriage road going up Snake Mountain.

It's named Snake Mountain because of the serpentine shape of the ridge rather than its denizens; and we followed the ridge past the tiny Red Rocks Pond to the summit taking our lunch on the foundation remains of the Grand View Hotel (circa. 1870). The view certainly is grand looking west over Lake Champlain, the Adirondacks and Lynda's school in Addison.

It was 1.8 miles up with a 900 foot change in elevation and we made it in about two hours; a very nice day outdoors with friends.

Grandpas Knob

10 April 2004

By Gordon and Helen Cawood, leaders

Someone on today's hike brought along nice weather. The hike leaders cannot take credit for this. Whoever it was: thank you. Next time make it a little warmer and a little less windy. Some hikers weren't quite prepared for the crisp weather. Seventeen hikers and one pup climbed the service road to the peak of Grandpa's Knob. It is a bald summit with good viewing in all directions except north.

Everyone stood in dutiful attention for a lecture about the experimental wind turbine that had been erected on this spot during WWII, providing electricity for CVPS for a period of 16 months. Gordon described the equipment failure in which an 8-ton steel blade was tossed 750 feet. All that is left now are 4 concrete pedestals which once supported the 107-foot tower. No-one disputed Gordon's claims. But, since then, Barbara Griffith found a more detailed write-up about the wind turbine at the Rutland Historical Society. Thanks, Barbara.

Killington & Breadloaf hikers on Grandpas Knob

For lunch, the group retired to a more sheltered spot where we could examine unusual rock formations. These are two rock outcroppings, the crowns of which were shaped by normal weathering. While the bases had been undercut, presumably, by running glacial icemelt, giving the rocks a top-heavy appearance.

Thanks for coming, all. We enjoyed your company. It made for a very pleasant outing.

Merck Forest Traverse

18 April 2004

By Larry Walter & Viv Bebee,
leaders

Initial activities involved spotting cars at the end of Hidden Valley Road on the other side of West Rupert. The weather was beautiful for all 22 of us on our hike up Old Towne Road. We eventually reached Ninorod Cabin via Birch Pond, only to retreat when several dogs made their presence known. A suitable site with a nice view was settled on for lunch. We then continued on to Bebee Pond and eventually onto Lookout Road and a nice overlook to the south. No bugs and shirtsleeve weather. It doesn't get much better.

We backtracked to Lookout Road and continued southerly to Old Town Road and then southwesterly along the brook to our waiting automobiles. This was arguably the most challenging part of the trip, trying to shoe-horn everyone into our vehicles for the return loop. After much head counting and head scratching we had everyone on board (or at least I think so). This would make a good snow shoe in the reverse direction. Let's keep that in mind.

Our youngest hike leader for a portion of the hike was my workout buddy, Kyle Bizon. Good job Kyle!

Patch Hollow

25 April 2004

By Barry & Barbara Griffith, leaders

We scheduled and advertised this as an easy Sunday afternoon hike, on the day after our Section's Saturday evening Annual Meeting and in conjunction with EMS Club Days. The thought was to offer members who support the Club by paying dues, and others who might be interested in joining the Green Mountain Club, with a chance to get out with us to enjoy the Great Outdoors, without having to commit to a strenuous trek.

It seems the strategy worked. We assembled 29 hikers. Perhaps a third of these were "regulars." A second component consisted of Killington Section members who often choose not to attempt longer forays. We also greeted a third group of non-members interested in hiking with us for the afternoon. Mission accomplished!

We proceeded to our trailhead at Spring Lake Ranch, and set off on the old wood road south toward our destination. We recalled our last Section hike along this route in 2003 on snowshoes. That required exertion -- especially by those breaking the trail! By comparison, this time the gradual upward ascent along the bare and surprisingly dry trail was easy, as advertised. We had a cleared route before us. We intersected with the AT/LT and continued south to our destination -- Patch Hollow.

This seemingly remote location was inhabited two centuries ago, and was the scene of a noteworthy homicide in 1833. We read the account of this tragedy from the History of Wallingford. Those of you who do not know of the tale are invited on the next hike to this site to learn the details! This was a perfect time of year to look for foundations of old buildings. We located two, and based on measurements concluded one was "the scene of the crime." It was also a great time of the year to look for flora and fauna which we did. The headwaters of Patch Creek, which flows southerly toward Route 140, include beavers as residents. They were annoyed by our presence, and let us know it!

Beaver Lodge near Patch Hollow

Our exploring done, we retraced our steps heading north. Upon reaching the Spring Lake Ranch property border, in lieu of a direct route back we continued along the AT/LT corridor until we arrived at Minerva Hinchey Shelter. We inspected it, and discussed its history. We signed the journal, thanking Shelter Adopter Mrs. Gorp for her fine maintenance of the site. We then struck out, diverging from the Long Trail, to the east and toward our trailhead.

We were not done. We opted for a final leg which took us to the northerly end of Spring Lake -- finally free of ice! We admired the Lake in the foreground, and the Coolidge Range -- Mendon, Big & Little Killington and Shrewsbury Peaks -- in the background to the north. An excellent view!!

From there, we finally took the road back to our vehicles. Another great afternoon in the Great Outdoors!!!

Bristol Bushwhack

2 May 2004

By Barbara Griffith

We were a party of 8 plus Dickens, leader Jerry's side kick. It was a sunny hot day for early May. We whacked through bushes and the bushes whacked back at us! Several trees along the way were pointed out where moose had gnawed off the bark.

Jerry led us first to the site of a late 1800 logging camp. Foundations for two buildings were identified. We came to the conclusion that one was a mess hall and the other a bunkhouse. Pieces of two stoves were found, one probably to heat and one a cooking stove.

After eating lunch our destination was a large rock that our leader had come upon on another trek. It proved elusive at first but was found and everyone, even Dickens, scrambled aboard for great views to the west. After photo opportunities the group descended via an old donkey trail to a cascading waterfall.

Up the trail once again and our final descent.

It was a great day to be outside.

Lowland Work Party

8 May 2004

By Herb Ogden,

Trails & Shelters Chair

The 13.1 miles of the Long Trail from Wallingford Gulf to Gov. Clement Shelter was in good to excellent condition after the season's first work party, thanks to a dozen or so volunteers.

The sector checker system set up a few years ago again proved its worth. Sector checkers were Cindy Taylor-Miller (Wallingford Gulf to Minerva Hinchey Shelter), Steve and Diana Williams (Minerva Hinchey Shelter to Clarendon Gorge), Connie and Mark Youngstrom (Lottery Road. to Lower Cold River Road.), and Barbara and Barry Griffith (Lower Cold River Road. to Gov. Clement Shelter). They fixed minor problems and told the Trails & Shelters Chair where the bigger ones were and what tools were needed, so the trail crews could focus on them. This is a big improvement over the old scheme of trying to cover all the miles with all the possible tools in one day.

Most of the problems were blowdowns, especially on the Bear Mountain sector and north of the Lottery Road. All were removed, except for a few low ones that should deter wheeled vehicles. Confusing blazes at the Airport Lookout south of Clarendon Gorge were noted and fixed a few days later. Wooden steps north of the Gov. Clement Road crossing were restored and the trail just south of Gov. Clement Shelter was moved a few feet to avoid a wet area and ditched a bit. Even with all that, at least two of the crews finished by mid-afternoon.

Our next work party day is National Trails Day, Saturday 5 June. That is when we will try to spruce up (or, in the case of certain evergreen blowdowns, de-spruce) the remaining 12 miles of Long Trail and all 9.3 miles of side trails. That is a bigger job than the lowland piece, so I hope you come and bring your friends!

Wildflower Identification Hike

16 May 2004

By Barbara & Barry Griffith, leaders

May afforded us a beautiful day and the wildflower display was spectacular. Twenty-four people showed up for this hike (plus Dog Dickens). Our destination was Little Rock Pond in Mt. Tabor. It's an easy, pretty flat 4-mile round trip hike. It's a popular spot and has camping/tenting sites (for a fee). One can walk around the pond. We chose to stop and smell the flowers instead.

Barry & Barb briefing in the park

Flowers found: common strawberry, yellow violets, Jack-in-the-pulpit, false Solomon's seal, smooth Solomon's seal, dwarf ginseng, wild sarsaparilla, Canada Mayflower, painted trillium, purple trillium, partridgeberry, pink, starflower, foamflower, Indian cucumber (some even tasted it's root), Twisted stalk and two or three unidentified. As anyone who enjoys wildflowers knows, each week one will find different flowers in bloom. It was a great day to be outside and a nice group to be with.

Killington Section Annual Meeting and potluck supper

By Jake Sherman, Secretary

The Killington Section annual meeting was held at the Lutheran Church in Rutland Vermont on April 24, 2004. The meeting was called to order by section president Steve Williams at 7:20 PM. following an excellent potluck supper.

Section President's Report

Steve reported that everything appeared to be thriving and that good hikes and other programs were taking place every weekend. We are always looking for new members and it is encouraging to find more people showing up at meetings. Steve extended a warm welcome to special guest, Andrew Nuquist, president of the Green Mountain Club, Dave Hardy, GMC Field Supervisor, and our guest speaker, David Wright of Middletown Springs.

GMC President's Remarks

Andrew Nuquist began his remarks by noting that he has been a member of the Montpelier section since 1970 and therefore knows how dependent the main club is on the work of the sections. He felt communication between Waterbury and the sections had improved in the past few years. In other areas he noted:

A bridge will be built across the Lamoille River this summer, but the Winooski crossing is still an issue and we will need to live with the present situation for awhile.

There are only seven more miles of trail to be protected and the campaign will be winding down; we will focus on being a steward of what we have.

The loss of the South Barn to fire a couple of years ago continues to be keenly felt and a three phase reconstruction plan is underway. The Centennial Capital Campaign Committee will be assessing fund raising and reporting on it at the September board meeting. There needs to be a plan for maintenance as well. Hopefully, construction can begin in 2005.

The subject of raising dues has been discussed and an increase within the next five years is likely. However, since we don't want to lose members this will be put off as long as possible.

Secretary's Report

Secretary Jake Sherman summarized the minutes of the 2003 annual meeting as previously printed in Smoke & Blazes. The minutes were approved as printed.

Treasurer's Report

Treasurer Roma Pulling distributed copies of the section's financial status. The treasurer's report was approved as presented.

Trails and Shelters Report

Herb Ogden reported the following:

The highlight this year has been the bridge over Brewer's Brook on the Bucklin Trail. Barb Griffith and Mark Youngstrom were instrumental in its completion. The new bridge is a sophisticated production and a far cry from the first span built many years ago by Herb's father.

Minerva Hinchey Shelter needs some work

Gov. Clement Shelter is a perpetual problem. We are still pursuing a three-pronged approach in attempting to curtail the activities of rowdies and partiers who have vandalized the shelter and hassled hikers. Getting ordinances in place that make roadside parking up there illegal is seen as a good first step.

We are working with the Shrewsbury selectmen and they are sympathetic.

Cooper Lodge adopter, Peter Decker, has concluded that Cooper is a lost cause. There is continued vandalism and no windows. People continue to trash it and ski off the roof. The GMC Trail Management Committee has therefore voted to close it. The shelter won't be removed but it is likely the walls will be reduced to two feet in height. The previous adopters, Ruth and Sandy Lamb, reluctantly came to the conclusion that it couldn't be saved. It is too bad since the solid CCC-built fully-enclosed structure at the 3800 foot level on Killington's west face has been one of the most attractive shelters on the entire LT. Plans are afoot to build a replacement shelter about two miles north of Gov. Clement just before you get into the softwoods.

Pico Camp is in good shape. A new privy was built there last year. The front windows have also been replaced. The current adopter is Sue Thomas.

Tucker-Johnson looks like it will need some major work. The sill is rotting.

The lower part of the Cauty trail will be relocated on USFS land.

Gary Salmon discovered a road parallel to the Bucklin Trail which could serve the ATVers.

Bill Robichaud was recognized for being a one man trail crew. He puts in a phenomenal number of hours.

Field Supervisor's Remarks

Dave Hardy, GMC Field Supervisor, reported on the following items:

Cooper Lodge will stay until there is approval to build a new shelter. Though there is a bear habitat on the south slope of Killington Peak, it shouldn't be too difficult to secure approval for the shelter. Meanwhile, the Vermont Youth Conservation Corps (VYCC) has raised the sleeping deck at Churchill Scott Shelter.

The AT/LT parking lot on Route 4 will have an engineered parking lot put in.

Minerva Hinchey Shelter is not in the federal corridor but is fortunate to have a good neighbor in Spring Lake Ranch. Work is being done with Spring Lake Ranch to get an easement to enable the shelter to stay where it is.

Rolston Rest Shelter, located on the LT five miles north of Route 4, was burned by the GMC on April 21. A replacement shelter will be constructed over the weekend of August 7-8. All materials will be delivered to within 500 feet of the construction site.

Glastenbury Tower – The U.S. Forest Service decided that the tower wasn't safe and removed the bottom two flights of stairs to prevent access. The GMC's goal is to get the tower reopened as soon as possible as it offers some of the most unspoiled panoramas in Vermont.

Lamoille Bridge – Has been mired in the Act 250 process for three years but construction will at last take place this September. It will be a cable suspension bridge.

Smoke and Blazes Report

Editor Bob Perkins reported that we continue to publish every quarter. Bob thanked the hike leaders for submitting hike reports and encouraged them to get their reports in as soon as possible after the hike.

We have an agreement with the Rutland Historical Society to house our materials.

Outings Committee Report

Sue Thomas, Outings Chair, reiterated the importance of getting hike leaders' plans in early.

GMC Director's Report

Green Mountain Club Director Lynda Hutchins reported the following:

The main club's budget achieved a balanced budget for the upcoming year but with difficulty.

The Wheeler Pond camps in the Northeast Kingdom are doing quite well.

There will be a ballot in the Long Trail News on the wilderness and wind power issues

A copy of the new LT map will be given free to anyone who donates $50 or more.

Several million dollars will need to be raised to meet the construction program that has been planned.

New Business

Retiring directors Bob Perkins, Jake Sherman, and Connie Youngstrom were thanked for their service.

Elected as new directors were John Hale, Lynda Hutchins, and Cynthia Taylor-Miller.

During a brief recess of the general meeting, the directors elected the following officers:

Steve Williams.....President
Barbara Griffith.....Vice-President
John HaleSecretary
Roma PullingTreasurer.

Adjournment and Program

The meeting was adjourned at 8:15 PM and was followed by an excellent slide show on the history of the Long Trail Lodge presented by David Wright. The lodge existed on the south side of Sherburne Pass from 1921 until it burned in October of 1968 and for various periods was owned and managed by David's uncle and father. The lodge attracted hikers and vacationers and was the site of many GMC annual meetings up into the 1950s.

Thank You, Vermont Country Store!

By Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters
Chair

The Vermont Country Store has sent us $500 to buy a couple of grub hoes or hazel hoes and wood for some bog bridges. The donation was made at the direction of the Community Action Team at the North Clarendon distribution center.

Section member Kathleen Wood came up with the idea.

This is a good time for such a gift, because we had to take several thousand dollars from the Kirk Trails & Shelters Fund last year to pay for the upper Brewers Brook bridge on the Bucklin Trail. With this generous gift, we can get grub hoes, which are the best tools to clear out waterbars and ditches. There will be over $400 left over to buy hemlock for bog bridges on the Long Trail and maybe the bottom of the Cauty Trail.

Many thanks to the Vermont Country Store and its local Community Action Team!

Killington Section outing on the Poultney River

By Lynda Hutchins

20 June 2004

On a mostly clear, bright Father's Day, nine enthusiastic seafarers (and one mutt of questionable lineage) set forth in kayaks and canoe from the bridge on Book Road down the mighty Poultney. Destination: the bridge near the Galick property, about a mile from the mouth, in which the waterway joins Lake Champlain in its meandering northward journey.

Although it may not be immediately apparent to the casual observer (what, no rapids?), this 40-mile river, which originates in the Taconic Mountains in Tinmouth, is impressive in its own regard, having been declared in June of 1991 an Outstanding Water Resource by the Vermont Water Resources Board for its outstanding natural and cultural resources.

Yes, beneath its calm, gently flowing exterior, the Poultney River is teeming with life and biodiversity, housing 55% of the fish species that live in Vermont (more species than live in any other river in the state). As if that's not enough, the river is home to 12 of Vermont's 17 species of mussels, the greatest diversity of freshwater mussels in New England! Not to mention that the Poultney has been a transportation corridor and home to many groups of people throughout the past several thousand years.

Putting in

Unfortunately, after 7.2 miles of paddling, time and the muscles of the crew gave out, and they were unable to scout for the Linnet, a sunken boat from the War of 1812 which is rumored to be visible during low water near the mouth of the Poultney. However, sightings of wildlife (a doe with fawn, Baltimore orioles, cedar waxwings, bank beaver, great blue herons), remnants of wildlife (was that the skin of a rattlesnake or a black rat snake?), good company, and a bushwhacking visit to the antiquated McFarren cemetery made for a successful voyage.

Vermontivia

In the May issue we asked:

Q4. In what Vermont town does the route of the Crown Point Road intersect the Long Trail?

A4. The Long Trail crosses the Crown Point Road in Shrewsbury, north of Route 103. You will recall that the AT/LT, before its relocation to the west, proceeded north from 103 along an abandoned town highway to Clarendon Shelter (also in Shrewsbury). It is believed that a stretch of that old town highway was a part of the CPR, which then proceeded westerly between Clarendon Gorge to the south (also in Shrewsbury) and the hill rising steeply to the north. We can't say precisely where the current AT/LT crosses the old CPR, but it was along that short stretch of the trail. (Barry Griffith, proud resident of Shrewsbury.)

Barry, so far our most prolific trivialist, has posed another in our Towns of Vermont genre. We all know that the town of Montpelier is the capital of Vermont.

Q5. Name nine state capitals, in addition to Montpelier, and three national capitals, that share their names with Vermont towns.

We've been watching the Olympic Games in Athens recently where the motto is "Swifter, Higher, Stronger". Most of the hikers I know look with some silent disdain at the compulsive through-hikers and peak-baggers who apply those priorities to our sport. We tend to enjoy the journey rather than covet the destination. One the other hand, it is fun and gratifying to reach a measurable goal. I have my own list of the high points of Rutland County towns. [See Smoke & Blazes, February 2002.]

Here's one that should be of special interest to any Long Trail End-to-Enders.

Q6. Where are the five highest and five lowest elevations on the Long Trail proper?

White blazes only; spur and side trails don't count.

Twenty-five Years Ago

By Steve Williams, Section President (The writer's browse through the Killington Section logbook of 1978-1982)

The 1978-1982 Killington Section logbook reached the writer through the kind offices of Ray Catozzi. And who but Ray himself should be leading the first hike recorded; a 3000-foot ascent to Moosilauke Mountain in New Hampshire. It was the logbook habit of the time to include both publicity notices on hikes and a few notes on the hike itself, this latter tradition now being supplanted by the notes in Smoke & Blazes.

It is instructive to read the names of some destinations no longer on our schedules (no criticism to Sue Thomas; we just need someone to come up with them as their chosen destination). Lana Falls/Silver/Lake Moosalamoo Rocks; Lake Pleiad (Middlebury Gap); Cantilever Rock (Mount Mansfield); Mount Philo; Pinney Hollow (Coolidge State Park); Moscow Pond (near Bomoseen State Park); Liberty Hill (?); Quechee Gorge; the Sawmill Ledges overlooking Lake St. Catherine; Lake Ninevah (Mount Holly) to name a few.

"End to end" hikes, which together would make up the entire long trail, appear in a number of instances, for example nineteen miles across the Glastenbury wilderness over a week-end. Sue tells me that there is now little enthusiasm in the Section for overnight outings. Whether this results from the graying of the Section's members, competing activities, or our awaiting some new enthusiasts for "over-nighting" is a point of interest.

On the other hand, other outings have a very familiar ring, for example Snowshoe to Pico; Route 140 to Route 4 on the Long Trail; Baker Peak; Merck Forest; bushwhacking to Mendon Peak; Killington Peak via the Bucklin Trail; Blue Ridge Mountain via the Cauty Trail. Likewise the workdays, both low and high level, and potluck suppers have a familiar ring.

A number of traditions seem to have disappeared. For example the "Annual Valiquette Memorial Hike" when a flag was tied to the tallest tree on East Mountain, to be seen by the residents of Rutland; a "Moonlight Hike" held as close as possible to the nearest full moon to Christmas and an annual "sugar on snow" outing when participants enjoyed maple syrup poured over snow, accompanied by doughnut holes and pickles (that's what the pre-hike publicity says). Perhaps we should ask our historian how such traditions fell by the wayside.

As for familiar names (for someone like the writer who has only been in the region for four years that is), there are surprisingly few; the Pulling family, Bernie Donohue, Jack Crowther, Churchill Scott and, last but not least, Ray Catozzi, comprising the list.

The frequency of hikes, the number of participants and the occasional cancellation for inclement weather all remain relatively unchanged. In conclusion, let's continue the traditions and move forward to enjoy the next twenty-five years of hiking in the extensive "back-yard" we find ourselves graced with!

Have You Seen Our Stuff?

By Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters Chair

Most of the Section's over 50 pieces of equipment are accounted for, but some have disappeared over the last couple years. If you've worked on the trail during that time, please check your garage or closet and let me know if you have any of the following:

- Pry bar, regular, 50" long (used for moving rocks), numbered 28.
- Sledge hammer (for rock crushing), numbered 40.
- Anvil lopper, heavy duty, numbered 44.
- Anvil lopper, ratchet, hand, numbered 34.
- Sheath for hand lopper, numbered 36.
- Day pack numbered 27.
- Fanny pack numbered 26.
- First aid kits (we had five but have none now).
- Plastic wedge, numbered 48.

If you or someone you know could give the Section the following, it would be a help:

- Heavy pry bar.
- Come-along.
- Wire basket for moving stones.
- Stone boat.
- Grub hoes (also known as hazel hoes).
- Ax sheaths.
- Bow saw sheaths, various lengths.

My law partner, John Liccardi, has given the Section its first two-man crosscut saw and a 36" one man crosscut. Thanks very much, John!

Outing Reports

Pittsford Meadow Loop Trail

29 May 2004

By Ray Catozzi, leader

A fairly large group of fifteen showed up for this easy three-to-four-mile hike with very little climbing. The Meadow Loop and the Cadwell Trail, both components of the Pittsford Trail Network, are mostly in the open so we could enjoy a close look at the meadows and Furnace Brook as well as views of the surrounding mountains.

We started at the Meadow Loop trailhead on Arch Street, across from the Pittsford fire station and proceeded south through the meadow and along the brook. After crossing a small footbridge and winding up a small hill the trail, now the Cadwell Trail, returned to follow the brook to Elm Street and the Cooley covered bridge.

Crossing Elm Street, and still more or less following Furnace Brook, we headed for its confluence with Otter Creek. But in about a quarter of a mile the trail and the adjoining meadow were flooded with over a foot of water from the recent rains.

We retreated to Elm Street and followed it north to its other intersection with the Cadwell Trail. Again we headed for the Creek but this approach, too, was flooded. So again we retreated to high ground and gulped our lunch.

Continuing in the dry direction on the Cadwell Trail, and then again on the Meadow Loop, we returned to our cars. In spite of the high water on part of the trail it was still a wonderful hike.

Amity Pond Natural Area

6 June 2004

By Roma Pulling, coleader

This could as aptly been called Lost Pond, as we never saw Amity Pond. We hiked first to Amity Pond Shelter, which faces a pond, but Fifty Hikes in Vermont describes this as a "temporary pond, part of a water conservation experiment." Amity Pond is shown on a map as being further along the trail, apparently very effectively screened by trees.

We had good weather for our hike with temperatures comfortable but not too hot. What was even better, it was one of our rare dry days. Eight people joined us at the park, and we proceeded in three cars to a small parking spot across Allen Hill Road from the entrance to the area. Leaving the shelter, we hiked an easy trail with easy grades until we reached Sugar Arch Shelter, where we paused for lunch. When the trail came out onto Allen Hill Road some distance from our cars, we followed it back to our start because by continuing on the trail we would have had to cross Broad Brook, very high water due to recent rains.

Along the trail we scared up a small bird, and some bright-eyed hikers discovered an oven bird nest, with its unique construction featuring an opening in the front, with several baby birds inside. I hoped the mother bird would not be discouraged from returning to the nest.

After a very enjoyable hike, we headed west to our home base.

Pico Mountain Loop

26 June 2004

By Ray Catozzi, leader

The last Saturday of June was a rain-threatening day. I don't like to hike in the rain but ten hikers showed up. We drove up to the new Long Trail crossing on Route 4 west of Sherburne Pass, spotted a car there, and then proceeded up to the Inn at Long Trail at the pass.

Heading south on the old Long Trail, now called the Sherburne Pass Trail, we climbed up and around to the east of the summit cone to the old Pico Shelter, where we had lunch. We then continued south along the ridge between Pico and Killington and soon arrived at Jungle Junction where the new Long Trail joins the old. The new Long Trail heads northwest and north around the other side of the summit.

About half way back to Route 4 we stopped for a break at the new Churchill Scott Shelter, named in honor of a long-time Killington Section member, officer, and hike leader. He was still alive in the fall of 2002 and able to come to the Route 4 parking lot for the dedication of the new shelter. I felt so good that Churchill could still be with us and attend the ceremony in his honor. It doesn't happen that way very often. God bless you, Churchill.

Weybridge Bicycle Ride

27 June 2004

By: Viv Bebee and Larry Walter, coleaders

We were joined by the Cohen family, (Barry, Jen, Samantha and Lena), along with Dave and Clare Coppock. The weather looked a little ominous on the way up to Middlebury, but it cleared to a beautiful day after the first five miles or so.

We peddled northerly from the footbridge on the north end of Middlebury past the Morgan Horse farm where we turned west and rode through some beautiful countryside to Weybridge Hill, then northerly on a long downhill to Weybridge. We passed a whole boy scout troop peddling up the same route, with a concentration of the older leaders pushing at the tail end.

A hard left at Weybridge brought us by the dam and then up a short, steep pitch to a west-bearing section over rolling farmland. After an easy climb to Route 17 we headed southerly, crossing Otter Creek and hooking up with Route 23. We had another short, steep pitch out of the river valley onto another nice section of farm land. It didn't look like the corn was going to make it to knee high by the fourth, but the stuff grows pretty fast.

The last climb of the day proved to be the most challenging, with half mile long, 12-percent grade pitch back to Weybridge Hill. This is a wonderful little village, with great views to the west. Samantha, our nine-year old, peddled the whole hill! We were all very proud of her. Our final three or four miles were pretty easy, with a final, steep descent to the foot bridge in downtown Middlebury, and the parking lot.

I'd highly recommend this 17 mile ride to cyclists of just about any persuasion. What hills there are, are fairly short (you can walk them in short order), and the traffic is very light. The scenery is fabulous ---truly representative of pastoral Vermont. We saw several other bikers using the same route.

Mount Horrid

10 July 2004

By the Editor

For the record: this hike from Goshen over Mt. Horrid to Brandon Gap, ably led as always by Barb and Barry Griffith, went off as scheduled.

Smoke & Blazes has chosen not to cover the story because we were scooped by our local competitor, the Sunday Rutland Herald (see the full-page spread on page B8 of their 18 July 2004 edition) and because we anticipate a complete report by President Steve Williams in an upcoming issue of our sister publication The Long Trail News.

We've had a chance to preview Steve's LTN story. All we'll say here is that it includes mention of the Donner Party and of a hiker locked in a shelter privy.

Black Mountain, NY

24 July 2004

By Ray Catozzi, leader

Once again very few showed up to drive over to climb Black Mountain. Only nine came, only five were GMC members, and only two were from Rutland. It was a beautiful day and I knew we were going to have a great view from the top.

The trail up from the east climbed very slowly; level in many places. Half way up we passed the junction with the trail that we would come down on. It went south to the left while we continued up the east trail. Soon it got rough and rocky with many spots of running water from the recent rain.

We all made it to the summit and everybody exclaimed how wonderful the view was looking down on the northern half of beautiful Lake George. We enjoyed watching all the boats going up and down the lake while we consumed our lunch.

After lunch, resting, and viewing Lake George we headed south on our downhill trail. In about one-hundred yards I led the group to an off-trail lookout with a view all the way to Lake George Village.

Farther along we arrived at a high flatland with an open-front shelter and two swampy ponds. Here the trail turned north and completed the loop by joining our up-bound trail. Then back to the cars and a drink of my famous home-made elderberry wine.

"Dickins" Parker (left) spots something of interest from Deer Leap Lookout. Dickins is one of the Killington Section's most loyal hikers, and one of our oldest. He's either 77 or 98, or something in people years.

Killington Section Directors Meeting

John Hale, Secretary

A regular meeting of the Killington Section Board of Directors was held on 17 June 2004 at the Law Offices of Barry Griffith in Rutland.

Attending Board Members:
Steve Williams, President
Barbara Griffith, Vice President
Roma Pulling, Treasurer
John Hale, Secretary
Cynthia Taylor-Miller
Andrea McQuade
Lynda Hutchins
Bill Robichaud

Guests present: Bob Perkins and Al Pulling.

The meeting was called to order by President Steve Williams at 7 PM.

Secretary's Report: The minutes of the 10 February 2004 Board of Directors meeting were reviewed. A motion was made, seconded, and passed unanimously to accept the minutes as written.

Treasurer's Report Roma Pulling reported the following account balances and membership statistics as of 17 June 2004:

Un-Restricted:

Checking.....	$1,850.24
Savings	1,124.62
Certificate of Deposit...	1,000.00
To be deposited.....	72.50

Kirk Fund:

Savings	1,509.85
CDs (3)	9,500.00

Membership:

Memberships	148
Voting Members	175

Our Section's share of members' dues is paid to us monthly as the dues are received by Headquarters. There is a natural bunching at the beginning of the year in January and February and a trickling during the rest of the year.

The Bucklin Trail Bridge expenses are fully paid and reflected in the account balances shown above.

The Kirk Fund was donated to the Killington Section in memory of George L. Kirk by his wife Dorothy Kirk in her will. Our use of the funds was restricted, as far as anyone present at the meeting remembers, to our spending only the interest earned on the grant and only spending the interest on trails and shelters. The principal was not to be touched. Anyone with a more complete remembrance of the exact terms of the gift should please contact Roma.

The sum of the three certificates of deposit listed above is the amount of the principal of the original Kirk family donation.

The Vermont Country Store, responding to a solicitation by Herb Ogden, generously donated $500 which amount was deposited into the Kirk Savings Account at Herb's request.

A motion was made, seconded and passed unanimously to accept the Treasurer's report as presented.

Trails and Shelters Herb Ogden was unable to be present at the meeting but has sent the following report. "There were ten participants at the low level workday on 8 May. A considerable number of blowdowns were cleared, particularly on the Bear Mountain Sector and north of the Lottery Road, though a few low ones were left to deter wheeled vehicles. Confusing blazes at the Airport Lookout south of Clarendon Gorge were noted and fixed. Wooden steps north of the Gov. Clement Shelter were moved a few feet to avoid a wet area. On 5 June there were nine participants for the upper level workday. Bill Robichaud and a crew cleared from Cooper Lodge through to Route 4 on the AT/LT while Sue Thomas and Jerry Parker cleared a considerable number of blowdowns and performed other maintenance activities from Gov. Clement Shelter to Shrewsbury Peak. Overall, the Section's trails are now in good shape."

Cooper Lodge: The Section received a letter from Ruth Lamb dated 30 May 2004 indicating an interest in supporting the reconstruction of the Cooper Lodge. Steve has discussed the prospect with Headquarters Director of Trails & Shelters, Dave Hardy who indicated a rough probable cost of around $15,000 for the project. It was agreed that Dave would contact the Lambs to clarify their intentions. Steve sent an acknowledging response to the Lambs and will follow-up with Dave.

Hike Leader Qualifications: The Board had a general discussion about hike leaders: what the Section should expect of a leader; how should a leader be qualified; should training be provided; should there be different qualifications for leaders of major hikes. It was agreed that further discussions with Section Outings Chairperson, Sue Thomas could lead to a Killington Section policy about who can lead hikes under what approval mechanism.

Chain Saw usage: It was announced that Jerry Parker will soon be certified by the US Forest Service to do trail maintenance with a chainsaw. Jerry joins Larry Walter in this certification and is a happy addition. We really need four or five chainsawers to keep up with our trail maintenance programs.

Ridge Runner Dinner: At the end of the summer tour of duty, the Section Board traditionally has dinner with the Ridge Runner appointed to our Section by Headquarters. This year the Board decided to open the dinner to the entire membership, to make it a pot luck dinner, and to hold it on a Tuesday or Wednesday evening during the first three weeks of September. Bill Robichaud will contact Pico to see if they would allow us to use the Pico Club House for the purpose. Steve will find out who the Ridge Runner is this year and contact him or her.

Trail Head Notices: Bill Robichaud will distribute additional trail head notices. Barbara Griffith has the Section's supply of notices.

Outing Schedule: It was reported that the next Outing Schedule (for September, October, and November) is shaping up nicely.

Newsletter: Bob Perkins said that the Section newsletter, Smoke & Blazes will next be published in the last half of August. Bob would like to see a more varied content and asked that people submit articles, pictures, jokes, cartoons or anything of interest. Submissions received by the beginning of August could be included the upcoming issue. Steve and Cindy Taylor-Miller undertook to provide articles.

Publicity: Andrea McQuade reported on the success of the Section's publicity display panel put up at the EMS store in Rutland during their Club Day this April. EMS offers a GMC Club Day twice a year in April and again in October when prices are discounted for Club members.

Outreach: Bill suggested that it would be good to promote ourselves especially to younger people who could not only enjoy nature but also help the Section with its trail maintenance mandate. Steve offered to approach the Boys & Girls Club in Rutland and Castleton College to explore ways to gather new members for the Section. Andrea offered to explore a possible tie-in with the Public School's YES (Year End Studies) program.

Governor Clement Shelter: The Section has long supported a Shrewsbury town ordinance aimed at deterring vandalism in the Governor Clement Shelter. Herb Ogden is our liaison with attorney Rebecca Rice who, as a private citizen, is drafting a parking ordinance for the town's consideration. Land now used by vandals for parking would be designated as NO PARKING areas in the evening hours and barricaded with boulders; the town constable would be tasked with actively enforcing the ordinance. Steve undertook to check with Herb about his knowledge of progress on this matter.

Main Club Annual Meeting: Lynda Hutchins reported on the Headquarters annual meeting and the main club directors' meeting held at Burke Mountain on 12 June. The fire loss of the headquarters building has resulted in a loss of revenue in addition to the loss of the asset. Rebuilding the structure will cost at least $700,000 and the practicality of a capital fund raising campaign is being studied in conjunction with a consultant. The Headquarters annual budget is extremely tight primarily because of rising costs for insurance and property taxes. A more detailed report of the directors' meeting can be obtained from Lynda.

Website: The Section website address is:

www.geocities.com/gmckillington

The site is managed by member Deb Waggett.

West Nile Virus: Barbara Griffith passed on a public health warning about mosquitoes and the possibility of their infecting you with West Nile virus. The Vermont Department of Health recommends the use of insect repellants containing DEET as the most effective.

Next Board Meeting: The next Board of Directors meeting will be held on Tuesday, 19 October at 7:00 PM at the Law Offices of Barry Griffith.

The meeting was adjourned at 9:00 PM

Muddy spots bridged on the Blue Ridge and Pico trails

Hikers on the lower parts of the Cauty Trail to Blue Ridge and of the Sherburne Pass Trail to Pico will have some relief from the mud that has been a problem in those areas for a long time. Using material financed, in part, by a generous grant from The Vermont Country Store, Killington Section Trails and Shelters Chair Herb Ogden and his crew including Marc Brierre, Rich Matteson, Sue Thomas, and Larry Walter, have started installing puncheon. The word rhymes with luncheon and means "a heavy, broad piece of roughly dressed lumber with one side hewed flat". The operative word here is "heavy". Each unit of bridging consists of two 3-inch by 8-inch hemlock puncheons either six or eight feet long, supported by two 6-inch by 6-inch hemlock sills, each three feet long, and secured by fifty-six 6-inch galvanized spikes.

About a dozen units have been carried in and installed. Herb plans to let the lumber for a dozen or so more units dry for a while to lighten the load, and then to skid it in on the snow

What's a Peak?

By Bob Perkins

While thinking about the trivia question posed in the last issue it soon became apparent to me that deciding just what is a peak in a given region, is neither obvious nor trivial. Consider Mount Mansfield. Most would agree that the Chin is a peak. What about the Nose? Possibly. The Forehead? Probably not. The Upper and Lower Lips? I don't think so. Yet from each of these points it is downhill in all directions – perhaps the intuitive definition of "a peak".

I was led to an intriguing article, WHAT IS A PEAK? by Gerry Roach in the appendix to his book Colorado's Fourteeners. Roach takes a mathematical approach to the question starting with the postulate "Everest is a peak" and proceeding logically through 18 definitions of terms including connecting ridge, relative peak, and neighbor. Along the way he defines not only summit but also sovereign, and monarch. He concludes the exposition at step 18: "If a summit is not a peak, it is a falsie".

Roach points out that even his most simplified algorithm for testing the "peakhood" of a point in the neighborhood of a higher peak depends on the selection of an arbitrary constant, say 200 feet, and requiring that the candidate point be at least 200 feet higher than the saddle between it and its higher neighbor. With that choice, the Nose would be a peak. But if we choose a constant of 250 feet, it would not be.

Clearly, it's in the eye of the peak bagger.

In the August issue Barry Griffith asked:

Q5. Name nine state capitals, in addition to Montpelier, and three national capitals, that share their names with Vermont towns.

A5. I guess this one was too easy. Herb Ogden got it "without looking at an atlas, too!" They are Albany, NY, Charleston, WV, Concord, NH, Dover, DE, Hartford, CT, Lincoln, NE, Montgomery, AL, Richmond, VA, and Springfield, IL. And Athens, Greece; Berlin Germany; and Washington, USA.

In August we also asked:

Q6. Where are the five highest and five lowest elevations on the Long Trail proper?

A6. This one was a little harder. Herb's five highest were Mt. Mansfield, Mt. Ellen, Camel's Hump, Jay Peak, and Mt. Abraham. On the authority of the Long Trail Guide I have Mt. Mansfield (Chin) at 4393 feet; Mt. Ellen and Camels Hump, tied at 4083; Mt. Abraham at 4006; and Stratton at 3936. Jay Peak is sixth at 3858.

For the lowest point, again Herb came close with Winooski River, Lamoille River, Clarendon Gorge, Wallingford Gulf, and Lower Cold River Road. From the Long Trail Guide I have the Winooski at 326 feet, the Lamoille at 500, Clarendon Gorge at 800, Route 140 (Wallingford Gulf) at 1160, and Route 9 at 1360. The Lower Cold River Road is at 1400. [See a related article What's a Peak on page 1].

Here's one based on a suggestion from Herb Ogden:

Q7. What two mountains within ten miles of Sherburne Pass has the Long Trail, at one time or another, gone east of and gone west of but never gone over?

New trails opened in Rutland's Pine Hill Park

A number of trails in Rutland City's Pine Hill Park have been upgraded recently and several miles of new trails have been built. Volunteers working with Cindy Wight of the city Recreation and Parks Department have lain out, cleared, built, marked, and signed trails and constructed bridges. The trails are multi-use; mountain bikes are allowed on most but a few are reserved for pedestrians.

A full color map, about seven inches square (reproduced, right), can be requested from the Rutland Area Physical Activity Coalition (RAPAC) at 802-353-0037.

The Spirit of Long Distance Hiking

By Mrs. Gorp, aka Cynthia Taylor-Miller

An old Chinese proverb says that a journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step. My journey on the Appalachian Trail began on May 20, 1977. This is the date I first stood on Springer Mountain in Georgia. That summer I would hike 1,560 miles to Route 11 in Manchester, Vermont where I left the trail to return to my junior year at the University of Connecticut. After two intervening years during which I constantly thought about completing my journey, I eventually returned to Vermont in August of 1979 to begin the final 500 miles of my 2,060-mile hike to the northern terminus of the Appalachian Trail in Maine.

I was nervous leaving the trail head on Route 11 in Manchester even though I had 1,560 miles under my belt. I was not in the same rock hard shape I was when I had stopped in 1977, but I was happy to be back on the trail. I knew from experience that I would be able to build up my endurance level within a couple of weeks and I was looking forward to being able to hike thirteen to fifteen miles each day. I knew not to push myself during the first week. Let the endurance build slowly and go with the flow I kept telling myself, but I was somewhat impatient as I started north. After a long day of hiking I settled into a relaxed mode and the fun of the trip began to overtake me. I was finally doing what I had wanted to do for two years. I was going to savor every moment of my hike.

The trail in southern Vermont is blessed with several wonderful swimming holes. I did not pass up the opportunity to swim at Stratton Pond, Griffith Lake, Little Rock Pond and the Clarendon Gorge. My primary gear consisted of an external frame, blaze orange Camprail backpack, Vasque leather boots, cotton and wool clothing, a Svea 123 stove, Eureka Timberline tent, and a Gerry down sleeping bag. I still have the sleeping bag and I might even wash it someday. I'm not in any rush. The stove still works; at least it did three years ago. The boots, now too small for my older, wider feet, are sitting on a rack in the garage. I just can't bring myself to discard them.

In 25 years some of the names of shelters have changed. Sunnyside Camp is now the Minerva Hinchey Shelter and Tamarack Shelter, where I took refuge from an afternoon thunderstorm, no longer exists. I have returned to Springer Mountain three times since 1977 and once to Katahdin in Maine. This past summer I hiked 870 miles on the Appalachian Trail to complete a second re-hike of the entire Appalachian Trail.

Over the years I've seen many changes. The trail has been relocated, fields have grown in, new shelters built, shelters renamed, shelters torn down, more women hikers, and lighter improved gear. However the one thing that remains unchanged is strong spirit of long distance hiking in my soul.

In The North Woods

By Roma Pulling

As Alfred and I drove into Pittsburg on a recent trip to northern New Hampshire, a large sign loomed in front of us welcoming us to "The North Woods." Before we could get too wrapped up in contemplating breezes in the pines, the fragrance of balsams and the high-pitched whistle of the white-throated sparrow, I noticed a familiar sight down a side street: The Golden Arches.

We had driven to this area in search of the headwaters of the Connecticut River. Years ago we had visited Third Connecticut Lake in the mistaken belief that we had reached the source of the river only to read later that Fourth Connecticut Lake was the actual beginning. So we were there to complete our quest. In order to allow ourselves more time, we spent the night in Pittsburg with plans for an early start the next day.

To reach Number 4 one drives to U. S. Customs at the Canadian border on Route 3. There is a parking lot on the right near a border marker with the trailhead on the left. We arrived early dressed for cold temperatures, which proved to be a wise move. Signs and a brochure informed us that the area was preserved by the Nature Conservancy, which acquired it as a gift from Champion International Corporation. The trail is about a mile long and quite steep, but we felt a sense of accomplishment at finally gazing at the Connecticut's start. The lake is the smallest of the four Connecticut lakes but gives rise to New England's longest river. It consists of two and a half acres and lies at an elevation of 2670 feet. The trail winds in and out of Canada several times with small brass plaques in the ground at each crossing. And no Customs stations!

We spent the afternoon of our first day hiking on the Gore Mountain Trail in the town of Norton and in Avery's Gore but had to turn back because we didn't have time to reach our goal of Gore Mountain. A destination for another trip! We wanted to reach Newport, where we planned to spend the night.

The third day of our trip was the real gem. We planned to meet three hikers as they emerged from the woods on the Long Trail at the Canadian border. One of them was completing his End-to-End that day. Over a period of at least eight years we have helped this gentleman along the way and on the day in question were going to take him and his two companions to their car parked in Hazen's Notch. We wanted to stop on our way up the Journey's End Trail to see the new shelter, Journey's End II. To our surprise, the old shelter, which we had stayed in back in 1983, was still standing. We wished we could stay in the new shelter but had to press on. We did reach the border in time to meet the hikers at the completion of their trek and gave the new End-to-Enders our congratulations.

What a pleasant trip we had! We hope for many more of the same.

Outing Reports

Otter Creek, Proctor to Florence

By Barbara Griffith
14 August 2004

Putting in our vessels just below Sunderland Falls in Proctor the five of us with leader Jerry Parker were rewarded with the unusual cascade of water over the scenic marble ledges. Usually one only encounters this sight in the spring time when snow and ice are melting. A rainy wet summer sure changes things. The seven-mile trip was a fast one with the water coming close to the top of the creek's banks. We were zipping right along. Last year we encountered snags and even had to portage at one point. Not in 2004! No snags were even seen. We soon floated under the newly refurbished Gorham Bridge admiring the workmanship that had gone into it and the rock façade over the concrete abutments. A feature that we were sure would have been missed if we had been viewing from above. Lunch was enjoyed beside Furnace Brook which was roiling out into the Creek. A bench was nicely placed beside one of Pittsford's many trails for our repast.

Onward the flotilla continued, spotting a herd of cows chewing their cuds under one of the many massive silver maple trees that line the creek. As we continued our journey we encountered a long legged tall white bird on the shoreline across from the cows. What could it be? Jerry identified it as a cattle egret, rarely spotted in Vermont. (Its presence was reported to the Rutland Audubon Society). We went over Pitt's Ford noting that it would have been difficult to ford with anything other than a boat today. A side trip was taken a short way up a side creek to the small falls that mark the waterpower site of one of Pittsford's earliest mills. We shot out of that stream back to the creek and finished our trip taking out at the Hammond Covered Bridge in Florence. In the 1927 flood this bridge was lifted off its abutments and carried more than a mile downstream where it came to rest. It survived with the strength of the lattice truss design and was moved back to its original spot the next winter. What a fast river run adventure we had been involved in!

Haystack and Beyond

22 August 2004

By Steve and Diana Williams,
leaders

This "Haystack" refers to the one in Pawlet, Vermont, and none of the three other "Haystacks" in the state.

The group comprised Ray Catozzi, Gerry Parker, the leaders, and two friends of theirs, Rob Holbrook and Cyndy Warner. While originally scheduled for Saturday 21 August, it was postponed to Sunday because of rain and limited visibility on Saturday morning.

The outing started on Waite Hill Road in Pawlet; ready parking being available at the foot of the private Tunket Road.

The first stop up the Tunket Road was the home of Philip and Erin Ackerman-Leist where Philip had graciously agreed to present a little (very) local history. Philip teaches a number of environmentally related subjects at Green Mountain College and recently worked with three students to research some history of the area on behalf of the Nature Conservancy. Amongst the group's findings were that the original settler's route from Pawlet to Castleton was not the current Route 30, presumably because such a route would have passed Lake St. Catherine and exposed travelers to the bad "humors" then associated with such a lake. Philip commented on the local settlement of "Tunket" which is evidenced by some five or six local cellar holes. It would seem that the settlement came to an end in the early twentieth century; a situation Philip is now rectifying by building his own house there.

Mettawee valley from Haystack

From a map of 1867 it seems as though the main Pawlet-Castleton route was originally along the Tunket Road, on the east side of Haystack, Middle and Bald Mountains, and could well have been developed from an Abenaki track.

Philip gave two possible meanings of "Tunket"; "the route between two hills" being one, and as a euphemism for hell as the other; "Go to Tunket" having been a local expression of disfavor.

However, back to hiking which was, after all, the original intent. The route, branching off Tunket Road just below the Ackerman-Leist property, was mostly gently graded, but with one steep pitch which, with the recent rain, was slippery, particularly for the return journey.

The summit provided excellent views of the Mettawee Valley, Lake St. Catherine, the Adirondacks, and the Greens, including Killington and Pico.

About half way down the descent, the day's route left the main trail and joined an old logging road traveling north. With two changes of direction onto new tracks (found by the leaders as a result of talking to Pawlet and Wells residents) and half an hour's walking, an open meadow was found with a fine overlook over East Wells. From there some meadow meanderings led to the leaders' car previously spotted just off the East Wells Road. For the parking spot at his home and permission to cross the meadows thanks are due to Phil Russell, President of the Manchester Section of the Green Mountain Club. In spite of the in-between transitions from one logging track to another, and the apparent disappearance of Tunket Road, the final few hundred yards from Phil's house out on to the East Wells Road was again on "Tunket Road".

The conclusion was wine, lemonade and cheese at the Williams. However, for that to take place, thanks are due to Gerry Parker for capturing, and removing in a glass jar, a bat, which had elected to rest under the Williams' unfurled sunshade. We hope that the bat is now happily ensconced with Gerry's neighbor who collects his, or her, species.

Glen Lake Overlook

19 September 2004

By Bob Perkins, leader

It was a beautiful early fall day. Nineteen people and two dogs voted approval with their feet (46 to 0) of our scheduling an easy Sunday afternoon walk. We proceeded through the pines along the lake shore and across the bridge at the lake's narrow neck. There the leader, who had previewed the route several months earlier, was mildly embarrassed by a sign indicating that the trail from that point was temporarily closed due to logging operations.

Not to be stymied by this inconvenience, we decided to follow an alternate trail that seemed to start off in approximately the right direction. After a half mile or so, however, our alternate trail turned north while our destination was to our south. As a last resort we followed a logging road south for a short distance until the mud forced us to give up and head for home.

But our story has a happy ending. On the way down chief scout Jerry Parker, noting a huge rock close by, explored off-trail and located an easy route to the top of an out-cropping. We enjoyed a fine view of Glen Lake, very much like that from the temporarily closed overlook.

Burnt Rock Mountain, Fayston

25 September 2004

By Roma Pulling, leader

Years ago when we had completed hiking the Long Trail and then photographed all the 70-some shelters, we were searching for a new challenge. We decided on hiking as many of the side trails as possible and one day set off for Fayston with a party of KS hikers to hike the Hedgehog Brook Trail. Since then I had had a couple of requests to hike the trail again; so on the above date we met 11 hikers at the park. There was some grumbling about the early hour, but we explained that it was a long drive to the trailhead. We picked up two other people on the way, one in Killington and one in Hancock.

On our first trip we had sauntered easily at the start over two bridges and past a camp and were very disappointed to find that the lower part of the trail had been relocated at the request of the landowner. The route immediately plunged down into a ravine over huge boulders, crossed a rushing stream on wet, slippery rocks, and climbed a rocky bank on the other side. The trail never got much easier.

As Alfred and I are slower than we were on the first trip, our plan was to climb as far as we could, eat our lunch and then head back down in order to be in the parking lot to greet the rest of our group when they returned. We met eight other hikers and nearly as many dogs but were back at our cars when the summiteers got back. They reported meeting the 81-year-old end-to-ender whose picture was in the paper not long before our hike.

This was not a hike we would usually schedule these days, but we wanted to show that we aim to please.

Shrewsbury Peak

By: Barbara & Barry Griffith,
leaders

2 October 2004

Iffy weather did not deter a large crowd of trekkers from a walk up to the 3720-foot tall Shrewsbury Peak. Rain gear in packs, we gradually ascended the gated Black Spruce road up to the blue blazed trail. This area is known as black bear habitat with a very large forest of beechnut trees. It's now only 1.4 miles to the summit. Once on the blue blazed trail about halfway up on the left is an overgrown area that in the 1970s one could envision where the clearing for a ski area stood. The CCC camps built and maintained this area back in the 1930s. We reached the peak for lunch. Soon clouds parted and we were rewarded with beautiful fall colors, good companionship, and crisp clear air. On a good day from several rocky views to the southeast one may see Mt. Ascutney, Mt. Kearsage, and Mt. Monadnock. To the south are Ludlow Mountain, Bromley, and Stratton.

A few hikers descended the same trail while the others moved down the rocky trail to the "chimney" parking lot. This trail descends steeply through dense balsam fir into a sag, then climbs to the summit of Russell Hill (elevation 2540). At the top is a well (unsafe) and a log lean-too. There is then an easy descent back down to the parking lot by the CCC road. We were all glad that doubtful weather didn't discourage this trip!

Susie Peak

30 October 2004

By Ray Catozzi, leader

This would have been a nice climb to the top of Susie Peak in Clarendon with its rocky outcropping on the top looking east toward the Rutland airport, and northeast toward Rutland. But we never made it for two reasons.

First, after we parked at a big red barn on the North Tinmouth Road, I missed the turnoff onto a dirt road that goes right between a farmhouse and barn. We walked south on the North Tinmouth Road for quite a long way before I realized my mistake. We retraced our steps, found the turnoff, and walked west toward the trailhead.

But before we got to the trail we heard continuing gun shots farther up on the mountain. That was the second reason we didn't climb Susie Peak.

Killington Section Directors Meeting, 19 October 2004

By Barbara Griffith, Acting Secretary

Attendance: Board members present were Barbara Griffith, Lynda Hutchins, Roma Pulling, Cynthia Taylor-Miller, Sue Thomas, and Steve Williams. Guests present were Barry Griffith, Herb Ogden, Bob Perkins, and Al Pulling.

The meeting was called to order by President Steve Williams.

Secretary's Report: The minutes of the 17 June 2004 Directors meeting, as published in the August Smoke & Blazes, were amended to indicate that section member Kathleen Woods, a Vermont Country Store employee, was responsible for the $500 gift from Vermont Country Store. With that correction, the minutes were accepted.

Treasurer's Report: Roma provided the following data:

Checking account	$731.68
Cash on hand	$135.00
Savings	$1126.31
CD	$1396.43
Kirk savings	$1509.85
Kirk CDs	$13,195.27
Memberships	91
Voting members	145

She noted that the Kirk Fund has increased by $500 because of the Vermont Country Store donation. The report was accepted.

Trails & Shelters Report: Herb reported on the Cauty Trail work. More puncheon needs to be added to the muddy section of the trail and perhaps some "turnpiking" will be needed. The extra cost would be $52.20. A motion was made and passed to fund that amount for the extra puncheon needed. Herb intends to skid stuff in during the winter months.

Herb is looking into the Last Wills of the Kirks to better enable the Club to understand the Kirks' intentions as to spending of the principle or interest from the Kirk Fund.

Herb sends out notices prior to work projects to garner helpers.

Cindy has reported to the Main Club that there are now blazed ATV trails on Bear Mt.

Governor Clement Shelter Update: Barbara reported on the continuing efforts to protect the shelter from vandalism.

There is a cost estimate of $8,000 for a gate including posts, abutments, and barriers. It was suggested that the town supply the labor. Barbara and Barry Griffith will attend the 20 October meeting of the Shrewsbury Select Board at which gating will be discussed. They will report back to our board.

A parking ordinance is still being considered and Forest Service signs of "No Motorized Vehicles" have been offered.

Outing Attendees: There has been concern that, for some outings, people show up who do not have the physical condition or level of experience appropriate for that particular event. We discussed whether we should be doing a more thorough job of screening outing participants.

It seems that other GMC Sections do some pre-hike screening and limit the numbers allowed per outing by omitting the starting time and place from the published schedule. This requires the would-be hiker to call the leader in advance and gives the leader a chance to discuss the level of difficulty of the trip and to explore the caller's qualifications.

Some of the hike leaders present liked this approach; others felt that fielding the phone calls would be a burden or that they would be uncomfortable rejecting an applicant. After some discussion the board decided to experiment with the following compromise:

The schedule published in Smoke & Blazes, which goes primarily to Section members, will contain starting time and place as at present. However, for the schedule published in the public media, each hike leader may choose to publish starting time and place or to require potential hikers to call them for the information.

In addition, we should try to provide, both in the schedule and at the meeting location, a more complete hike description including items such as elevation gain, distance, amount of time expected for the outing, and degree of difficulty.

Publicity: Our publicity panel will be on display at the upcoming discount day at Eastern Mountain Sports. The panel is currently in the Rutland Free Library.

Outing Schedule: Sue reported that the winter schedule is in progress

Smoke & Blazes-Bob reminded hike leaders that November first is the deadline for registering winter outing dates with Sue.

Steve will look into the possibility of including advertising in Smoke & Blazes. Circulation is about 175 copies per issue including a copy to each GMC section president and newsletter editor.

GMC Waterbury Directors' Meeting: Lynda attended the 18 September meeting at Stratton Mountain. Her in depth report of that meeting included the following highlights.

Random membership survey results were discussed.

There is an urgency to get on with fundraising with a $5 million goal. Feasibility study results were reviewed.

The mission of the GMC needs to be clarified. Maybe the club should get out of some wilderness groups such as Chittenden Bank 2-for-1 deal. The GMC shouldn't back down to political pressure on issues such as ATV use in the wilderness.

Next meeting: The next Killington Section Board meeting will be 15 February 2005 (the third Tuesday), at 7:00 PM at Barry Griffith's office

Outing Reports

Buck Mountain, NY

9 October 2004

by Sue Thomas, leader.

We had a record turnout for the hike up Buck Mountain – almost 200! Well, OK, they weren't all in our group, and we learned a valuable lesson – steer clear of the entire Lake George region on Columbus Day weekend.

The trail begins right at the lake shore, at a large parking lot that was already nearly full. Later arrivals told us they circled like vultures waiting for a spot to open up, and when we left cars were parked down the road for at least a half mile.

We started up the trail a few minutes behind a group of 28 kids and adults from a Schenectady youth organization and soon overtook their tail – two large ladies in inadequate shoes who clearly had no idea what they'd signed up for back at headquarters! They were good natured about it though. We offered some encouraging words and moved on.

The hike up was uncrowded, but not so the summit. We managed to find a patch of rock to call our own, off to one side, shielded from the hoards by a screen of trees, and had a peaceful lunch. It really is a beautiful summit – the rocks are studded with garnet crystals and below stretches Lake George dotted with islands, sailboats and the toney Sagamore Resort. How often do you get a chance to “look down on” the rich and famous? Across the lake is Tongue Mountain, known for rattlesnakes and behind it the Adirondack High Peaks.

Yes, fewer people would have been nice, but we had a good day. The only down side was the behavior of the youth group – nice kids all when we spoke to them, but apparently no one had ever told them to pack out their trash. We did, and they seemed genuinely bewildered. I hope before their next excursion they'll get some instruction on how to behave in the woods. In the meantime we collected several bags of water bottles in their wake.

Coming down we were surprised to meet the same two ladies, still gamely trudging on. I sincerely hope they made it to the top eventually. They certainly earned it.

The biggest disappointment of the day came when we discovered my favorite ice-cream shop closed – Oh no! We drowned our sorrows with make-your-own sundaes at Stewart's and the day was saved.

Chittenden Brook

4 December 2004

by Sue Thomas, leader

Surprise, surprise – winter bypassed Rutland and dumped a load of snow right where we planned to hike. Most of us were not as prepared as we might have been, but we managed to slip and slide up the Long Trail from Brandon Gap, arriving at Sunrise Shelter in time for lunch.

With the steepest climbing behind us we could then turn our attention to the beauty of the new snow on the trees – a Christmas card everywhere you looked. Moose were lurking – we saw plenty of tracks

A question based on a suggestion from Herb Ogden was posed in the November issue:

Q7. What two mountains within ten miles of Sherburne Pass has the Long Trail, at one time or another, gone east of and gone west of but never gone over?

A7. The Long Trail was west of Deer Leap till about 1969, then east, then west since the recent relocation. The Trail was east of Pico Peak and is now to the west. [Herb originally asked about a three-mile radius. I thought that was too easy and changed it to the ten-mile radius. After all, how many mountains are there within three miles of the Pass? Ed.]

The Killington Section remembers Diana Williams 1938 – 2005

By Sue Thomas

A few years back when Herb retired as Killington Section President we faced a bit of a dilemma. The annual meeting loomed, and no one willing to take up the reins could be found. What to do? Then salvation – Steve and Diana Williams made the colossal error of not attending the meeting and, not there to defend himself, Steve was duly elected. Blissfully unaware, they joined us for a hike in Dorset the next weekend, and truly thought we were joking when we said "Oh, by the way,...". When we finally succeeded in convincing Steve that he was in fact the President of the Killington Section, Diana was bemused. "I guess that makes me the First Lady," she remarked.

That gentle good humor was one of the gifts she brought to enrich our outings, along with a great appreciation for the outdoors, curiosity about the flora, fauna, and history of the region, and a good natured determination to keep on, no matter the steepness of the hill.

Last year the hill got very steep. Throughout most of 2004, while Diana struggled through the ups and downs of chemotherapy and endless hospital visits, she remained a presence on our hikes and never out of mind. We kept tabs on her progress and hoped our good wishes would help speed her recovery and return her to us on the trails.

In fact, she is very much with us these days as we think of her often when we slog up the hills, enjoy a beautiful view, examine animal tracks in the snow, and laugh at Dickens' stylish wardrobe. I'm sure I speak for the entire Killington Section in extending our condolences to the Williams family, and our appreciation for the time she spent with us. She will be missed

The Golden Years

by Roma Pulling

Nearly everyone has heard this euphemism [ha!]. Of course the younger generation puts it another way: We're "over the hill" or "older than dirt." [Blunt, but closer to the truth.] And then there are those who ask, "But what do you DO???" [Now I'm beginning to get annoyed.] So from all us golden-aged, over-the-hill delinquents, here is one way we keep occupied.

We have been asked how hikers who do a one-way hike get back to their cars. That's where we and a few others come in. They call us for help, and we meet them at the end of their trek and take them back to the beginning and their parked car. Or we meet them where their car is parked and take them where they want to start their hike. Here are a few examples of aid we have given:

In 1995 a gentleman called from Tampa, Florida, about a hike he and others wanted to do in October. We were pleased to do so, but the day they planned to fly into Albany airport was a day when the fringes of a hurricane crossed through this area. It seemed unlikely anyone could fly to Albany in that kind of weather or that anyone would want to hike in it, but we had promised to be there to meet them and they hadn't canceled. So we drove to our meeting place, and as we thought, no one was there. But we decided to wait a while, and an hour later they showed up. We took them to their trailhead over a Class 4 road in the rain, dark and fog. As we let them out of the car, I heard one say to the other: "I'll get you for this, Rich."

In 1997 we received a request for assistance from a hiker in New Jersey who wanted to be picked up in Glenclyff, New Hampshire, and brought back to Sherburne [this was before the recent silliness]. We don't usually drive such distances, but the end of the trip was near home, wasn't it? So we were at the meeting place at the appointed time. We had time for a short hike on the AT. It was a really remote area, and it began to get dark. And I began to get nervous. We locked all the windows and doors and settled down for a long wait. In an unusually short time, considering their drive from New Jersey, the two gentlemen showed up and were transported back here.

My last example is about a gentleman from Georgia who has been hiking in Vermont every year but one since 1996. We look forward to his call every year now. This year he completed his End to End, and we were there for him. This is one way for the Over-the-Hill Gang to keep occupied.

Outing Reports

and rubbed trees, but they didn't seem interested in socializing and never showed themselves.

From a gap in the trees we were treated to a beautiful panoramic view of the very white White Mountains just as a large flock of geese flew across the valley in the foreground. No doubt they also had been startled by winter's sudden appearance and were hurrying to their condo in Miami.

We descended the Chittenden Brook Trail as gracefully as possible under the circumstances, awarding extra points for style, and emerged just at dusk.

Brooklyn to South End

2 January 2005

by Herb Ogden, leader

We may have set a statistical record on this hike. Nearly 1.5 per cent of the population of one town turned out for it. That was three people from Mount Tabor, my home town since July 2004. If the same thing happened in Rutland City, we'd have about 250 hikers! Of course, I don't mean to slight the participation of the rest of the dozen hikers and two dogs who showed up on a cool, gray afternoon with freezing rain in the forecast, either.

We began at the U.S. Forest Service work camp in Mt. Tabor Village, otherwise known as Brooklyn. The new building is well underway. It replaces one used by the Civilian Conservation Corps during the Great Depression. Jerry Parker brought along a book of photos of CCC projects and people, and it was much appreciated. The two Brooklynites explained a further aspect of the CCC work: the two structures with tiny windows, massive cement walls, and thick metal doors just south of the work camp were used to store explosives.

After climbing up onto a plateau past a split boulder that one Danby hiker remembered playing on as a child, we reached the end of the passable road, managed a tricky brook ford, and followed a woodroad along the east side of a beautiful beaver pond. Near the marshy south end of the beaver pond, at the foot of the Green Mountains, I pointed out a stone log landing. This was the northern end of the Emporium Lumber Company Railroad, built in 1906 to haul logs to a mill between South End Road and Otter Creek, then on to the Rutland Railroad at the South End of Mt. Tabor. Continuing south on the woodroad, I pointed out the railroad grade running through a grove of red pine. Since it was abandoned in 1916, parts of the grade are hard to make out. We headed west from the railroad grade and woodroad to explore an area of many stone walls and a possible esker. If I had known, we could have gone a little farther west to a cellarhole and a small cemetery. As it was, we returned to the woodroad and railroad grade, heading south. Soon after we crossed a causeway with a stone culvert (pretty substantial for a logging railroad), I pointed out a switchback. Three more of these used to bring the rails down to the level of Otter Creek. We took the higher woodroad, passed a cellarhole, and climbed over a little ridge to see the icy, spectacular cascade of McGinn Brook. Following the brook down, we saw the ruins of a water powered mill, and Jerry found a piece of old machinery. By this time, the freezing rain had begun, and we were happy to reach my house on Casey Hill, overlooking South End, where hot beverages and goodies awaited us.

South Pond, Chittenden

8 January 2005

by Viv Bebee & Larry Walter, leaders

We had a good turnout for this one, with 14 heads counted at the trailhead. The weather was agreeable, with some snow showers on the hill and some windy conditions by the Pond. The route is a retracement of an abandoned side trail of the Long Trail, running easterly from Lefferts Pond just over the ridge to South Pond.

The majority of the trail falls within the National Forest, but near the top of the ridge it enters private property, owned by Bob Ashton. (603-643-1851). If you want to hike to South Pond, Mr. Ashton only asks that you let him know you'll be up that way. He does not allow ATV's or Snowmobiles on his property.

The route has not been blazed for years, so you have to really watch for old, blue paint, especially on the upper section. Dave Coppock kept us on course where things got steep and ill-defined. Anyone using this trail in the winter would be well advised to wear snowshoes with crampons or some other traction device, as it gets a little dicey towards the top. (There is an alternate route up an old timber road which branches off of the trail and crosses the brook, but warm weather had eliminated the ice bridges which had been available last week.)

The pond itself sits in a nicely cleared area, just below Bob's place. He and his caretaker came down to visit while we were eating lunch on the leeward side of a utility building. This is a nice hike through some large maple, ash and birch, with evidence of moose activity (we followed some tracks near the bottom). I had rated this hike as moderate, but in winter it probably should be listed as difficult.

Pine Hill Park

15 January 2005

by Andrea McQuade
& Tad Tucker, leaders

A group of 13 hikers enjoyed a six-mile outing in the Pine Hill Park area, which is located in Rutland City. The trails were snow covered enough for hiking boots, but not enough for snowshoes or skis. The hike on this trail system was far easier than getting across the parking lot, which was sheer ice. Our group saw quite a variety of trees and other vegetation, as well as a splendid view of mountains to the north, including Blue Ridge and Pico.

Hot Dogs at Minerva Hinchey

6 February 2005

by Roma Pulling, leader

What a great day we had! After last year's struggle with cold temperatures, sleet and drizzle, the sunshine and ideal snow conditions seemed almost miraculous. We left the park with ten people and were met at Spring Lake Ranch in Shrewsbury by four more people and one dog. And oh yes, by two flocks of turkeys, which make the ranch their home.

Piling the fire wood and food items we had taken with us on two plastic toboggans, we donned snowshoes and started up the trail to Minerva Hinchey Shelter. While Alfred and one of the Toms built a fire in the fireplace in front of the shelter, Dickens and his owner took a large group on a hike down the Long Trail and via a loop, back to the shelter in time for lunch. Jean and I took a shorter hike north on the trail. Accompanying the roasted dogs were potato chips, mustard, ketchup, rolls, cookies, hot chocolate and coffee.

As we wound down the lunch phase of our outing, I heard a challenge: "Let's build a snowman!" Soon several of us were at work on what? It started as a snowman but acquired ears and a tail, more like a snow rabbit. The next hikers are probably still scratching their heads.

As we put out the fire and packed our supplies for the return trip to the cars, Sue told us of ice cutting at Spring Lake. We were off to see this operation, which I hadn't seen since I was a child. It was being done in the old way with hand saws, nary a chain saw in sight. Several chunks were lying around that we could examine, but no workers were there on Sunday.

We had a wonderful day and were pleased to share it with such a fine group.

Baker Peak, Mt. Tabor

12 February 2005

by Viv Bebee
& Larry Walter, leaders

The weather cooperated nicely with a fresh eight-inch layer of new snow, on what would otherwise have been a pretty icy trudge. A dozen souls made the hike today. The weather was near perfect, at just below freezing, with hardly anyone wearing hats on the way up.

The trail head is accessed from a small, plowed lot off of South End Road (a couple miles south of Danby). The route runs up some beautiful old stands of White Pine and along a brook, which you eventually cross. We easily crossed the brook, which was at low flow.

About half of the trail is routed along an old carriage road used in the early 19th century to access a tourist lodge built by lumber baron, John Griffith. The inn is long since gone, but the old road grade survives surprisingly intact.

Once the trail switches back to the north, you cross into wilderness just before you walk under a large conifer windfall. We caught glimpses of the Danby Mine on the opposite side of the valley and crossed a nicely built foot bridge which is anchored on the west of a rock face. You can still see the pieces of solid bar-stock cemented into the rock which supported a much larger bridge for the carriages.

There is a nice lookout above this rock face that is accessible with a brief scramble from the road. Herb Ogden managed to sneak in a brief side trip to the lookout on our return from the peak. The first major view from the road occurs at a sharp bend around a second rock face, which is visible from Route 7, especially in the winter. To this point, we had encountered fox and coyote tracks, among others, in the fresh snow.

The old road then turns up a major ravine. If you pay attention, there is at least one spot where the old pull-outs and dammed livestock watering pools are still evident. At the head of the ravine, you cross the creek, leaving the old carriage road behind and climbing northeasterly, with a moderate grade, on old logging roads.

There is one spot where the trail makes a sharp, and very poorly marked right turn (at a big yellow birch), straight up the hill about 500 feet to another old road where it continues back to the left. It's a shame this section could not be better marked, wilderness or not. I plan to ask the Forest Service for permission to do so.

When you near the exposed, rocky final ascent, there is a sign marking the bad-weather by-pass which swings you to the right of and eventually to the back side of the summit. We took that route on the way back down, where we paused for lunch.

As far as difficulty ratings, this trail should be marked difficult when there's only ice on the rocks, or when the runoff levels are high.

Killington Section Directors Meeting, 15 February 2005

By: John Hale, Secretary

The meeting was called to order by President Steve Williams at 7:00 PM in the law offices of Barry Griffith.

Board Members present:

Steve Williams, President
Barbara Griffith, Vice President
Roma Pulling, Treasurer
John Hale, Secretary

Lynda Hutchins, Delegate to GMC
Cynthia Taylor-Miller
Bill Robichaud
Sue Thomas

Others present:

Barry Griffith
Herb Ogden
Bob Perkins
Al Pulling

The minutes of the 19 October 2004, Board of Director's meeting were considered. A motion was moved, seconded and passed unanimously to accept the minutes as written by Barbara Griffith.

Treasurer's Report Roma Pulling reported the following account balances and membership statistics as of 2/15/05:

Unrestricted:

Checking	$2,135.71
Petty Cash	150.00
Savings	1,127.16
Cert. of Dep.	1,602.01
	$5,014.88

A motion was moved, seconded and passed unanimously to accept the Treasurer's report as presented.

The Governor Clement Shelter was discussed. Herb Ogden said the Green Mountain Club (GMC) Trail Management Committee has met and decided that if the Town of Shrewsbury does not improve its policing of the shelter to reduce the incidence of vandalism, the Club will be forced to remove the Governor Clement Shelter and build a new one further up the trail between Clement and Cooper. Herb asked the Committee to postpone its decision until our Section and possibly the Town of Shrewsbury, could respond.

Barbara and Barry Griffith told us that incidentally, the Town of Shrewsbury is equally concerned about the vandalism at the shelter and environs and has a remediation plan under consideration. The cost of the plan is already proposed in the Town budget for the coming year.

The Town's plan involves the Sheriff and his deputies patrolling the area with specific frequency during the summer months from Memorial Day to Columbus Day.

At Herb's request, it was moved, seconded and passed unanimously that President Williams should write a letter to the GMC Trail Management Committee requesting them to postpone their final consideration and any decision about the Governor Clement Shelter until the fall of 2006. That would give the Town of Shrewsbury two full summer seasons to apply their new plan and would give all parties opportunity to evaluate the plan's effectiveness.

Herb told us that plans for the bridge over Gould Brook are well advanced. The site will be scouted this summer and the bridge will most likely be built next summer.

Herb said the Cooper Lodge will be torn down by the GMC, likely some time next summer. Those who care for the Lodge cannot keep up with the vandalism; the drug use at the Lodge is a significant issue; and the Lodge is so close to the ski trail as to be an attractive nuisance for skiers who go off the trail from there and get lost. A new tent platform (later to be joined by a new shelter) will be constructed about two miles south of the existing site prior to demolition. The foundation will be preserved enough to show future generations where the Lodge was.

This summer's trail work days will be held on Saturdays, 14 May and 4 June.

Herb asked for another Section Checker volunteer to help monitor the trail from Cooper Lodge to Jungle Junction to Route 4. Bill Robichaud does that section now all by himself.

Herb reported that the GMC Headquarters has asked our Section for ideas and suggestions about how to disable the old Route 4 parking lot access and how to re-vegetate the area. After some discussion, the Board indicated a preference for large boulders at the roadside but is quite comfortable leaving the final decision to Headquarters in conjunction with the VT Highway Department.

The Section policy of screening hike participants was discussed. The Board has empowered each hike leader to decide whether to put the time of meeting in the Rutland Herald announcement. If a leader chooses not to put the time in the paper, participants must call the listed number and speak with the leader who will determine the person's suitability for the planned hike. Leaders may choose alternatively, to include the meeting time rather than be available for telephone calls. The policy is in place and the Board decided to keep it under continued review.

President Williams reached out to Mr. Steve Lulek of the Rutland Rock Climbing Center to explore any natural connections between our two organizations. The Section cannot offer a commercial endorsement of the for-profit Center but our Publicity Panel is currently at the Center and Bob Perkins sends the Center our newsletter. Bob offered to assure that outing schedule section of our current newsletter is publicly posted at the Center.

Our Publicity Panel is a bulletin board which displays Section and Club information. It is a traveling signboard that Andrea McQuade manages.

President Williams, Lynda Hutchins and John Hale will meet with Kate White, Capital Campaign Director. Ms. White is looking for suggestions about how best to approach potential donors in the Rutland area.

The Killington Section notices will be posted at all trailheads after the Annual General Meeting.

The Section's Annual General Meeting will be held at the Rutland Lutheran Church on Saturday, 23 April. At that meeting, the Board will nominate Barry Griffith to be a new Board Director and will re-nominate Steve Williams and Barbara Griffith as Directors. Bill Robichaud was thanked for his term of service on the Board; he has served two three year terms and must retire from the Board according to the bylaws.

Roma Pulling has a copy of the Section's Bylaws and will make copies available to any interested party.

Lynda Hutchins reported on her attendance at the Headquarters Directors Meeting held on 22 January. Some of the topics are:

- *The Club will likely meet its financial budget this year although expenses are currently over budget by about $20,000.

- *The Club contracted with Demont and Associates to manage the upcoming capital campaign. The campaign has been extensively thought through and will be executed over the next two years.

- *Annual Club dues will be increased in the various categories: individual memberships for example, will increase $5 from $30 to $35 per year.

A more complete presentation of Lynda's observations, the formal dues increase proposal, and the details of the capital campaign are available upon request. Rutland High School will offer a hiking program as an extra curricular activity for students and has requested that a Killington Section representative address the students to explain our club and its activities. Bill Robichaud and Steve Williams volunteered.

Bill Robichaud told us that a representative of the Green Mountain Forrest approached him asking to be invited to address the Section about their programs and plans. A time and place for this speaker will be determined.

Sue Thomas reported that the next Outing Schedule is mostly done; and Bob Perkins said that publication of the next issue of Smoke & Blazes is well in hand. Cindy Taylor-Miller said the Section's website is working well.

The next Board meeting will be at the Annual General Meeting on 23 April at the Lutheran Church.

The meeting was adjourned at 9:00 PM.

Apology To The Sector Checker For Route 103 To Lottery Road

Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters Chair

In the fall of two thousand and four
We needed one sec-checker more.

You spoke for this sector
And went out and checked her
And sent your report furthermore.

With thanks I received it
And away I did file it
In my cyber file oh so secure.

But there it expired!
My computer'd acquired
A lot of spy junk on its disk.
I had it removed
By an expert approved,
But one thing did put me at risk.

No one made a backup
Before he did hack up
The info that lived on that disk.

So now you may take me to task if you wish,
Yet still I must ask you --
Who are you, and what's your address?
And how is your sector?
And has it been checked o'er?
And if 'twas a mess
Send to my address
A report, and the mess we'll redress.

Vermonttrivia

Our trivia question in February was:

Q8. What was the former name for Spring Lake?

A8. Spring Lake used to be known as Shrewsbury Pond, after its town.

This raises the question as to the difference between a lake and a pond. My dictionary was of little help: Lake: an inland body of water larger than a pond and Pond: a body of water smaller than a lake. A cursory internet search produced a couple of additional suggestions. A lake is large enough to have a wind-swept beach. A pond is shallow enough to maintain fairly even top-to-bottom temperature, and to support rooted plants, even away from shore.

Clearly, Vermonters don't feel constrained, even by the dictionary definitions. There are plenty of small lakes and large ponds. Consult your Vermont atlas and compare, for example, the sizes of Lake Elfin (Wallingford), Lake Madeleine (Sandgate), and Lake Pleiad (on the Long Trail in Hancock) with the sizes of Great Avriil Pond (Avrill), Island Pond (Brighton), or Joes Pond (Cabot).

Apparently Lake has a desirable connotation that Pond lacks. Not only did Shrewsbury Pond become Spring Lake but Dog Pond (Woodbury) became Valley Lake, and Ray Pond (Wilmington) is now Lake Raponda.

Here are two more posers for your consideration:

Q9. What Long Trail shelter, not far from Rutland, once featured the only piped-in running water shower bath on the Trail?

Q10. What three Long Trail shelters were named after former secretaries/clerks of the Green Mountain Club?

Outing Reports

Shrewsbury to Lake Ninevah

19 February 2005

By Barbara & Barry Griffith

The hike to Sugar Hill Reservoir in Ripton, scheduled for this day, was cancelled due to cold, windy, blustery conditions. However, nine people showed up for the early start of the hike and decided: "What the Heck? Let's go somewhere". Where to go? All were dressed appropriately for the weather with multiple layers, had food, and a desire to press on. The default leaders proposed a snowshoe outing retracing a segment of the old Crown Point Road visiting old cemetery sites along the way.

Following an abandoned town road off the Tabor Road in Shrewsbury, we stopped to pay our respects at the Woodward-Wilder Cemetery in Eastham. According to the Vermont Old Cemetery Association this cemetery has 18 graves, was first used in 1827, and last used in 1874. A lot of work has been done here to upright markers and fence the burial ground against domestic animals pastured nearby.

Eventually the trail joined a VAST trail bringing the group to the northeast end of Lake Ninevah where we then visited a newly found old cemetery with Wilder family markers. Lastly, before the return trip we explored the site of an unknown Revolutionary War soldier's grave and nearby encampment. This grave is near the top of a fairly steep knoll, with a DAR flag and marker.

Returning to our vehicles we agreed the lesson in history was enjoyable.

Military Road, Hubbardton

27 February 2005

By Barry & Barb Griffith, leaders

As the American Revolution began in the spring of 1775, Ethan

Allen and the Green Mountain Boys staged a surprise attack, capturing Fort Ticonderoga. A crude road was thereafter cut from the Fort through Hubbardton to the older Crown Point Road and Rutland. Soldiers and supplies passed over this road from New England to the American garrison. Troops retreating from Fort Ti in July 1777 fought a rear-guard action on this road – the only Revolutionary War battle fought on what is now Vermont soil.

Some 230 years later, thirteen of us gathered on a mild February morning to retrace a portion of the old Military Road. We convened at the Hubbardton Battlefield State Historic Site. The Visitors Center is closed in winter, but the parking lot is plowed. On snowshoes and one pair of skis, we descended the short but steep hill to the East Hubbardton Cemetery, where some of the town's earliest settlers are buried.

We headed in the direction of Fort Ti, proceeding northerly across Sucker Brook, then climbing and turning westerly through a saddle below Sargent Hill. It is a natural route, and is used by local snowmobilers, so we had a well-set trail to follow. At the height of land, we ate lunch, and tried to catch a glimpse of Lake Bomoseen and what lies beyond.

It was time to retrace our steps to the Battlefield. We marveled at how the troops had managed to advance up the steep hill under fire, in wool uniforms and with heavy packs on a hot July day. We inspected nearby Pittsford Ridge, and reviewed how the remaining American forces withdrew from the area to fight another day. We then withdrew ourselves, having enjoyed a good day in good company.

Shrewsbury Bushwhack

12 March 2005

By Barbara Griffith

Undeterred by an ongoing blustery snowstorm seven snowshoers braved the conditions to venture out into the wilderness with their leader, Jerry Parker, exploring wildlife habitats and tracks. Parking was abundant at the vacant Plymbsbury Wildlife Management area parking lot. We ventured high and low in our search, being rewarded with animal tracks and the freshest of moose signs. Relentless in our pursuit, the moose was even more evasive! As soon as fresh signs of animals were deposited these signs were hidden beneath the falling snow.

One track resembled a giant trough in the snow. Perhaps a giant snow snake some ventured? Alas, not so. Per our guide, this was an otter trail. The slide impression made by the locomotion of the paws in pushing and/or pulling it along. This trail was quite impressive to see.

Our picnic lunch was enjoyed in cover beneath a canopy of evergreens. Returning to our vehicles we bade a safe trip to those returning to Rutland on very snow-covered roads.

All agreed the day out in the elements was most enjoyable. What better way to spend a snowy, blustery day, inside the warmth of one's home or outside romping around in the cold?

Herrick Mountain

20 March 2005

By Larry Walter, leader

Luck was with us on this one, with beautiful weather and nine brave souls willing to traipse off through the uncharted (Kinda...Tom had his GPS) woods. Early spring is a good time to go, with most of the motorized traffic back in the garage, leaving still decent snow and warm temperatures. We did have some icing problems with some of the aluminum snowshoe parts. I'll try to remember to pack some vegetable oil spray next time. It took about two hours of northward shoeing to reach the best view point, which is actually about a mile south of the peak. We had lunch there and enjoyed views of the back side of Bird Mountain and Grandpa's Knob, plus Marcy and Giant in the Adirondacks. Three of our party turned back at this point with the rest of us forging onto Herrick. Most of the remaining route was along an existing sled trail, making things easier, despite my faulty memory resulting in an unnecessary ascent of a steep little bluff. (We took the easier route on the way back.). A couple of us chose to turn back at the base of the final climb with the remaining four making a surprisingly quick run to the top. We had regrouped on the return trip when we were passed by a couple of sleds moving at a respectful rate. They lost some of their cargo on the trail (a chainsaw). We alerted them to their loss when we met up at the lunch spot. Nice fellows, who seemed to be having a good time, but I think I'd still rather go motor-less. After leaving the lunch spot, the majority of the hike is predominantly down hill with plenty of nice views along the way to the east and west. We saw plenty of evidence of a couple of resident porcupines along the way. The Spruce Knob Road to the 'trail' head can get a little rutted in March, as it was this time. Please contact Carolyn Kenny (802-235-2727) should you wish to hike from the end of this road, as well as John Wilfert (802-457-3567) upon whose land you'll spend a considerable amount of time. John's land is bounded by a yellow-painted, blazed line.

Griswold Peak, Hubbardton

26 March 2005

By Barry & Barb Griffith, leaders

This was a hike inspired by a newspaper article. We read that the highest point in Hubbardton had its name officially approved by the State of Vermont. We have hiked many places over the years, but never to Griswold Peak. We had to pay it a visit!

Thirteen of us (plus Dickens) joined in the adventure. Scheduling a hike in late March is always a challenge. We found that there was still ample snow in the higher elevations of the Taconics, so we made good use of our snowshoes for the last time this season.

There is no trail to Griswold Peak. Consulting topographical maps, we organized on the East Hubbardton Road and struck out easterly toward our destination. We ascended logging roads early, surprised at how deep the snow was when we attempted a short cut! As we climbed we found evidence of a recent logging operation, near the Castleton town line.

When we approached the crest of the ridge, it was time to start bushwhacking to the north toward our goal. We scrambled up a challenging rise. We were eventually rewarded by a nice view of Lake Bomoseen and the Adirondacks to the west. We ate and took in the scenery. Then, after consulting GPS readings, we continued our climb.

After another half-hour, we arrived at the summit. The view from the top was worth the climb. In addition to the view to the west, we could now see in all directions. We identified peaks all along the Green Mountain range, and had spectacular views of the Otter Creek valley below. We celebrated our accomplishment.

The trip back down was uneventful. We took a more northerly route for variety, and were pleased to come out where we expected. Tired but with a feeling of achievement, we returned home and slept well.

Pond Woods Refuge, Orwell

9 April 2005

By Bill Holt, leader

Joan and I just started hiking with the Killington Section about a year ago. We have had some wonderful experiences on all of these hikes, so we thought it was time we led a hike ourselves. Adjoining our property are 2,111 acres of state land used mostly by the critters who live there and the occasional hiker, hunter, or fisherman.

The day of the hike, April 9th, was all blue skies with just the right temperature for a ramble in the woods. Twelve hikers and Dickens started out around midmorning following a faint trail through a mixed forest of hardwoods and conifers. Soon we came onto an old logging road which made the walking very easy. After about a half a mile we came to Mud Pond.

The pond is about ten acres including the swampy end that we came out on. The pond is very tranquil and is surrounded on the east and west sides by steep hills rising a hundred feet or so above the waters edge. We made our way along the west side of the pond following an animal trail. Underneath a hemlock someone spotted a bunch of chewed up twigs littering the ground. Sitting twenty feet up the tree was a bashful porcupine hoping that we would think he was just a bump on the branch. The area we were in had many hemlocks, a favorite food for the sloth like pincushions.

Throughout the day we went up many slopes that led to dry oak and hop hornbeam areas surrounded by sedge grasses. Then down we would go again into the ravines where the hemlocks were more prevalent. We soon came upon a five-acre beaver pond where a painted turtle was reluctant to leave its warm log. Just then, Jerry caught a ribbon snake which promptly bit his hand. He hung on until we all got a good look. Then it started to exude that special snake oil smell and we set him free.

We had a nice lunch beside a larger body of water known as Spruce Pond, although we've never seen a spruce anywhere near it. While eating we spotted a couple of blue herons and a hawk flying over. After lunch we started a slow climb up another ridge rising to a height of 950 feet above sea level. That's about as large as the hills get over here before succumbing to the Champlain Valley. From this perch we were able to see Bird Mountain and some of the Green Mountains beyond.

From here we went down and around yet another pond, called Doughty Pond. We followed a very narrow deer trail through a thick hemlock woods near the edge of the water. There was around a 15-degree temperature drop in these woods compared to the ridge we were just on. Up and down we continued. Then we came upon a large red oak with a gaping hole near the base. Coming out of this hole was a pile of porcupine scat three feet high and wide. We knock on the hollow tree but no one was home at the time.

Nearing the end of our hike we passed through another ravine that brought us to the shores of Lake Sunset. A couple of the hikers recognized the spot where we came out as the place where they were certified for scuba diving. We followed the shore along another old logging run to finish our hike. We probably covered seven miles in all, and from the beginning to the end it was much fun.

Lowland Work Party

14 May 2005

By Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters Chair

A good turnout of a baker's dozen allowed us to do almost everything that was needed in the south half of our section of the Long Trail, between Wallingford Gulf and Gov. Clement Shelter. Four people worked north from Wallingford Gulf to north of Patch Hollow, sawing small blowdowns and digging out waterbars. Seven dug a four foot deep hole for the privy at Minerva Hinchey, moved the privy about 15 feet to the new site, surveyed the bad sill situation at the shelter, and dug out some waterbars working south to meet the above party. Two folks sawed a big blowdown and cleared waterbars between Clarendon Shelter and Hermit Spring, north of the Lottery Road.

The rest of this part of the trail was already in good shape, thanks to Sector Checkers and Tom Shanahan, a freelance volunteer who is good with an ax. Much of this stretch does need to have the blazes repainted. Indeed, most of our Section does. I hope some of the summer work parties described elsewhere in this issue can accomplish that. Care is needed to blaze according to standards, so it is better to learn from someone experienced.

We now have a better way to move privies. We have two eight-foot long two by fours with several 3/8" holes about two feet in from the ends. Lag screws go through the holes and attach the 2x4s horizontally to opposite sides of the privy at about waist height. It is then a simple matter for four people to pick up the privy like a sedan chair, carry it to the hole, and position it exactly. This sure beats tipping the privy on its side and then tipping it back up at the new site while hoping it will be positioned right, and it takes fewer people.

"All together now, 1...2...3..."

Buck Mt., NY via Hogtown

21 May 2005

By Steve Williams, leader

A Rutland contingent having been ably led there by Sue Thomas, the Fair Haven Visitor Center was the assembly point for eleven Eastern Adirondack enthusiasts and two dogs, whose later actions suggested that they too were enthusiasts. The Hogtown route to Buck Mountain provided a follow-up to the climb from Lake George where Sue Thomas led us last year. Perhaps it should be called "Buck Mountain Lite", as the elevation gain is only 1100 feet as opposed to 2000 feet via the Lake George route.

From Fort Ann one follows County Road 26 almost to the village of South Bay through a pretty valley reminiscent of the "Hidden Valley" of salad dressing fame. Four miles of wooded and steadily climbing unpaved Hogtown Road and another 1.7 miles of unpaved Shelving Rock Road follow.

From the trailhead the well-blazed trail undulates in three dimensions for approximately one and a half miles before becoming steeper and heading for the summit. From the summit, on the east side of Lake George, about one third of the length from the southern end, there are great views of much of Lake George and the Adirondacks, including a number of the high peaks.

Upon the return to the trailhead, Sue Thomas offered to lead the party to Shelving Rock Falls; falls which Sue found after diligent searching of a large number of streams which flow beneath Shelving Rock Road. The majority of the group then made the two-mile drive and half mile walk in to the falls which, with a cascading drop approaching 150 feet, are well worth a visit.

With a day when the temperature was up and the black flies down, the outing appeared to be a success.

Killington Section Annual Meeting

By Barbara Griffith,
Acting Secretary

The annual spring meeting of the Killington Section was called to order on Saturday, 23 April 2005 by President Steve Williams. A welcome was extended to members and guests. Those assembled were entertained by statistics that Steve had compiled from the past year's hikes. According to Steve's report the average hike elevation gain was 666 feet, the total elevation gain was a hike up Mount McKinley and the total mileage was equivalent to a jaunt from Brattleboro to St. Albans. Dog Dickens was given honorable mention for logging most doggie miles.

GMC President, Andrew Nuquist spoke about the presentation of the 50th Anniversary pin to former Governor and End-to-End Howard Dean. Andrew spoke of the Headquarters budgeting process. The Club is now in the "quiet phase" of a capital campaign. The GMC Club is now 95 years old and looking forward to it's second century.

Field Supervisor Greg Western addressed current issues, "sprucing up" the new parking lot on Route 4 and re-vegetating the old lot so that it will no longer be feasible to park there. In this process seeds and hay are available to work with and there are plans to relocate trees from the nearby forest to the old lot. A time line for this is this spring. Greg is looking for volunteers for this project. The new lot is designed to accommodate 30 cars.

Treasurer Roma Pulling reported on the Section's General Fund and Kirk Fund.

Secretary's and Treasurer's Reports were approved.

Trails and Shelters Chair Herb Ogden reported that he is contacting sector checkers. Primary goals for 2005 will be the Minerva Hinchey privy relocation, Minerva Hinchey Shelter repairs, and puncheon for the Cauty Trail.

[Note: According to the By-Laws: "The activities of the section shall be managed by a Board of Directors, consisting of nine members. The Directors shall be nominated from the floor and elected at the Annual Meeting. The terms of office of the Directors shall be three years, with three Directors elected each year. A Director who has served two full consecutive terms may not be re-elected until one year has passed".]

Elections were held to fill three three-year terms on the section board of directors. Barbara Griffith and Steve Williams were nominated and reelected to second terms. Barry Griffith was nominated and elected to fill the vacancy created by the expiring second term of Bill Robichaud.

The Board now consists of the following: Directors and their terms:

Director	Term expires
Andrea McQuade	2006
Roma Puling.....	2006
Sue Thomas.....	*2006
John Hale.....	2007
Lynda Hutchins	2007
Cindy Taylor-Miller	2007
Barbara Griffith.....	*2008
Barry Griffith	2008
Steve Williams	*2008

*Second consecutive 3-year term not eligible for re-election

The Directors then met and elected the following officers for the coming year: and reported the results to the Section.

President:.....Barry Griffith
Vice President Barbara Griffith
Secretary: John Hale
Treasurer: Roma Pulling
GMC Director:Lynda Hutchins

Barry assumes the gavel and, on behalf of the Section, extended a Thank You to out going President Steve Williams for all of his hard work and dedication.

Meeting was adjourned followed by a slide show presentation by Paul Pilcher.

The next meeting of the Board of Directors will be at 6:00 PM on Tuesday, 21 June 2005 at Barry Griffith's office, 98 Merchants Row.

The Intersectionals

By Roma Pulling

This word is probably a mystery to our newer members, but when I joined the club it was the highlight of the GMC year. When I first read about them in Long Trail News, I thought they sounded like a lot of fun; and I was able to take part in several of them. For a week every year ending on Labor Day, campers from every section got together somewhere in Vermont for a week of hiking and other outdoor activities. A former Killington Section member recalls that these campouts started in earnest at the time of the Green Mountain Club's 50th anniversary, although shorter ones had taken place even before.

The golden anniversary was held in 1960 at Mt. Norris [Eden]. I participated at Camp Plymouth, Camp Sunrise [Orwell] and Camp Thorpe [Goshen]. I have been told about ones at Tamarack Notch, Grout Pond [Stratton], Camp Ondawa [Sunderland], Twin Hills Girl Scout Camp ["the Wind Tunnel"] in southern Vermont and even one in Massachusetts.

My favorite activity was the evening bonfire and sing-along. The leader for this event was "Frenchy" Garfield from Sudbury, Massachusetts. He was a real spark plug and wasn't allowed to get away until he had led us in the song "Alouette," his specialty. Second on my list of favorites was the Saturday night supper. Other events included the auction with Frenchy as the auctioneer and sometimes a square dance with a real caller.

Several things probably killed the Intersectional. A group of campers started to get together in the fall for a weekend, and others preferred to come for the annual meeting, which used to take place on Memorial Day weekend. A few diehards came to Vermont even after the Intersectional was officially out of existence and enjoyed time in the Green Mountain State together, but even that eventually came to an end.

The Intersectionals probably never will be resurrected, but those of us lucky enough to have been there will never forget them.

Appalachian Long Distance Hikers Association

An event similar in spirit to the lamented GMC Intersectional is the Gathering of the Appalachian Long Distance Hikers Association. This year's Gathering will take place on 7, 8, and 9 October at Dartmouth College in Hanover, NH. The ALDHA is a nonprofit group, open to all fellow hikers who've shared experiences on the Appalachian and other Trails. Check the web site at www.ALDHA.org. Ray Catozzi has said the Gathering is an event not to be missed.

Pitch In This Summer

By Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters

Our list of things that would improve our trails and shelters is so long that we cannot do it all on the May and June walk-throughs. We have projects great and small. Here is a sampling:

Various stretches of the Long Trail need their white blazes renewed. Directional arrows are needed here and there. Waterbars and ditches should be cleaned out or added in several areas, notably between Vermont Route 103 and the Lower Cold River Road and in the Killington-Pico saddle. The bog bridging project on the Cauty Trail up Blue Ridge Mountain should be completed. Minerva Hinchey Shelter needs one or more sills replaced and a new roof. Privies there and at Clarendon Shelter should be moved to new pits. Gov. Clement Shelter needs new roof shingles, especially around the chimney and bottom eave. Pico Camp needs window latches and an eaves trough in back. Finally, while Cooper Lodge and Tucker-Johnson Shelter are not our Section's responsibility, plenty of work can be done there if people are available.

To reduce our backlog and to accommodate folks who couldn't make the traditional May and June work parties, Cindy Taylor-Miller suggested that we plan some July and August work parties – some on Wednesdays and some on weekend days that wouldn't conflict with other outings. (See the Outing Schedule on pages 3 and 4).

If these don't fit your schedule or if you prefer to work alone, we can still accommodate you. Just contact me, Herb Ogden, at 293-2510 or hogden@vermontel.net and I can tell you what still needs doing and get you the right tools or supplies.

Club members heed the Call of the Wild

By Lynda Hutchins

On 29 June 2005, six intrepid members of the Green Mountain Club set out to relive the stampede's 1897-1898 Klondike quest for gold, following in Jack London's illustrious footsteps. Expedition members were Lynda Hutchins (Killington Section), Paul Houchens, Phil Hazen, and Kathy Adams (Burlington Section), and Dave Blumenthal and Lexi Shear (Montpelier Section). Boarding a shuttle from Skagway, AK, to Dyea, the enthusiastic group embarked upon the Chilkoot Trail, a 33-mile trek, teeming with archeological artifacts and spectacular scenery, leading up over the Chilkoot Pass into Canada. The trail, which terminates at Bennett Lake, British Columbia, passes through multiple climate zones, including lush coastal rainforest, subalpine, alpine, subalpine boreal forest, and dry forest/sand dunes.

Undaunted by the 45-degree angle of the unrelenting "golden stairs" and several false summits of the Chilkoot, the group was relieved that their 40-plus-pound backpacks came nowhere near the 100-plus-pound packs the stampede's lugged. (This was in compliance with the Canadian government's directive to pack a "ton of goods" per person to Dawson City, mostly accomplished through multiple trips to the summit, where goods were stockpiled until fully assembled and then carted by boat or make-shift raft to Dawson -- if they were not swamped en route).

Arriving on foot at Bennett Lake, the GMC group claimed canoes and equipment, and previously mailed drop-off boxes (delivered by an outfitter via the White Pass rail), and began the 550-mile paddle to Dawson City in the Yukon Territory. A series of waterways presented, including Bennett Lake, Nares River, Nares Lake, Tagish Lake, Tagish River, Marsh Lake and, of course, the mighty Yukon!

The adventuresome group, with its fledgling sailing skills, decided to enlist Mother Nature's assist in harnessing waves and wind power over the lakes, erecting a makeshift sail for the three lashed canoes, with tarp, ropes, logs, and paddles, using a third paddle for a rudder. The system worked rather efficiently (notwithstanding rudimentary ship-building skills!), with a top speed of 5 mph attained, many of the crew lulled to sleep with the reciting of Robert Service poetry (i.e. The Cremation of Sam McGee). Mother Nature further bestowed the benefit of a strong current on the Yukon, often making paddling a sweet

Our first trivia question in May was:

Q9. What Long Trail shelter, not far from Rutland, once featured the only piped-in running water shower bath on the Trail?

A9: Pico Shelter was an open-faced structure built on the Long Trail in the mid 1920s. (It was replaced in 1959 on the same site by the current Pico Camp, now on the Sherburne Pass Trail). The spring is about 100 feet north of the site. I remember that in the early 1940s there was a rustic, open-topped, enclosure to the east of, and downhill from, the spring. A series of carefully placed, grooved logs directed spring water to the top of the enclosure providing, as far as I know, the only shower bath on the Long Trail. Was it invigorating? YES!

The other question from May was:

Q10. What three Long Trail shelters were named after former secretaries/clerks of the Green Mountain Club?

A10: Minerva Hinchey Shelter, near Spring Lake in Shrewsbury, and well known to Killington Section members, was named in honor of Miss Hinchey, who served as Corresponding Secretary of the statewide Green Mountain Club for 22 years from 1955 to 1977.

Lula Tye Shelter, near Little Rock Pond in Wallingford, was named in honor of Miss Tye, who preceded Miss Hinchey as Corresponding Secretary for 29 years from 1926 to 1955.

Willis Ross Camp, built on Stratton Pond in 1929, burned in 1972. It was named in honor of Willis Ross, a leader in the construction of the original Long Trail south from Killington to Prospect Rock, and who served for a number of years as Clerk (Recording Secretary) of the statewide club.

In posing this question I overlooked a fourth answer. The Willis Ross Annex, built across the bay from Willis Ross Camp in 1934, burned in 1952, was rebuilt in 1953, and dismantled in 1961.

It's interesting to note that all three of these honorees were Rutlanders.

Sunset Hike, Pine Hill, Rutland

25 May 2005

By Roma Pulling, leader

The musical sound of the melodica rang over Pine Hill as we sang "Red Sails in the Sunset" and "You Are My Sunshine," but it had no effect on the weather. When we finished our short concert, the skies were still cloudy and threatening. No sunset that night!

Five of us had gone to Pine Hill in a hopeful mood and had stopped halfway into the hike for light refreshments. By that time it seemed unlikely we would see the sun that evening, whereas if we hurried back to town we could perhaps get to the library in time to watch a slide show about hiking which, without our knowledge, had been scheduled on the evening of our hike.

It seems to me this outing is worth scheduling again, another time, and perhaps in another place. Stay tuned.

Otter Creek, Clarendon-Rutland

19 June 2005

By Barbara Griffith, co-leader

Rivers and streams swollen with recent heavy rains, roads washed out, and news reports of calamities had us all wondering about this trip. This section of Otter Creek from the Creek Road in Clarendon to Park Street in Rutland, a stretch of about 13 miles, had been beckoning to me for some time. As a responsible leader I had an alternate trip planned. However Otter Creek crested during the night and had receded to what all participants agreed was a safe "Club" adventure. One thing about high water on the Creek – it eliminates most "snags" which we call those stringers or walls of refuse that can occur across any narrowing body of water. They consist of trees, trunks, junk, rubbish, basketballs, and at times have sand and mud involved with vegetation growing abundantly.

One such snag portage was necessary in the 13 miles – not bad at all! Silver maples lined the banks. There were multitudes of nesting birds greeting us, or warning us off. Kingfishers were plentiful as were a variety of ducks. Cliff swallows nesting in the high creek banks came swooping at us. There were king birds and oh, so many more.

There are no falls or rapids in this area of the Creek. It meanders through farm country, alongside corn and hay fields. If you trace it as the crow flies from our put in to take out on a topographical map it is a bit over six miles. So you can imagine all the twists and convoluted turns involved. Abutments of several bridges from long ago line the banks. A number of these appear in the middle of nowhere.

Please come with me on our trip. I'll denote mileage from our launching to some locations when I can in parenthesis.

Donning personal flotation devices, checking supplies of insect repellent, lunches, water, sunscreen, and cameras, off we paddle heading north on the "Indian Road". Mill River flows in just before our launching site. We paddle upstream a bit, but the current is strong. So with the current we go. The Creek Road looms up above the bank to our left, or west, as we rush by heading north. Sand banks are spotted on our right with sand pipers abundant. The creek swings away from the Creek Road (1.25 miles) and wanders east before crossing under the Walker Mt. Road bridge (2 miles). Just past this bridge is the site of an old ford from pre-revolutionary days but, as we zip by, the water is too high for us to see any evidence of the ford. From here it seems as though we do loop-de-loops as we twist hither and yon. Around a corner we turn and hear rushing water. "What's that?" we wonder as there are no rapids on our agenda. It's a massive snag with volumes of water rushing over and under. Discretion being the better part of valor, we pull our kayaks out and notice that others have done so before. We pulled and carried the five kayaks around on land and put in safely on the other side.

Who knows where lunch was enjoyed? It was on a sandbank somewhere on the Creek. We passed in back of Mill River High School (6 miles), and made our closest approach to the railroad tracks since Walker Mt. Road. The Crown Point Military Road forded the Creek somewhere near this location. Just beyond Otter Valley Supply Lumber Company, several brooks rush into the Creek. We keep paddling! Soon, or not so soon (8 miles), the Alfrecha Road Bridge greets us. Barry quips "We are more than halfway there!" Hmmm, "Perhaps we should have spotted a 'get away' vehicle here." I retort.

Onwards we paddle seeing the Creek Road once again (10 miles) before encountering the Cold River as it rushes into the Creek. At this point the volume of water does increase, but the Creek also widens. Here the Creek bends back almost upon itself; we go directly west, take a sharp turn and go back to the east-north-east!

What's that up ahead? It's the four-lane Route 4 Bridge. We must be nearing out destination! Another old bridge abutment reminding us of covered bridges from the past, and a prior crossing marks the place where we parked our vehicles many hours before (12 miles).

A great day; a trip completed. With sore, tired muscles, we take out, bid each other adieu and leave with a feeling of good companionship and a sense of a day well spent.

Deer Leap Mt., Killington

25 June 2005

By John Hale, leader

The new parking lot on Route 4 had been finished only the week before when we ten (humans, plus Dickens) met there for our Saturday hike up to Deer Leap Overlook. It was warm in the sun but we enjoyed a breeze even in the forest.

The trail from Maine Junction would have taken us on to Katahdin but after a quick vote, we continued toward the Leap. We quickly separated into two speed groups and the five leaders (and the GPS) were out of hearing when the trail unexpectedly started (and continued) going down. The second five commented, deliberated, back-tracked and then re-tracked (correctly) down the trail finding the fore five after their lunch at the Leap, ready to start home.

Viewing Pico from Deer Leap

We agreed to separate and four headed down the mountain, while six lunched and enjoyed the view of Pico and the valley before starting down (with the GPS) back around Deer Leap Mountain on the Appalachian Trail finding the Maine Junction again before descending to the parking lot, energized and grinning.

Some of us had gone 2.8 miles, going up and down about 550 feet of elevation; some about a mile farther and a couple hundred feet more elevation change.

Bird Mountain

2 July 2005

By Barbara Griffith, co-leader

Bird Mountain, in the Taconic Range, has a prominent 2216 foot rock outcrop. Barry and I gleaned some historical information about Bird Mountain, or Birdseye as some locals call it. Tidbits of our research are:

- From the History of Rutland County: Colonel Bird spent an unscheduled night "on the summit of a precipitous mountain" circa 1767, thus the name Bird Mountain. Some say he woke up and had a "Birdseye View" of the panorama below.
- From the Vermont Fish and Wildlife Department website: The Department now oversees the Bird Mountain Wildlife Management Area (BMWMA) which has 175 acres in Ira, 115 acres in Castleton and 350 acres in Poultney.
- From the History of Bird's Mountain Masonic Monument: the Masons erected a monument on the top on August 27, of 1886. When the corner stone was laid there was a great ceremony with over 2,000 participants. This Masonic Monument was later struck and demolished by a bolt of lightning. We have it from a local mason that many of the bricks were retrieved and used in parts of the construction of the Castleton Masonic Lodge.

For this trek the weather was near perfect with a group of all ages out for the trip to the top. There is no blazed trail to the peak and this leader can get you there, but I can't give you navigable verbal directions. "Just do it" we say in our family. You drive about three miles up the Bird Mt. Road to the gated road and kiosk with maps and information at the BMWMA. As you journey up the old overgrown road the mountain looms up ahead with precipitous ledges abundant on its southern slope.

Bird Mountain from the south

Our group made its way to the easterly slope and a spring with cold water that flows out of the caverns and crevices of the rocks. Just past the spring on the left there is a trail up quite a steep scramble through a notch. This narrow, precipitous path is built into the notch upon a rock bed. I find it difficult to describe the trail otherwise. A lot of hard labor went into its construction and for that we were grateful.

At the top of this steep ascent the group followed the path as it tracked along the ridge, now rising more leisurely, southwesterly toward the summit.

Amidst "Oh's" and "Ah's" all enjoyed the breathtaking views: to the east the Rutland airport, West Rutland, and the Coolidge Range with Pico, Killington, Mendon, and Shrewsbury; to the south the Taconics with Herrick Mountain, and Lake St. Catherine; to the west Lake Bomoseen, Castleton, Fair Haven, and the Adirondacks; and to the north Hubbardton; and many more I cannot remember.

Granola bars, peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, yogurt and such abounded. Our five-star lunch overshadowed any restaurant in the valleys below.

Taking our time down the steep terrain we soon enjoyed the wildflowers of summer, even chancing upon an orange wood lily. Biding adieu to one and all after a walk into the nearby cemeteries we all agreed the day was extraordinary!

End-To-End Reunion

7 July 2005

By Roma Pulling, hostess

Several months ago it occurred to me someone should get End-to-Enders together to reminisce and perhaps inspire others to walk the same course. Pretty soon a second thought occurred: Instead of waiting for it to happen, why not do it myself?

On the evening of 7 July six people gathered at our house and brought trail snacks and pictures to share. They first entered our dinette and signed our guest book on a table displaying hiking books, including some of my favorites: three by Colin Fletcher and one of Earl Shaffer. Nearby on a room divider was a collection of ancient backpacking gear [from a couple of ancient backpackers].

We proceeded from there to the porch, where the snack items were assembled. We had a choice of veggies, trail mix, banana chips, peanuts, ham sandwiches and cheese. The beverages were iced lemonade and elderberry wine [guess who?]. While we snacked, we recalled experiences on the trail and poured over pictures of our treks.

Cindy brought a computer disc, which we hoped to enjoy to cap off the evening. Being nearly a computer illiterate, I put Cindy in charge, and she soon discovered one of the limitations of a seven-year-old computer. Anyway, thanks for trying! The only thing that would have made the evening more complete was to have some aspiring End-to-Enders take part. They missed a great opportunity.

Killington Work Trip

9 July 2005

By Cynthia Taylor-Miller, leader

Three workers with tools rode the Gondola to the summit of Killington. We cleared the section of trail from Cooper Lodge to Jungle Junction of six blow downs, leaving one large white birch, approximately 14 inches in diameter, located 100 feet south of the southernmost puncheon in the Killington-Pico saddle. Hikers can walk over this obstacle, but if someone with a chainsaw removed this one, this section of the trail would then be clear of all blow downs. We also cleared the water bars and cut back brush with loppers and clippers.

The white blazes need to be freshened up along this entire section and the blue blazes on the LT/AT north of Cooper should be made white as far as the intersection with the properly blue blazed Bucklin Trail. I knew I was on the right trail, but hikers traveling north might be confused as to why they were seeing blue blazes when they were looking for white blazes only.

We walked out via the Sherburne Pass Trail where we removed two more blow downs and two leaners, and carted out a large bag of trash from both Pico Camp and Cooper Lodge. Bill Robichaud found the privy in good shape but he didn't like the "flimsy" latch.

Otter Creek, Proctor-Pittsford

10 July 2005

By Barbara Griffith

To put a boat in below Sunderland Falls in Proctor one accesses the site by seemingly vanishing down a dirt road by the waste water treatment plant. It's easily accessible and a beautiful place to launch. This launching was rewarded with a large volume of water cascading over the scenic marble ledges. Recent rains had once again put Otter Creek at higher than normal summer levels.

Along this seven-mile trip one paddles below the creek bank levels isolated from the busy world above. The party was rewarded with various water fowl including great blue herons, and multitudes of king fishers.

After lunch, which was enjoyed alongside one of Pittsford's scenic hiking trails, these kayakers decided to venture up Furnace Brook, a route not always maneuverable due to low water and snags. We made it all the way to the Cooley covered bridge before returning to continue down Otter Creek.

We approached "Pitt's Ford" noting that it would have been difficult to ford with anything other than a boat today. Another short side trip was taken up a stream to the small falls that mark the waterpower site of one of Pittsford's earliest mills.

We shot out of that stream back to the Creek and finished our trip by taking out at the Hammond covered bridge in Florence. In the 1927 flood this bridge was lifted off its abutments and carried more than a mile downstream where it came to rest. It survived with the strength of its lattice truss design and now sits across the Creek with memories of earlier times.

Taking out was a bit tricky with fast moving deep water. With Jerry Parker's leadership, and with teamwork and assistance, we all made it safely to paddle another day.

Robert Frost Mountain

16 July 2005

By Gordon Cawood, leader

Five members of the Bread Loaf and four from the Killington Sections were joined by a diminishing infestation of mosquitoes on a hike from Ripton-Lincoln Road in Ripton to the peak of Robert Frost Mountain along a VAST snowmobile trail. Since this trail is not maintained for foot traffic, the intrepid hikers pushed their way through mud in some places and tall grass in others. The trail was nevertheless easily followable. We all enjoyed lunch at the peak.

Unfortunately there were no views because of so much haze. We could not even see the Omya quarries down in Middlebury. Thus it made no sense to continue to the lower viewpoint looking eastward.

On the return trip we had the pleasure of meeting Claire and Norm Groleau, who own the property at the trail crossing on North Branch Road. It turns out that the Groleaus and Debbie Ramsdell had been friends in Charlotte before the Groleaus moved to their new home. They graciously gave us a tour of their house and offered us refreshments.

Castleton Bike Ride

24 July 2005

By Bill Holt, leader

On a bright Sunday seven GMC bikers came out for a ride. We met near the firehouse in Rutland and headed west to Castleton State College. After discussing where we would be riding, two of the riders decided to ride just on the D&H Rail-Trail. They called later that night to say they had a wonderful ride all the way to Poultney and back.

The rest of us headed to Staso Road, which turned to dirt after a mile. We climbed a couple of steep grades before leveling off at Pond Hill Ranch. While taking a break from the hill one of the riders decided to head back to Castleton as she was a little pooped out after the climb.

We were now four. As we started zooming down the backside of Pond Hill Ranch we had to stop abruptly when we encountered about ten riders on horseback coming up the hill. The lead rider on his white horse was almost thrown when the horse couldn't figure out just what we were. We had come to a complete stop 50 yards before the horses, but this one horse still was acting as though he had never seen a bicycle. Finally the cowboy straightened the horse around and they all passed without further ado. We continued on down the hill just coasting for a mile or so through the dappled light of maples and pines.

We were in Poultney now, turning onto Watkins Hill Road, which is rough gravel and about 15 feet wide. As we went along we passed a steep gorge on our left that dropped off 50 or 60 feet from the edge of the road. On we went, past farmer's fields and shady groves, to Gorhamtown Town Road.; past a corn field all tasseled out and ready to eat. And no, we didn't grab a few ears along the way. It was mostly cow corn anyway.

We then turned left and south onto Lewis Road, which was fairly flat all the way to Hannon Road, and across Route 30, where we hooked up with the Rail-Trail. We took this non-motorized trail all the way back to the college. The only thing left of this old rail road bed is the cinders on which it had been built. Because railroads rarely exceed a six-percent grade, it feels as if you are riding on level ground. So we each found a comfortable gear and cruised along through the colorful wild flowers that is Vermont in midsummer.

The whole trip of 15.3 miles took us only two hours in real time. For me though, I noticed that time had slowed way down, like those summer days when, as a kid, the days went on for ever. So if you're interested in experiencing a time warp come with us next time and see if you can be that young again.

Okemo Mountain, Mount Holly

6 August 2005

By Andrea McQuade, leader

Nine hikers and two faithful canine companions enjoyed a break in the summer heat and humidity to climb the Healdville Trail to the summit of Okemo Mountain. Before we got onto the trail, we heard a presentation by Dennis Devereux from the Mount Holly Historical Association about this area that once was part of Ludlow and the site of a mill, train station and post office.

Okemo Fire Tower

We just about had the trail to ourselves going up and coming down. At the top, we enjoyed views of Ludlow and surrounding mountain peaks from the top of a ski lift and a fire tower. Back at our cars, we were refreshed with watermelon slices before heading back to Rutland.

endeavor with speeds up to 11 mph. Several towns along the way provided culture and relief from sea legs. Carcross, with a population of 300, is not an altogether thriving community at 7 AM, but come the tour buses, it becomes a booming metropolis (or so it appeared to the weary crew, who, having set off at 4 AM that morning, proceeded to engorge, once the town awakened, on fried dough, pie, fresh coffee, ice cream, and all things not re-hydrated).

The Whitehorse dam presented the only portage challenge of the 550-mile waterway stretch, providing a ready excuse for disembarking and spending three days touring the capital of the Yukon. Favorites were the steamboat S.S. Klondike, the Beringia Museum of the ecology during the land bridge era, and the Transportation Museum. An acquaintance of one of the crew, a member of the venerable Royal Canadian Mounted Police, supplied the group with tent space, showers (!), cooking facilities, and use of vehicles -- a 4-star stay in the midst of the heretofore primitive camping.

The Five Finger Rapids proved to be the most formidable barrier en route. The fearless captain of one canoe, cognizant that some had met their maker at this particular juncture determined it best to "take the waves head on", resulting in a net gain of 12 inches of water and a thorough cleansing of all items on board. Once bailing had been completed, equipment and gear were shiny and bright, and about as good as new.

Although there were limited close and personal encounters with wildlife, there were sightings of a black bear (ferrying across the Yukon to the opposite shore), moose, Dall sheep, beavers, ground squirrels (mighty aggressive!), peregrine falcons, and too-many-to-count bald eagles.

On 27 July the ecstatic group reached its destination of Dawson City (where it is rumored "The men mined the gold and the women mined the men."). Camp was set up at a rustic hostel located across the river. A ferry running nonstop provided access to the local flavor and events, including the Palace Grand (with featured performances and silent movies), Robert Service's cabin, Goldtooth Gertie's (modern-day gambling hall), and a local saloon which highlighted the Sour Toe Cocktail (extracted from a hapless native during a bout with frostbite). As luck would have it, the group arrived in time for the annual music festival; with attendees numbering 400, this was touted as the biggest event of the year.

A bike trip to the goldfields and retired dredges outside of Dawson City provided an opportunity to pan for the elusive gem but alas, to the woe of the would-be stampeders, netted no profit. Bust in their quest for gold (as were 99 percent of their predecessors), they were successful in their Klondike voyage!

Killington Section meets with Rutland High School Hikers

By Steve Williams

On 27 May, Bill Robichaud and Steve Williams met at Rutland High School with a group of student hikers who were participating in an option of the "YES" program. The group had already climbed Black Mountain and Okemo with Pico, Little Rock Pond, and Mounts Ascutney and Equinox on their schedule.

Bill and Steve related the history of the Green Mountain Club and the Killington Section and then went on to describe our outings and trails and shelters maintenance work.

Bill and Steve then joined four hike leaders and forty-five students in a foggy journey to Sherburne

Pass. A quick bit of organizing and the group was off. Pico summit was reached via the ski trails in about 90 minutes. By this time the mist had cleared and lower level landmarks became at least partially visible.

After a lunch break the party descended to Pico camp, where an assembly was held to ensure that no one was lost. As the party set off, Steve attempted to stay with the first group. A mistake! A group of fit 15 to 18 year olds does not have much difficulty tiring an only moderately fit 67 year old. At Jungle Junction, sanity returned and from there on Steve held to a more moderate speed.

On the way down, one of the students described his experience last year with the Vermont YCC which had worked on this portion of the trail. He pointed out some of the water bars, embankments, and steps that he had worked on.

In two hours the group was at the trailhead. This represented a pace which would have caused a rebellion on a Killington Section hike, but which was readily handled by the students.

This meeting seemed to be a great way to interface with some very fit and interested youthful hikers. It would be appropriate for the Section to repeat this interface in future years. An invitation has already been extended.

Killington Section to Host GMC Annual Meeting in 2006

By Barry Griffith

The Green Mountain Club's 2006 Annual Meeting is being scheduled for the first weekend in June, at the Long Trail Brewery in Bridgewater Corners. The Killington Section, through its Board of Directors, has agreed to host the event. Much planning has taken place already. Those plans will be summarized here.

The Annual Meeting will begin with a Friday evening presentation at the Long Trail Brewery on June 2, 2006. Historian David Wright will present a program on the original Long Trail Lodge, on the south side of Sherburne Pass. The "Clubhouse" was constructed for and donated to the Green Mountain Club by its President, Mortimer Proctor in 1923. Most Killington members know that the Long Trail actually passed through this Lodge, until it was tragically destroyed by fire in 1968. This Friday program will give us the opportunity to share this interesting history with attending members from other Sections.

GMC Annual Meeting activities will begin in earnest on Saturday morning, June 3, 2006. Killington Section volunteers will be needed to assist with registration. The Club's annual business meeting will begin at 9 a.m., and take up the morning.

As host of the meeting, the Killington Section is responsible for organizing and leading Saturday afternoon hikes and outings in the area. Sue Thomas has been busy putting together a variety of outing options for that afternoon. If you are interested in leading a hike or otherwise assisting, please let Sue know.

Saturday evening will begin with a social hour and dinner at the Long Trail Brewery. While the main Club has not yet confirmed the identity of its keynote speaker for the evening, we have every reason to believe that the program will be noteworthy and well-received.

For those who remain in the area and interested, Sunday outings will also be provided. Once again, Sue Thomas is working to finalize this list. Call Sue with suggestions or offers to help.

In our hosting capacity the Killington Section also plans to sponsor a raffle, to provide merchandise or gift certificates for those attending the annual meeting, while at the same time raising funds for the Club. The contact person for the raffle is Cindy Taylor-Miller. The raffle will require solicitation of local businesses for donations. If you are interested in helping with this endeavor, or perhaps have an item of your own to donate, please let Cindy know.

Your Board of Directors approached this hosting role cautiously, having in mind our Section's limited budget. We were delighted to learn that the Long Trail Brewery has generously agreed to underwrite the food and drink to be provided at the annual meeting. This means that the financial obligation of the Section will be minimal. Our primary hosting obligation will be to provide helpful and knowledgeable volunteers to assist. The Killington Section is blessed with members we can count on to contribute!

There will be an official notice and more information regarding the 2006 Annual Meeting in the next edition of the Long Trail News. I wanted to share this news with Killington Section members now. See you on the trails this winter – and in Bridgewater Corners next June!

Letter to the Editor

Long Trail End-to-End, Anyone?

From discussions with a number of hikers during the section's outings, I have become aware that there are a number of section members who have an interest in doing the entire Long Trail "in bits and pieces".

Cindy Taylor-Miller has used her knowledge of the Long Trail, and of its trailheads in particular, to develop a possible approach, showing thirty separate hikes. With this in mind an objective of doing all thirty hikes in a two or three years would appear to be practical.

At this point no one, neither Cindy nor the writer, has stepped forward to offer to be an overall leader, coordinator, or anything else. However, I believe that with sufficient members interested, and with some flexibility, the development of a mode of undertaking the project should be possible.

My suggestion is that, if there are sufficient members (or non members) interested, we have an evening meeting at, say, the Rutland Public Library, to discuss how we might put a plan together.

Those interested are asked to call or e-mail me if they would be interested in participating in such a meeting. It would be helpful if callers would indicate any (weekday) evening, such as Wednesdays or second Tuesdays, when they would not be available.

29 January, Sunday Shareheat Skiathon, Peru Leader: Connie Youngstrom, 492-3502

The Killington Section will participate in the Bennington Rutland Opportunity Council's annual Skiathon to raise money for the Shareheat program. Shareheat provides assistance to low-income Vermonters who have difficulty paying heating bills through the winter. This year, due to skyrocketing fuel prices and shrinking public assistance, the need will be greater than ever. So join us for a fun day of x-country skiing at Wild Wings in Peru as we support a worthy cause. When they become available, pledge forms can be picked up from our log book on any hike. If you can't come ski with us, signup to sponsor someone.

Call leader for further details and for meeting time and place.

Smoke & Blazes Editor's Report

After being commended by President Griffith for his fine efforts, Editor Perkins reported that there was nothing new to be considered with the publication; the next edition will be sent out at the end of November.

Trails & Shelters Report

Gov. Clement shelter was better managed this summer with only one small incident: the new town police patrol seems to have helped control the misuse seen in past seasons.

In the recent past however, the US Park Service has wanted the town to close the access road to the shelter, actually threatening to tear down the shelter if the road was not closed. This position seems to have been taken even after the town instituted the additional police patrols in that area. It was not clear what more the Killington Section could do to dissuade the Park Service. Barry G. will circulate Herb's (Ogden) email to generate further discussion at the next Board meeting.

Construction of replacement shelters for both Cooper and Clement are scheduled for next year (2006); sites have already been identified.

Report from the Main Club

Our representative, Lynda Hutchins, reported on her attendance at the Headquarter Club Directors Meeting held on 17 September. Some of the topics were:

* A new version of the waterproof Long Trail map is now available.

* The Capital Campaign is meeting its optimistic goals so far: 100% participation from the Board of Directors; significant contributions or pledges from employees and committee members. Awareness Meetings are being hosted around the state. The name of the Capital Campaign Committee was changed to the "Steering Committee to the Second Century".

* The Headquarters Club organization's 2005 financial books received a clean audit report. A few recommendations were made by the auditors (McSoley McCoy and Co.) which were taken under consideration.

* There are still 12 full time paid employees, although there have been some departures and hires, as well as shifts in responsibilities.

* There have been new developments in the Winooski River Crossing plans. The Club is re-thinking the location after a significant donor has apparently come forward. This is an important project, involving, as it does, more than one third of the as yet unprotected land.

* Board members will now receive part of their pre-meeting information packages electronically. However, the decision was made not to allow electronic access to meeting minutes for confidentiality reasons.

President Griffith and all present thanked Lynda again for her selfless involvement at the Club meetings.

GMC 2006 Annual Meeting

Killington Section has been asked to consider acting as host for next year's Annual Meeting, which will be held at the Long Trail Brewery. There was an extensive discussion of whether our Section should or could host the meeting. Numerous volunteers will be required to spend a good bit of time organizing and then actually running the event.

There was a general consensus that our section cannot afford to be financially responsible for any costs: no outright contribution of funds to defray costs can be considered and no financial or contractual obligation can be undertaken on behalf of the Headquarters Club; the Club would have to be principal in any financial arrangements. There was every willingness however, to volunteer time and take responsibilities as agents for the Club.

Cynthia T-M agreed to speak with the Club's point person in this issue, Ms. Kerry Foster to find out what they would expect of our section if we were to agree to be hosts.

Mr. Dave Wright, who is shooting a video about the old Long Trail Lodge, was mentioned as a possible speaker at the Annual Meeting.

We all agreed to meet again on Tuesday 18 October at 6:15 PM at Barry's office to discuss this issue. Cynthia is to invite Keri Foster from the Waterbury office to attend.

Outing Schedule

The next schedule, for December, January, and February, is filling in nicely.

Other Business

Former President Williams and Cynthia have discussed the idea of segmenting the entire Long Trail into day hikes such that interested people could complete their end-to-end journey in that way. A general discussion ensued revolving around perceived practical difficulties and possible scheduling conflicts. Steve W. will write a letter to Smoke & Blazes requesting email feed-back and indications of interest; he will report back to the Board.

The meeting was adjourned at 6:46 PM.

Killington Section Directors Meeting

18 October 2006

By John Hale, Secretary

The Killington Section directors met at Sabby's Restaurant, Center Street, Rutland, VT

Attendance:

Board Members: Barry Griffith, Barbara Griffith, Roma Pulling, John Hale, Steve Williams, Cynthia Taylor-Miller, Sue Thomas, Andrea McQuade, and Lynda Hutchins

Guests: Al Pulling and Bob Perkins

Special Guest: Keri Foster, GMC Headquarters Staff

The meeting was called to order by President Griffith at 5:40 PM.

Secretary's Report

The Minutes of the 27 September 2005, board meeting were read, discussed and amended in the Trails & Shelters Report section in the first paragraph "Gov. Clement shelter was better managed this summer with only one small incident that was reported to us." (underlined words added); and in the third paragraph of that section rewritten to read "Construction of a replacement shelter is scheduled for next year (2006); the site chosen is two miles north of Clement and about two miles south of Cooper."; and in the GMC 2006 Annual Meeting section, the spelling of Ms. Foster's first name was corrected to "Keri".

A motion was made to accept the amended minutes, seconded and passed unanimously.

The 2006 Annual GMC Meeting

Keri Foster spoke to us about the 2006 Annual Meeting. Ben Rose would like to have been able to attend but had a significant conflict and sent his greetings instead. She was in attendance to answer our questions, allay our fears, and encourage us to decide to host the Meeting.

Each year different Sections of the Club act as hosts for the Annual Meeting. The meeting in 2006 will be held on 2 and 3 June and the parent club has already made a number of arrangements: the venue will be the Long Trail Brewery in Killington; and the Saturday night meal and speaker have been contracted. Food for Friday night is still under consideration.

The Club has agreed that the Killington Section would not have any financial responsibility for the event.

Killington Section would be responsible for volunteers and management of the following areas:

- * Identify hikes and leaders for day hikes for Saturday in enough variety to interest all possible participants and run the hikes.
- * Arrange for a speaker for Friday night's event (the parent Club agrees to cover the cost of any honorarium); and coordinate donation of desserts for the evening.
- * Organize and run any extra events such as a Gear Swap, a Raffle of local business products and services, a 50/50 money raffle, and/or private homes offered for lodging.
- * Detail availability and location of camp sites/grounds, hotels, motels and other overnight accommodations in the environs.
- * Prepare a map and written travel directions to the various venues.
- * Write a formal Introduction to the event.
- * Prepare a Schedule of Events once all details are settled and provide it to the Club for dissemination.
- * Register participants on Saturday (seven to ten volunteers will be needed.)

A motion that our Killington Section host the 2006 Green Mountain Club annual meeting was made, seconded and passed unanimously. A Committee of the Whole was formed to manage the process and volunteers were accepted for the various tasks:

- * Sue Thomas offered to detail the hike and outing schedule with leaders, and to manage that process.
- * Cynthia Taylor-Miller offered to scout out and list all overnight accommodations in the immediate area.
- * Barry Griffith will prepare a map and write travel directions.
- * Steve Williams is to write the Introduction paper with the assistance of Bob Perkins.
- * Lynda Hutchins proposed to coordinate Section members' dessert contributions and their presentation at the Friday night event.
- * John Hale and Cynthia Taylor-Miller will organize and run the Raffles (Gear Swap, Products & Services Raffle, and 50/50 Raffle.)
- * Barry Griffith will be the central coordination point for all activities.

Ben Rose and Keri Foster will meet with the Long Trail Brewery people on Tuesday 15 November at 12:30 PM to iron out details of the event. Barry Griffith will also attend.

Our own annual pot luck dinner meeting will be held on 19 November and our participation in the 2006 Annual Meeting will be presented and discussed. We will hope to generate more volunteers and possible homes offered for participant lodging. Barbara Griffith plans to set up easels to facilitate the sign-ups.

The next meeting of the Committee of the Whole will be on Tuesday, 15 November at 5:30 PM at Barry Griffith's office at 98 Merchants Row in Rutland.

The meeting was adjourned at 7:09 PM.

Outing Reports

Mount Equinox, Manchester

11 June 2005

By Sue Thomas, leader

About two years ago I climbed Mount Equinox by myself and at the summit stumbled into the midst of the annual "Hill Climb", a race up the auto road for antique sports cars. I thought it would be fun to bring the club up to see it, so this year I scheduled a hike to coincide with the race. Imagine my surprise when a few days beforehand I got a call from the silent order of monks, who own much of the mountain. (When I reported this on the hike, someone asked the obvious question: "Why do they even have a phone?") It seemed their insurance company was requiring that no one be anywhere on the mountain during the race. I convinced the monk that we couldn't possibly be injured over at the lookout, a half mile across the ridge. By the time we finished commiserating about the idiocy of insurance companies, he said to go on to the top and ask the guards if we could watch from the porch of the defunct hotel. So that's what we did and no one objected. We made certain to control Dickens. I had visions of him claiming a vintage Austin-Healy by jumping in and refusing to budge!

The little cars are just his size. Some date back to World War I, and a few of the drivers looked as if they did too. We'd hear then long before they shot, one by one, over the crest of the hill and into the parking lot. Two of our hikers knew a lot about cars and were able to identify each one, not unlike our spring wildflower walks.

We, of course, paused to pay tribute to Mr. Barbo. I think it's safe to say that his is the only mountaintop memorial to a dog around. Passing hikers leave offerings there: little piles of stones, acorns, wildflowers, and coins. Dickens appeared to be unmoved.

WARNING: The rest of this hike report contains graphic material that may be upsetting to the squeamish. Caution is advised.

In addition to the auto race this hike also, unfortunately, coincided with the height of the tent caterpillar invasion. The moment we got out of the cars we could hear a sound like raindrops in the leaves although the sky was bright blue. Caterpillar poop was falling like rain all around us. As we headed up the trail the varmints themselves hung from threads in our path, forcing us to dip and dodge in a peculiar dance as we made our way thru the gauntlet. It was our own GMC version of "Fear Factor", though as far as I know no one actually ate one – at least not on purpose. Luckily they were confined to the lower elevations so we eventually left them behind, but it caused us to start back down the trail after lunch with much trepidation.

It all would have been very interesting viewed on the Nature Channel – we saw tree trunks completely covered with caterpillars and the ground was carpeted with bits of chewed leaves. Quite a different story when you're picking them out of your hair though! My complements to those hikers who valiantly battled thru the worms without complaint, and with the acceptance that sometimes Nature is just plain disgusting!

Mount. Ascutney

by Herb Ogden, Leader

Even though my late father and I were the first two members of the Ascutney Trails Association, the group that revived the Mt. Ascutney trails beginning in 1966, I had never hiked the Futures Trail up Vermont's highest monadnock. My trail work on Ascutney pretty much ended in the 60s, and the Futures Trail was not built till 1983. The best way to make sure I got around to exploring it was to agree to lead a hike over it. Now I can say from personal experience that there are four good ways up Ascutney: the Weathersfield Trail from the south, the Brownsville Trail from the north, the Windsor Trail from the northeast, and the Futures Trail from the east. Back when we were laying out or rediscovering trails in the late 60s, I also experienced some not so good ways up. One, an old wood road that we followed downhill from the Weathersfield Trail, mysteriously petered out at a high elevation on the west side. There was no more road until much lower. Only later did we find out that there was a long log chute on that side of the mountain. Of course, it had vanished without a trace by the 60s, and where it used to be was a heck of a bushwhack.

The Futures Trail contrasts with all the other routes up the mountain in that it actually goes up and down significantly. The Brownsville and Windsor Trails are pretty much an unrelenting climb, and the Weathersfield Trail has at best some level stretches. As it follows the long, undulating east ridge, however, the Futures Trail seems a bit more like the Long Trail than the other Ascutney trails do. At 4.6 miles from the State Park to the summit, it is also by far the longest Ascutney trail.

Our small Killington Section group saved the Futures Trail for the second part of our hike, opting for a gradual descent. Climbing up the Windsor Trail, we noted unusually low water at Gerry Falls, though the summer had not been especially dry. Ascutney's unusually dense granite slows the percolation rate so much that springs on the mountain tend to reflect the rainfall of the previous summer more than that of the current summer. Just south of the Log Shelter, we helped a hiker who, while trying to climb to the top, was about to head back down, thanks to her confusion about the 1903 and 1857 routes. We admired the wood floor that the Ascutney Trails Association had just put in the shelter, and then headed to the top after a detour to Castle Rock for a good view of Windsor. Lunch at the top was a calmer event than the last time I led a hike up there, when one participant insisted that the observation tower was the best place to be in the face of an oncoming thunderstorm.

We saved a little mileage by using the shortcut from the Slot Trail to the Futures Trail and by forgoing the side trail to the Steam Donkey (No, a steam donkey has nothing to do with riled-up Democrats. It's a stationery steam engine, used on Ascutney to winch logs.) Just below that side trail, we marveled at a wide flume that is not even mentioned in the guidebook. It's an impressive sight. Farther down, we enjoyed a stop at the picnic area across from where the trail touches but does not cross the motor road. The shelter is a grand old CCC type building, and the view is good. We enjoyed a final view from a knoll about a mile from the bottom, among pines and oaks that are unlike most of Ascutney's forest. This was a long outing, but well worth the trip.

Mount Antone and Beyond

10 September 2005

By Steve Williams, leader

Most club trips to Mount Antone return either by Mount Antone Road, or via Beebe Pond. This trip aimed at returning on a loop via the southern end of Merck Forest. Consequently, after lunch at the summit, with an excellent view of much of the eastern Adirondacks, the nine-hiker party set off down Lookout Road (the latter being a misnomer; in many places the "road" is barely discernable). The objective was Lookout Point, which looks south over the valley leading east from West Rupert and towards the ridges associated with Equinox Mountain. In an attempt to follow club traditions, the leader there provided the party with a post-lunch snack of zucchini bread.

The leader was most gratified that this was well received as, prior to the morning of the hike, he had never baked a loaf of bread in his life, zucchini or otherwise.

From Lookout Point, Lookout Road improves and, via a number of switchbacks, leads the hiker down to Old Town Road, while losing more than the 850 vertical feet ascended on the way up to Mount Antone. This gives rise to a one-hour uphill stretch before the loop is completed at the junction with Mount Antone Road. En route the group visited the so called Sugar Shack shelter, which is in excellent shape, with a capacity of ten or more and Birch Pond, a pleasant enough small pond, but not too inviting for swimming because of its limited depth and very muddy bottom.

All told, a welcome day in the big outdoors with a group with high conversation skills; at each resting point, the leader had to use all his cajolery skills to re-start onward motion!

Moonlight Bike Ride, Castleton

18 September 2005

By Bill Holt, leader

On a late Sunday afternoon six bicyclists met in Castleton near the abandoned rail road bed. All day had been cloudy and cool, but just before we started out the weather started changing for the better. We took off just as the sun dropped off the western horizon. The railroad bed was dry despite rain the day before and we cruised along at a steady pace. The trail was wide enough so we could ride two abreast allowing us to converse along the way. We passed fields, swamps, and woods without having to deal with vehicle traffic and arrived in Poultny at dark. We all gobbled down a snack on Main Street while swapping stories of close encounters with bears. Now that we were thoroughly versed on what could happen out there in the boondocks we started our ride back to Castleton in total darkness. Our bike lights cut a feeble path of light through a tunnel of black. I could see fifteen to twenty feet ahead of me while leading the way, but when a cottontail dashed across in front of me it still was startling. Not far out of town the moon, full of orange, peeked over the eastern horizon. Some the bikers now howling like coyotes greeted the majestic sight. As we rode through open areas we were coated with a refreshing dampness as the dew was settling in. We arrived back in Castleton under a white moon and just slightly chilled. We hope to ride again under the light of the moon, perhaps next spring.

Sr. Shuffle to Wallingford Pond

25 September 2005

By Roma Pulling

Immense potholes – some large enough to lose your car in – were what I remembered from earlier hikes to Wallingford Pond. They were still there – the same holes and (probably) some of the same water. Brown, dirty water surrounded by brown, dirty mud. But in each instance we were able to make our way around these obstructions without getting our feet wet.

There were seven of us on this outing under cloudy skies, but the threatened showers never occurred. Driving two cars up Sugar Hill Road off Route 140 in Wallingford, we followed Wallingford Pond Road to a parking lot 1.9 miles in. There were two other cars there but no other hikers. But someone had pitched a tent nearby and, we presume, was inside because his shoes were placed neatly beside the tent flap while his roll of paper towels hung on a tree branch in lieu of a more traditional hanger.

There were signs that vehicles had been driven to the pond, perhaps in order to launch boats. As mud was everywhere, we decided to check for other approaches that would provide drier places to enjoy our lunch; but finding nothing that looked promising we headed back to our cars. One hiker suggested that nearby White Rocks picnic area would be a good lunch spot, and we all agreed enthusiastically. [Thanks, Esther]. There were many cars there but apparently for the hiking trails as we were the only people eating there. It was their loss.

Watch for our next "shuffle." Remember, no one said fun should be reserved for the young.

Rupert-West Rupert Loop

2 October 2005

By Vivian Bebee, leader

The planned Split Rock hike was postponed for a second time. Larry Walter, my co-leader, was in Mississippi as a volunteer in the hurricane relief efforts. When Larry and I hiked Split Rock last spring, it was not well-signed at the time, so I opted to lead a hike in more familiar territory. I grew up in West Rupert.

Anyway, we had a warm and sunny day (75-plus degrees) for the six individuals (all female) that arrived for the hike. We parked our cars by the old Delaware & Hudson railroad bed on Route 153 (between West Pawlet and Rupert). We started our hike with freshly baked chocolate-chip cookies for sustenance and walked along the railroad bed for about two miles to West Rupert. Leaving the railroad bed, we walked along the Mill Road to the home of Georgia Bebee, who kindly allowed us to use "the facilities." From there on pavement up East Street, we walked about a mile, passing the old two-room schoolhouse, which served the Town of Rupert for grades 3-6 for many, many years and now is used as the Town Clerk's office. Turning left onto the Lang Road, we left pavement for a sleepy dirt road. Along the Lang Road, we stopped for lunch in a meadow and then continued on, passing three homes at the far end. As we passed the second home, the elderly owner inquired if we would assist in pushing a stalled vehicle from her garage to enable her neighbor (a young lady) to jump-start it with her car that was parked out on the road. During the course of our task, it was discovered that the friend was the wife of someone I babysat when I was a teenager, a very young teenager of course. We continued on, bearing left on Youlin Road (dirt as well), which led us to Route 315. Turning left on pavement and a short walk to a right on Route 153 brought us back to our cars, where more chocolate-chip cookies were consumed by all. For those of you who are still not quite sure where we were, turning right on Route 315 and traveling a couple of miles would bring you to the top of Rupert Mountain and Merck Foundation.

The hike was a pleasant 5 ½ miles due to gorgeous weather, good company and sleepy, less-traveled roads.

Haystack Mountain, Pawlet

15 October 2005

By Steve Williams, leader

The leader was not totally surprised when, at 9:10 AM, he received a call from his trusty Rutland liaison, Sue Thomas, to say that, given the prevailing weather conditions in Rutland, there were no takers for the hike, including herself. From the leader's viewpoint this was somewhat disappointing as he had looked at his local weather situation at 6:00 AM., 7:00 AM. 8:00 AM and 9:00 AM., and on none of these occasions had it been raining (though, admittedly, only an extreme optimist could have declared it to be a fine sky). Further, he had once again stretched his baking skills to produce brownies as bonus sustenance for the hike, of which more anon.

In spite of this setback, the leader still had some hopes for the day, as Bob Boutwell, who had several times indicated an interest in ascending Haystack, had said that he needed to come to Pawlet anyway, and that the two of us had agreed to make the outing unless the weather was totally beyond the pale. After a coffee and taste of the aforementioned brownies, they headed for the front door, by which time it was indeed raining. This continued for the short drive to the trailhead, at which point the leader, in no way wishing to overplay his leadership role, gave Bob every opportunity to back out there and then, or later, if he so elected.

Steve's photo of the rest of his group

At the first point on the trail where the Haystack summit should have been visible it certainly was not, and the rain continued in a downpour of varying intensity. From periodic solicitations from the leader to Bob about his wish to continue, it became apparent that Bob is a veteran of many long hikes with overnight stays; many of them in much wetter circumstances than currently being experienced.

Some twenty minutes later the east slope, though not the summit, came into view, and the steeper part of the ascent commenced. Curiously enough, this was no worse than on many non-raining days when the rocks had not yet dried out, except that water was by now gushing down the trail, which is not blessed with water-bars. Shortly after the leader's traditional fourth recital of the mantra "we're almost there", the summit was apparently reached, as measured by there seeming to be lower ground all around. But then, after ten minutes of the leader telling Bob what he would see under better circumstances, persistence was rewarded, and glimpses of the floor of the Mettawee Valley and of the adjoining peak (Middle Mountain) miraculously appeared. Two of Bob's excellent Cortland apples were consumed to celebrate.

After such a sight, the trip down was necessarily anti-climactic, except for the stream near the trailhead which was rather more challenging than on the ascent. In summary, a damp, but not unpleasing, trip to the woods!

The brownies found their way to the church school. The recipients expressed no regrets about the circumstances that brought them there.

Canty Trail Work Party

22 October 2005

By Herb Ogden, leader

I was delighted to have ten people show up for the fall work party on 22 October though the weather was not particularly inviting. In only about an hour, they managed to carry eighteen hemlock planks (each six feet long by two inches thick), and twenty hemlock sills (each three feet long and six inches square) about a half a mile up the Canty Trail. The task was made easier by summer hikers who had lugged some of the supplies part or even all of the way. Thank you, whoever you are! Meanwhile, I used the new Killington Section Timber Trundler to wheel two eight foot long planks to the work site. Once everything was in place, we split into a couple of crews to level out spaces for the sills and then fasten the planks to them with six inch spikes. We had more workers than we needed for this final phase, so half the party had time to work south on the Sherburne Pass Trail hoeing leaves and debris out of the waterbars, putting the trail to bed for the winter. The result: 68 feet of new puncheon on the muddiest remaining spots on the trail up Blue Ridge Mountain, and waterbars that will once again take the water off the trail instead of overflowing down the trail.

This last spike ought to do it

Until the waterbars freeze solid, if you take a hike on one of our more drainage-intensive stretches of trail, like the upper part of the Canty Trail, the Long Trail north or south of US 4, the Sherburne Pass Trail (above where our party stopped), the Long Trail between Snowdon Peak and Consultation Point, the upper Bucklin Trail, the Long Trail between the Lottery Road and Clarendon Shelter, or the Long Trail south of Bear Mountain, please consider taking along a hoe to clear out the waterbars. If they get plugged up, water can wash out the trail and negate many hours of work by trail builders. I have Killington Section hoes to lend if anybody needs one.

Saratoga Battlefield, NY

12 November

By Sue Thomas, leader

Our day started with scraping ice off our cars in Vermont, but by the time we'd driven the scenic route along the Champlain Canal, watched a movie at the Visitors Center, and enjoyed our lunch on the patio overlooking the farmland and the Hudson River the sun had done its job. We set off on the four and a half-mile hiking trail, shedding layers like molting snakes. The trail is very pretty, passing through fields and woods with frequent points of interest where significant things happened and just enough hills to give us a workout. We spent most of the day in enemy territory, signified by red-tipped posts that mark the location of the British lines, but managed to come through unscathed. I suspect our red hunting season clothes may have caused some confusion.

We stopped to admire a monument dedicated to Benedict Arnold's leg, one of the more unusual tributes I've seen. Arnold was the big hero of the battle and, had his leg wound proved fatal, we'd be seeing signs claiming that he'd slept in every old inn across New England. Well, we all know how his story turned out. People should just quit when they're ahead.

We'd also passed a monument on the drive down dedicated to Jane McCrae. Barry cheerfully read us her story out of a history book, and a lovely tale it is. Poor Jane was a settler with long red hair who was killed and scalped by the Indians and rolled into a ditch. If there's one thing I've learned it's that having a monument in your honor is probably a very bad thing.

After cookies in the parking lot most of us went on to see the Neilson House, the only surviving building from the time of the battle and our first glimpse of, at last, blue-tipped posts, signifying that we had finally reached the American lines. Relief was short lived however, in listening to farmer Neilson's account in an audio display, we learned that our naughty troops had trampled Ma's garden when they used the house as a headquarters.

The big wheels of Saratoga

By now it was dusk and the fields began to fill with deer – there for the same reason we were as hunting is not permitted in the National Park. Like most battlefields I've visited, Saratoga is now a serene and beautiful place, making it difficult to think about the thousands who fought and died there.

Gov. Clement Shelter – Are Its Days Numbered?

By Barry Griffith, President
Killington Section

The most venerable structure on the AT/LT maintained by the Killington Section is Governor Clement Shelter in Shrewsbury. Most Section members are aware of the history of problems at the site, which stem from its location near a town highway. This has allowed non-hikers easy access to the site in motorized vehicles, where they can disturb those trying to enjoy the shelter as intended. The good news is that a new shelter will be built on Little Killington in 2007, approximately two miles to the north of Governor Clement and safely distant from roads. This is about halfway between Clarendon Shelter and Churchill Scott Shelter, and will provide an excellent additional overnight option for hikers.

What happens then to Governor Clement? For the past several years the Green Mountain Club and its partners have urged Shrewsbury to abandon the Town Highway leading to Governor Clement, to allow a gate to exclude motorized vehicles to be erected by the Forest Service. Up to now, the Shrewsbury Select Board has been unwilling to abandon the road. The Town did authorize funds for a Sheriff's patrol, and only one incident was reported in 2005. However, that report – of a motor vehicle narrowly missing a tent with campers inside at the Shelter site – is a reminder that even one such incident could lead to tragic consequences.

In January 2006, GMC's Trail Management Committee concluded that hiker safety cannot be assured while vehicles can still be driven there, and recommended that Governor Clement Shelter be removed if Shrewsbury does not abandon the road for gating. A letter summarizing the history and setting forth the resolution has been sent to the Shrewsbury Select Board. The Town has been asked for a favorable response by March 31, 2007. If not received, the erection of the Little Killington Shelter could be followed by the removal of Governor Clement. As expressed in a previous issue of Smoke & Blazes, what a shame that would be.

I understand that the Shrewsbury Select Board intends to schedule a hearing to consider the matter later this year. I will find out when that hearing will be, will notify interested members, and will attend. If you want to be included on my list of interested members to notify, let me know! Time is running out for the Governor.

Heard on the trail

(mostly from hike leaders)

By Steve Williams

"Not much more than five minutes."

"Another hour."

"Another two hours."

"The summit is just around the corner."

"We'll soon see the summit."

"There was a good view before the trees got so big."

"If you climb out on that fallen-over fire tower you just might see something."

"This stream didn't look like that last time I was here."

"The fog should lift any time now."

"Only one more bit of climbing."

"That was the last steep bit."

"Yes, you often have to go down before you can go up."

"Did your cardiologist really say that you could do this?"

"The weather forecast didn't say anything about it raining all day."

"It's just a bit muddier than when I was here last."

"Personally, I'd shoot the ATV drivers."

"Great view if we didn't have the clouds."

Outing Reports

Cardigan Mountain, NH

29 October 2005

By Andrea McQuade, leader

We had 12 people in our group and we hiked in snow! The day was clear and sunny, but the trail was snow covered all the way to the top. The views at the summit were beautiful and we were joined by an enthusiastic group of students from Kimball Union Academy who passed us in both directions. We met a few other hikers along the trail who were also out enjoying a late-fall/early-winter day.

Austin Hill, Rochester

20 November 2005

By Gordon & Helen Cawood, leaders

This was a joint outing of the Killington and Breadloaf Sections. It being hunting season, the six of us stuck to the roads up Austin Hill in Rochester, where there are plenty of "No Hunting" signs. Austin Hill is the location of the Great Hawk Colony, an association which owns some very attractive homes. We saw nice views of the Green Mountains and had lunch at the association's swim pond. Lunch was well deserved after a short hike with an elevation gain of 1200 feet.

Buckner Preserve, West Haven Ski, Snowshoe and Slog

7 January 2006

By Herb Ogden, Leader

Ha! I was right! I told them the cross country skiing would be fine, and I'd even checked it out a couple days earlier, before the last snow. But did they believe me? No! Most brought boring snowshoes. There was no Snowshoe Hare, however, because Ruth Hare did bring her skis all the way down from Montpelier. Now, I will admit that the snow depth was low enough so that Jerry Parker's little dog Dickens had no problems, and that none of those without skis or snowshoes had to posthole through monstrous drifts. Still, the skiing was fine because we were mostly on hayfields and old pastures, and we two skiers left everyone behind on the final glide down to the former Galick Farm.

The Nature Conservancy's Helen W. Buckner Memorial Preserve was our playground on this fine day. Visitors' vehicles are not permitted beyond the summer trailhead, so we left the cars there and walked through the small village of houses, barns, and outbuildings accumulated by the old Galick brothers before they stopped farming and the Nature Conservancy got this beautiful land. Until we began the descent to the inlet of the Drowned Lands, we went first west and then east of the old road shown on the USGS map. That part is overgrown, so we could not actually use it. From there on north, we followed the road across old hayfields or pastures to a little plateau where a woodroad comes in from Bald Mountain on the east. At that point, though there is no longer any obvious road to the west, one simply heads west to the edge of the plateau, and there's the road again, leading down to a sizable house that has fallen down in the last six years. We battled our way through burdock to the foundation so we could have a resting place for lunch. Wisely, Jerry did not join in this endeavor, for Dickens would have resembled a large self-propelled barking burdock burr by the end of it. Everyone enjoyed the panorama from South Bay up the narrow part of Lake Champlain, and most explored the foundations of a large barn just north of the house. No public highway map shows a road to this house, though it is on the 1869 Beers Atlas of Rutland County, so we wondered whether the farmer did most of his trading across the very narrow lake in New York.

Before driving back east into New York (think about that, "east"), we toured three cemeteries. A couple hundred feet from the trailhead is the abandoned Galick Cemetery, with some large slate gravestones going back to 1813. Lying flat near their bases in brushy woods just south of the Tim's Trail parking lot, about 100 feet west of an old power pole, are the big headstones of Charles and Betsey Stewart, who died in 1873 and 1876, aged 87 and 83 respectively. Our last visit was to the Adams Cemetery at The Elbow, the only one that looks like a real cemetery with graves in rows. Over the last three years, the Youth Group of the Unitarian Universalist Church of Rutland has cleared away the prickly ash that was once so thick that you couldn't see from one end to the other. They also have re-erected a number of stones and unearthed more. In the 8 inches of soil that used to cover one large headstone from 1906, the group found a piece of casket hardware and a human collarbone. Our theory is that the substantial headstone led robbers to think the deceased probably had been buried with valuable rings or jewelry. They probably unearthed the casket, robbed it, and then found the quickest way to fill in the hole was to topple the headstone into it and then throw some of what they had dug up onto the stone. This happened too late to be a corpse stealing for the old Castleton Medical School. Any other ideas?

Shareheat Skiathon, Peru

29 January 2006

By Connie Youngstrom, leader

It was hard to imagine that there would be enough snow to ski on at WildWings Cross-Country Center in Peru, but there was. Mark and I enjoyed spring-like conditions on their gently rolling terrain, some of which followed a brook and was quite lovely. The weather was damp and temps were in the high 30s making for tricky waxing. I was glad for my nowax bases. We were later told that the event raised well over $20,000 in pledges to assist local folks with their heating expenses. Mark and I thank you for your pledges. If you have never skied WildWings do plan on joining us next year. You will find great skiing at this low-key relaxing place and will help to raise money for a very worthwhile cause.

Gifford Woods Hot Dog Roast

4 February 2006

By Roma Pulling, leader

Given the choice of leading this hike on Saturday, February 4, or Sunday, February 5, purely by luck we took the better of the two days. It was even better than forecast with mostly sunny skies. Eleven people left the park, where the ground was bare, and arrived at Gifford to find about four inches of snow on the ground. Still, no one saw the need to use snow shoes.

After we had loaded supplies on a plastic toboggan and pulled it to one of the log shelters, Alfred busied himself building a good fire in the metal fireplace ring. As a hike leader I have come to rely on, Jerry Parker with his assistant, Dickens, and eight of the hikers went for a walk on the hill west of the shelter. (Jerry would insist that Dickens was the leader because he went first.) After they left, I took a shorter walk, following in their foot steps.

When we had reassembled at the shelter, Alfred had water boiling for hot beverages. Two of the men cut hot dog sticks, which we used to cook our main course, which was accompanied by rolls, chips, condiments and cookies. Sue brought her delicious brownies with a candle on one to celebrate Barb's birthday. (If you want to know how many birthdays, ask her.)

These winter cookouts are a lot of fun. Try it sometime!

Philo in February

By Steve Williams, leader

11 February 2006

In Smoke & Blazes would-be participants were offered "Sweeping views of the Adirondack Mountains and nearly the entire length of Lake Champlain". This indeed is precisely what was seen, though the snow-shoeing originally envisaged was, due either to the quirks of a New England winter, or as a result of global warming, a non starter. Three section members, plus a guest of the leader from Boston, were on hand to ascend 980 feet high Mount Philo, some eight miles north of Vergennes. There is a very decent well-blazed trail which corkscrews its way up to the summit. There was a light snow covering which masked a few icy patches where those with yak traks, boot stabilizers or other anti slip attachments definitely had the advantage. The summit was at an ideal temperature for lunching, with the view described above. The descent was made via the road.

This was not the Section's longest hike, nor the one with the greatest elevation gain, but a very satisfying one for a bright and clear Saturday morning.

The Long Trail in Bits & Pieces

Former Section President Steve Williams is spearheading an ambitious group who intend to earn their Long Trail End-to-End patches by section-hiking all 272 plus miles of the trail in bits and pieces over the next couple of seasons. Already ten folks have expressed interest and an exploratory meeting is scheduled for 6:00 PM, Monday 20 March at Barry Griffith's office, 98 Merchants Row.

Steve invites all who think they might be interested in joining the group to attend the meeting, or to contact him for more information at Steve Williams, phone 802-645-9529 or internet voorburg@sover.net.

Little Killington Shelter The planned new shelter was discussed. Sue T. will speak with Herb Ogden to discover whether the Killington Section will be expected to contribute to the cost of the new shelter.

The GMC Annual Meeting Lynda H. mentioned that this June event may be the occasion for the parent club's kick-off of the fund raising campaign. That decision has not yet been made.

Cynthia T-M announced that she will be hiking the AT again at the time of the Annual Meeting and has asked John H. to head up the raffle:

* Tickets for sale at one for $1 and six for $5

* Put one or more tickets in the container in front of the item you particularly want; increase your odds for being drawn by putting more tickets in the container.

* Some raffle items have already been donated; more will be collected.

Smoke and Blazes

Bob P. reminded us that February is coming and he has received no articles for that issue yet, suggesting that it would be nice if someone were to write an article on the Governor Clement shelter situation. (Barry G. offered to write a synopsis. See below)

Outing Schedule Sue T. mentioned that she needs hike leaders.

The date of our semi-annual meeting and pot luck dinner was set for Saturday, 8 April this year. Sue T. will double check with the church to assure its availability.

Governor Clement Shelter This continuing situation has taken another turn. Barry G. reported that the Parent Club has written a letter to the Shrewsbury Select Board supporting the National Forest Service's request that Town Highway 13 be abandoned from just north of the northernmost private camp on that road, and that a gate installed, which could be unlocked during the winter and hunting seasons. It is the Forest Service's position that continued motorized access to Governor Clement Shelter threatens the safety of hikers camping at the shelter and that this past year's increased police monitoring has not produced the desired result. If the road is not abandoned by the Town, the Forest Service will be obliged to remove the shelter. (Copy of the Parent Club's letter, penned by Dave Hardy, GMC Director of Field Programs is available from your Secretary. Also available is a copy of the Shrewsbury Clement Shelter Committee chairperson, David Rice's memo to his committee, undated but after November, 2005)

Director Hardy's letter was read to the Board and found to be acceptable in tone and content. The consensus of the Board was that we need not take a formal position. Barry G. offered to write a synopsis of the circumstances surrounding this issue for the next issue of Smoke and Blazes.

Trails Cynthia T-M pointed out that there have been a significant number of blow-downs on most of the trails for which we are responsible, that some work seems to have been done but that much remains to be done. She also reported that vandalism is still a problem at all of our trail heads especially with overnight parking.

Main Club Lynda H reported on the Parent Club's meeting of 17 September 2005.

A copy of her report is available from your Secretary.

It was suggested that an award for Bill Robichaud from the Parent Club recognizing Bill's long service to the Club might be in order. Herb Ogden will be asked to follow through.

End-to-End Steve W. brought the Board's attention to the "Long Trail in Bits and Pieces" project. He said that the project is still alive and of interest to a number of people but that no progress has been made recently. He called for interested parties to attend a meeting on the project on Monday, 20 March, at 6:00 PM at Barry Griffith's office.

The meeting adjourned at 7:30 PM.

Main Club to Meet at Brewery

Most Killington Section members are aware that we are a local chapter of the statewide Green Mountain Club (GMC), commonly referred to as "The Main Club". Reading the quarterly Long Trail News is the only interaction most members have with the Main Club.

This weekend, 2 to 4 June, we have the rare opportunity to take part in GMC activities close to home. Our section is hosting the GMC annual meeting at the Long Trail Brewery (no relation) in Bridgewater Corners, on Route 4, only about 25 miles east of Rutland.

A social hour on Friday at 7:30 PM will be followed by David Wright's slide show on the history of the Long Trail Lodge.

Saturday's 9:00 AM business meeting will give you a chance to meet club leaders and hear about what's going on in the club and on the Long Trail statewide.

Saturday afternoon offers you a choice from nearly a dozen different hikes ranging from an easy half-mile in Eshqua Bog to a challenging 5.8 miles to Okemo Mountain. Meet at the Brewery at 1:00 PM.

More Hikes on Sunday. Meet at 9:00 AM and choose Mount

Dickens

Dickens Parker enjoying a hike to South Pond

By Sue Thomas

The Killington Section recently lost one of its most enthusiastic hikers. Dickens Parker was a fixture on our hikes, summer and winter, cheerfully handling terrain that made his human companions growl. His little legs carried him up sizable mountains, thru snowbanks twice his height, and thru brush and mud, all at an age when most of us will be hobbling around with canes and walkers!

We'll miss him; he was one of a kind.

Outing Reports

High Pond, Sudbury

26 February 2006

By Barry & Barbara Griffith, leaders

The snow storm didn't deter this outing, but made parking in the snow plow turnaround site a challenge. Luckily we were forewarned by a neighbor to bundle the cars tightly together.

The Nature Conservancy trailhead to High Pond Preserve is on Ganson Hill Road in Hubbardton. High Pond is in Sudbury. The hiking trail was constructed by the Vermont Youth Conservation Corps in July 2005. The trail is well marked and quite easy to navigate, with a touch of the Corps' artistic flavor.

Conservationist Douglas Burden started buying parcels of land in the 1930s. Eventually these lands came under TNC's care in the early 1980s. These lands now cover an area of nearly three thousand acres with territory in Hubbardton, Brandon, Pittsford and Sudbury. There is quite a history about the site; if you wish to learn more let the Griffith's know and we will forward the information to you. For history buffs: there is evidence that an old military road passed by the Pond.

After sliding in on a snowy trail we were able to walk along the ice on the shoreline of the Pond. We enjoyed lunch sheltered from the wind in a sunny spot. Tom Copps captured the entire jaunt on GPS for anyone who would like exact guidelines. We were reminded of evidence of the Taconic Mountains with shale and slate outcroppings here and there. Vermont has such diverse geological terrain.

On return to Rutland we managed to drive over the High Pond Road and stopped to view the site of the old High Pond Ski Area. There are old buildings still existing with remains of trails and ski tows. One can go online on New England Old Ski Area Preservation site (nelsap) and read about the spot from the 1940s to the 1980s.

For those who couldn't join us because of the snow or because of it being a Sunday I would recommend a jaunt in.

Stowe Pinnacle

4 March 2006

By Viv Bebee and Larry Walter

After about a two hour drive from Rutland we pooled for a combined eight person count at the parking lot. The weather was a little stormy, with a fresh, 12-inch layer of new snow. The new white stuff actually helped dampen the effects of some pretty nasty ice chutes that Viv and I had encountered on our earlier recon' hike.

The trail has been re-located in recent years to avoid a housing subdivision to the south. The new trail location goes nearly straight up the eastern slope, resulting in some 'otter-slides' on some of the upper sections. We helped each other up a few slippery stretches, to a main saddle where the grades improve. A couple folks with decent crampons and a general disregard for skeletal integrity skittered out to a nice little overlook on the eastern face.

From the first overlook, the trail gently descends along the southeastern slope and then climbs on an easy grade through some conifer thickets to a very nice, open summit. Although we couldn't see the ski resort across the valley, the closer peaks were visible through a screen of light snow. We decided to retreat from the wind to a more sheltered view on the south flank for lunch. Sue Thomas produced a candle and some stubborn matches to celebrate Larry's 53rd plus-one-day birthday (said candle was ceremoniously poked into a whole-wheat with cheddar sandwich).

The return trip was accented by some unintended slides on our backsides on some of the now-exposed ice. One old fool attempted to keep up with our 15 year old member, luckily unscathed. At the urging of Peter (the 15 year old) and others, we stopped at the Ben & Jerry's factory off of Route 100 and replenished our calorie counts. This is a relatively short hike with a great view at the summit. We'll be sure to return in the future, but probably while on-route to destinations north.

Goshen Peak Bushwhack

19 March 2006

By Barbara Griffith

We slid into the parking lot at Brandon Gap (elevation 2183 feet) remarking on our third such hike out in one of our winter's scarce snowstorms. Undeterred, we surged ahead for one of leader Jerry Parker's tracking bushwhacks. Unfortunately the billowing snow covered most of the critter tracks making identification a challenge at the least.

Moose rubbings on trees were abundant. We wandered hither and yon with the hobble bush living up to its name as we tottered, tripped, and staggered trying to stay upright. Hobblebush is a member of the honeysuckle family that one stumbles upon in Vermont's cool, moist woods. It serves as a food and cover for wildlife such as moose, deer, rabbits and small rodents. Hiking critters found a challenge in slogging around in its tangled masses.

Our climb lived up to its true name of "bushwhack". We peaked eventually onto a plateau and searched this way and that for one of those canisters that the Appalachian Trail Conservancy puts atop some 3000 footers. Falling repeatedly into large pot holes left by very hefty moose hooves we eventually slogged along to another peak. A forward search team ventured ahead and returned to the pack reporting "just over the next rise and up the embankment we found our destination". The group followed our leader scrambling over more hobblebush. The ATC canister was located, and all signed in. Another peak conquered or did it conquer us?

The sun parted to allow views from the top of Goshen Peak, (3292 feet). Silence ensued as we gazed out over the Greens, sun shining through swirling snow. First we saw the other mountains. Then we didn't. Agreeing words were not enough to describe the views each trekker shot a memory. You just had to be there.

Mt. Moosalamoo, Salisbury

26 March 2006

by Gordon Cawood, leader

This was a joint Bread Loaf/Killington Section hike starting at the campground at Branbury State Park in Salisbury. The Ethan Allen Trail brought us to Ethan Allen Cave, rumored to have been used by Ethan Allen and the Green Mountain Boys during the War of Independence. The story was convincing enough to the DAR to have recognition of the event inscribed over the cave opening. Here Tom Copps took some neat photos and printed a map which he was kind enough to post to me (and perhaps others) via email. Thanks, Tom! Barbara Griffith is seen crawling out of the cave, her floppy hat almost concealing her identity.

We followed Ethan Allen Trail to its northern end and picked up Bear Pond Trail, which led to the Cold Spring Trail. From there we climbed up to Pat's Pad. Pat's Pad is an open shelter owned by Keewaydin Camp. But we all chose to have lunch in the sun on the exposed bedrock.

After lunch we hiked down the Iroquois Trail and followed Burnt Mountain Trail. The section of trail that climbed Burnt Mountain was poorly maintained and suffered much winter storm damage. (The same was true of most of Ethan Allen Trail.)

We had the option of foregoing the mountain and walking out to Upper Plains Road where a van had been spotted. However, every one chose to climb the mountain. The climb was well worth it. It proved the only real distance viewing to the west over the Champlain Valley and, from another viewpoint to the east and south, over the Greens and Lake Dunmore.

Okemo Mountain, Mount Holly

2 April 2006

Bill Holt, leader

Six hikers and Dickens showed up the day after Fools' Day to hike Okemo from the north side. We started up the Healdville trail midmorning under a sunny sky. The trail climbs up steadily for a 1900-foot elevation gain, but is not strenuously steep. Despite the sun the air was cool from the north, just right for an up hill climb. As we got closer to the summit we started to encounter ice on the trail. The ice increased the higher we went so we had to be very careful of our foot placement while at the same time looking for hand holds. We soon were surrounded by thick conifers and rock so the going was very slow for a while as we negotiated the ice. We made it to the summit unscathed, but a little concerned about returning the same way.

We were now standing underneath the fire tower and through the trees we could catch glimpses of skiers and snowboarders coming off the ski lift. As we went up the tower the wind and cold increased. By the time we reached the top of the tower the wind was gusting over 50 miles per hour and the chill factor was below zero. The views were spectacular despite the cold. We could see individual peaks and mountain ranges in all directions in the crisp blue air. My face started to numb and my eyes water after around ten minutes. The tower was very stable and safe considering the wind that was assaulting it.

After lunch as we started back down the Healdville trail. Jerry and Dickens decided to do a little bushwhacking to avoid some of the ice. Luckily the ice became tackier and less slippery on our way down. We met up with Jerry and Dickens after a short time. He had found a service road that ran parallel to our trail for the first half mile, but the ice was melting now so we decided to stick with the trail. Soon, we were legging it out unencumbered down to the parking lot. The day wrapped up with a drive over to a series of wonderful cascading falls, know as Buttermilk Falls.

Overgrown Roads of Shrewsbury

9 April 2006

By Barbara Griffith, co-leader

Springtime hiking guidelines advise us to keep off the trails in higher elevations until these trails dry out. This keeps the trails from eroding and keeps our feet from becoming waterlogged. Out in rural Vermont there are long-abandoned roads that one only needs to have the time to wander around on and explore. Thus we decided to wander around in "Plymsbury", along the Plymouth-Shrewsbury corridor. My expression is "I'm going for a walkabout."

Our weather was perfect for a stroll through Plymsbury on roads both past and present. We started at the parking lot on the Old Plymouth Road. Friend Lee Wilson led us up through a side road and path to join with the route wished-for, passing by old cellar holes and what was speculated to have been a livestock holding pen. Perhaps it corralled oxen or work horses for one of the logging operations from yesteryear.

We did end up on the CCC (Civilian Conservation Corps) Road heading north for a short distance before slogging down to the right on a logging road/VAST (Vermont Association of Snow Travelers) trail. (Gate closed). The CCC Road was remarkably drivable for this time of year. No snow.

Heading north-northeast, and crossing a dilapidated bridge, we intersected a very overgrown northbound lane. After clambering over trees downed and grown in this questionable pathway we ended up on Grouse Hill Road

Eventually a sunny spot was found where fine lunches were enjoyed, feet were rested, and stories were exchanged.

We followed the Grouse Hill Road back to the Old Plymouth Road. Walking back towards the parking lot we stopped to view the site of an old sawmill. Local history cites this as one of Burditt's sawmills. Although the mill was in Plymouth the logging operation took place in Shrewsbury. Across the way, barely discernable anymore, are the remnants of the schoolhouse foundation for School District 13.

Back on our trek we wandered off to the north again up a side road to another cellar hole. A well is marked with a stick there to save one from plunging in. We wandered up the hillside to view stone stacks and to speculate on their purpose. A few theories abounded. Of course we enjoyed the "Celtic origin" theory the most. However the more scientific and historical minds of the group speculated that a barn was built on this site with the piles of stone being the under-pillar foundation holding the barn. Livestock would have been housed underneath with hay and such on the upper floor.

Onwards we wandered, amazingly coming back to the Old Plymouth Road having "walked about" exactly 6.94 miles according to Tom Cops' GPS mapping. Please call me if you want to "walk-about". There's not much I enjoy doing more than that or bushwhacking.

Lowland Trail Party

29 April 2006

By Herb Ogden,
Trails & Shelters Chair

About a dozen people turned out on a beautiful spring day to work on the Long Trail between Wallingford Gulf and the Lottery Road in Shrewsbury. The Griffiths and Jerry Parker had agreed to remove blowdowns between the Lottery Road and Gov. Clement Shelter, and reported that part of the trail was otherwise in good shape, so we didn't send parties up there. Instead, we had a party working between Wallingford Gulf and Patch Hollow, a party working south from Vt. 103, and a party clearing and waterbarring from Vt. 103 to the Lottery Road. All were successful.

The party that started from Wallingford Gulf had the most work, because three large trees had fallen up on Bear Mountain. We had no certified chain sawyer, so we used the Section's recently bought one man crosscut saw, but as a two man saw with a handle on the small end. We began with two people who knew how to use a crosscut and a wedge, and ended with four or five, so this was an accomplishment in itself. We also did get through all the blowdowns and cleaned out numerous waterbars.

ATVs have made a track just south of the high point on Bear Mountain. They come in from Button Hill, though Patch Hollow, and then up the west side of Bear Mountain till they strike the Long Trail near the top. They are damaging the footway. If you see one, please note its license plate number and tell me or Kim Kinville, the Forest Service's law enforcement person in this area

End-to-End Reunion

1 May 2006

By Roma Pulling, hostess

It seemed like a good idea to move our party to the library (more room, central location), but we couldn't reserve any of the dates that interested us. So, as we have in the past, we welcomed people to our house. No. '45 was pleased. No packing up supplies and transporting them to another location.

As you came through our door, the first thing you saw was a table with the hiker's log, our two End-to-End certificates, old backpacking gear, albums of pictures, and my collection of hiking books including three Colin Fletchers, Earl Shaffer's "Walking With Spring" Robert Macfarlane's "Mountains of the Mind" and various trail guides. We sat in the living room, chatting about our experiences while waiting for everyone to get here, and then adjourned to the dining room. There we continued to reminisce while munching on trail snacks of gorp, pretzels and peanuts, crackers and cheese and trail bars. These were accompanied by a large pitcher of ice-cold lemonade.

A good time was had by all.

Old Brandon

13 May 2006

By Roma Pulling co-leader

It could be said that this hike brought us good and bad luck. I'll leave the bad for later. Early in the day we looked at the sky often, also checked Channel 31 on TV, and the weather didn't look good. But it wasn't raining by time to leave for the park; so we packed up and drove down. We found twelve people besides ourselves! And there was no rain until we were inside our car ready to return home and driving south toward Rutland.

Because we planned to spot cars, we left Rutland with six and planned to leave three at Otter Valley School. It didn't quite work out that way, but we drove to the north end of Old Brandon Road and left the remaining cars there. Several signs on our way indicated this was school property. As we hiked along, I was pleased to leave the lead to younger people while I served as sweep in the rear. We saw several spring wildflowers: red trillium, foam flower, and ginseng among others. Red efts were common.

Jerry pointed out an old cellar hole, and the old Hawk Hill cemetery was interesting. This was the earliest part of present-day Brandon to be settled by white men, the first being Amos Cutler, who came from Hampton, Connecticut, in 1772. In 1773 he was joined by David June and his father-in-law, John Ambler. These two men are buried here. From the cemetery it is a short, downhill walk back to the school parking lot.

It was at this point, when we were nearly ready to leave, that Jerry suffered a very sad loss when his dog and companion, Dickens, wandered into the road and was killed by a car. We thought he was with us, and no one saw him put himself in danger. Everyone knew him and enjoyed having him join us on hikes. He will be greatly missed.

Long Trail End-to-End in Bits and Pieces

Section members who are not regular participants in the "end to end" group are welcome to join these outings, subject to their fitness and the availability of travel space. Those interested should call the designated coordinator at least ten days before the outing to determine the meeting time and place.

Born in New Jersey, and a longtime resident and employee of the State of Connecticut, Wayne and his wife Kathy moved to Rutland last year. They have two grown sons no longer living at home.

Wayne completed an Appalachian Trail thru hike from April to September 2004. He has covered the Long Trail as far as Middlebury Gap and looks forward to pushing on to Journey's End.

A member asked about the restrictions, if any, on the Kirk Fund balances: wondered about what the original mandate was. It was agreed that this topic would be discussed further at the next Board meeting.

Roma was thanked for her service.

Smoke & Blazes: Editor Bob Perkins was unable to attend this evening but was roundly thanked for his service.

Web Site: Public thanks were also offered to our website designer, Deb Waggett.
(www.geocities.com/gmckillington)

Main Club Directors: Lynda Hutchens reported on her attendance at the latest parent club directors meeting. Lynda was thanked for selfless involvement.

Trails and Shelters: Herb Ogden reported that there were many blow-downs but that most have been cleared. He mentioned that we are looking for another Sector Checker to replace Bill Robichaud.

Dave Hardy, Director of Field Programs at the parent club, spoke about the situation with Governor Clement Shelter in Shrewsbury and the Cooper Lodge replacement by the planned Little Killington shelter.

Finance Campaign: Mr. Hardy also spoke about the parent club's fund raising Second Century Finance Campaign. The amount to be raised is from $5 to $9 million, $2 million of which will be used to acquire title to more of the Long Trail in Vermont and $1.5 million of which will be used for trail maintenance. The campaign has not officially been begun because the organizers want to reach more than half of the goal privately from large donors (as a sign of strength) before opening it up to the general public.

End-to-End: Steve Williams reported on the development of the "Long Trail in Bits and Pieces" project. It is expected to take three hiking seasons to complete the 29 sections identified. Day hikes are planned but there may have to be one overnight.

Parent Club Meeting: The GMC Annual Membership Meeting will be held on the weekend of June 2nd, 3rd, and 4th at the Long Trail Brewery in Bridgewater Corners. Killington Section will be host and volunteers were sought.

Board Election: President Griffith opened the meeting to nominations for Board members. Director terms are staggered; three being elected each year for a three-year term with a two-consecutive-term limit.

This year Andrea McQuade and Roma Pulling each completed a term and Sue Thomas completed a second consecutive term. Andrea, Roma, and Wayne Krevetski were nominated and elected as directors to serve to 2009.

Continuing directors are Barbara and Barry Griffith and Steve Williams (to 2008); and John Hale, Lynda Hutchens, and Cindy Taylor-Miller (to 2007).

Election of Officers: The new board met and re-elected the following officers for the coming year

Barry Griffith President
Barbara Griffith Vice P.
Roma Pulling Treasurer
Secretary John Hale

The next Board meeting was set for 6:00 PM, Tuesday, May 23rd at Barry's office: 98 Merchants Row in Rutland.

Program: The business meeting was adjourned at about 8:00 PM and Paul Pilcher presented a slide show of his trip to the Rocky Mountains, which was enjoyed by all.

Little Killington Work Party

18 June 2006

By Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters
Chair

Despite a forecast of temperatures around 90F, about a dozen people showed up to clean up the mess that the fall and winter storms had left on Little Killington. Larry Walter, Dave Coppock and Tom Copps had already sawed through enough of the tangle so that hikers could get through, but much more needed to be done to restore last summer's hiking conditions. By the end of the day, that had been accomplished from Gov. Clement Shelter to Cooper Lodge. We also cut back brush and cleared waterbars.

By far the worst stretch was about half a mile on either side of Shrewsbury Peak Junction. Trees had fallen on the trail every few feet, sometimes in great piles, so multiple trunks had to be cut to clear the trail fully. In places, the tangle alongside the trail was so dense that it was hard to find a place to throw the cut wood. The last task was to saw the fallen mess out of a number of waterbars so they could be cleared!

Dorset Peak, Danby

29 July 2006

By Steve Williams, Leader

The trail, actually an old logging road, starts at the east end of Dorset Hollow. It is of a distinctly convex nature, gradually becoming steeper and steeper until it levels out at a notch, with views to the northeast over the Otter Valley, some three quarters of a mile from the summit. The process is then repeated on the way to the SW summit, where, by climbing on the remains of an old observation tower, more views of the Otter Valley are obtained.

After lunching at the SW summit, and at the encouragement of Sue Thomas, we went on over to the NE peak, which Sue pointed out was only thirty feet higher and was one of New England's highest 100 peaks (number 98 for those who are statistically minded). The route did include some modest descent before re-ascending and a surprising bog at such an elevation, but did take us to the unprepossessing forest bound NE summit, which had the redeeming features of a geological survey canister and an opportunity to record our arrival in the records book

Some of the party thought that the second trail leading down from the NE peak would curve to the west and join the logging road from the notch to the SW summit. After a very democratic debate on the matter we decided to try it for a short distance and reconsider if it did not seem to be working out. It did not; the trail seemed to be very faint and going downhill east too much. We therefore returned back over the NE summit, headed for the SW summit and then turned right on the road to the notch.

While the weather was merely hot and humid on the way up, the party was treated to direct precipitation on the way down. Overall, not the greatest payoff for a peak (the ratio of view divided by effort), but the company was enjoyable, and the participants have now added an ascent number 98 of New England's highest peaks to their hiking accomplishments.

Minerva's Genealogy

This open front shelter was built in 1969 by Louis Stare and members of the Killington Section. Originally a closed camp with a stove, it was converted to an open shelter in 1982 to reduce the threat of vandalism and fire. It replaced Sunnyside Camp, a building of similar design with big double front doors that had been built by the Killington Section in 1955 but had burned. That in turn had replaced Spring Lake Camp, erected in 1951 by the Killington Section 0.6 miles north at what is now Spring Lake Clearing. I heard somewhere that Spring Lake Camp began life as Blue Triangle Camp, which used to stand near Gov. Clement Shelter near the brook bank, but, unlike the rest of the above, I have not been able to verify it by consulting old guide books.

[The following paragraph is copied from an April 1999 Smoke & Blazes article "50 Years Ago in Smoke and Blazes", which reviewed items originally reported in S&B during 1949, its first full year of publication. Ed.]

The major trails and shelters project for the year was the relocation of the old Blue Triangle Camp from its site next to the brook near Gov. Clement to its new home above Spring Lake. On a January work party the shelter was cut into sections and trucked to the south shore of the lake. At least seven more work parties at Spring Lake were reported during the year. The camp sections were tobogganed across the lake ice, carried up through what was then an open pasture, and reassembled high on the hill.

Appalachian Trail Hike in Pomfret, 27 May 2006

by Sue Thomas

The Appalachian Trail segment from Route 12 to Cloudland Road is an especially pretty one in the spring and well worth what can only be called "lumpy" terrain. It's certainly easy to picture those famed Vermont cows, reputed to have shorter legs on one side than the other, endlessly circling the steep hillside pastures which we trekked up and down and up and down. No one of the hills was very high, but Tom's GPS reported a quite respectable total elevation gain for the day, which justified some sore muscles.

We may not have spotted any of these malformed cows, but nature rewarded us with lovely views of the valleys, mountains, and hill farms at many places along the way. We were treated to a patch of rare showy orchis in bloom, and a porcupine ambled along the trail ahead of us and climbed a tree. Farther along a mother killdeer tried to protect her nest, foolishly built in the trail. When puffing up to look her most fearsome failed to intimidate us, she tried dragging a wing to lure us away to an easy meal. As it happened we'd already had lunch, so we admired her handiwork instead – the nest neatly made of woodchips piled on the ground and filled with four beautiful speckled eggs, which blended in so well we didn't see them immediately. She really should speak to her Realtor though – location, location, location.

Killdeer have no corner on bad judgment however. Most of the group struggled across a rain swollen stream before it was discovered that there was a bridge a short distance away!

We admired some of the most impressive stonewalls we'd seen in the woods, evidence that people had once farmed that challenging terrain. I don't know if the cows really did limp, but one AT hiker surely did. We found his discarded swiss-cheese-like boots hanging from a tree – a testament to different generations of Vermonters tackling the same piece of Vermont.

Section Leaders Honored with GMC Life Memberships

At the recent annual meeting of the Green Mountain Club two Killington Section members were awarded honorary life memberships in recognition of their outstanding and long time service to the club. The citations that accompanied Bill's and Herb's plaques are reproduced below.

Bill Robichaud

In the early 1990's, Bill Robichaud joined the Killington Section because he wanted to hike. Although he was already retired, most of the section members couldn't keep up with him. He subsequently took up trail work with remarkable fervor. In the late 1990's, he spent hours helping to build Long Trail relocations over Bear Mountain north of Wallingford Gulf and around the west side of Pico Peak. He served for several years as co-chair of the Section's Trails and Shelters Committee, while continuing to be one of the most faithful participants on work parties. From 1993 to 2005, he came out for 30. At the same time, Bill began putting in long hours on his own or with a few other volunteers. In 2003 alone, he worked over 80 hours "unofficially." He also serves the Club as Sector Checker for the Long Trail between Cooper Lodge and Tucker Johnson Shelter, hiking that stretch at least twice a year and alerting the Committee of any problems requiring a work crew.

According to fellow Section member Herb Ogden, "I am sure there is no part of the Long Trail System in the Killington Section on which Bill has not worked. He has also worked on GMC trails outside our area. He is a meticulous trail clearer, but his specialty is erosion control, which is even more important with heavy use of steep trails.

Herb Ogden

It could be said that the GMC is in Herb Ogden's blood. His father, Herbert senior, was a long-time Club volunteer who introduced his son to the Long Trail. Herb Jr. became an end-to-ender in 1964 and, with his father, helped build the shelter on Mt. Ascutney and acquired the two-hole privy at Governor Clement Shelter (There must be a story here). In addition to regularly volunteering as a Killington Section trip leader, Herb served as Section President from 1996 to 2002. As the Section Trails and Shelters Chair, he runs frequent work outings and, as importantly, coordinates the Club's responses to local trail issues in the Rutland area. From 1992 to 1996, he was secretary to the GMC Board of Directors and has been a member of the Trails and Shelters Committee since 2001.

When asked about Herb's nomination, Breadloaf Section volunteer Anne Hoover wrote, "I think Herb is an excellent choice to be nominated for Honorary Life Membership. I read the Rutland Herald regularly and occasionally see a good letter from him on some relevant issue. I remember Herb (as Chair of the Committee on Long Range Planning) as a quiet, but determined leader. He was an excellent chair and a good listener and, at the time, I thought we got a lot done."

Long Trail End-to-End in Bits and Pieces (The Saga Begins)

Tom Copps & Steve Williams

We are pleased to report that the "Long Trail End to End in Bits and Pieces" project is finding its way forward.... in bits and pieces. To date six sections have been completed (from Route 140 to Middlebury Gap, and a 3.1-mile bit at the Massachusetts border) with participation varying from 6 to 9. Having cars spotted early at the destination trailhead and an early start at the initiating trailhead have turned out to be key to the timely completion of hikes. This will become more difficult as we move further away from "home", but we're learning as we go. We have successfully reconnoitered the route to the Long Trail one mile north of Glastenbury Peak for next year.

Reports of Bits and Pieces

Upper Cold River Road to Wallingford Gulf Road

29 May 2006, Leg 1

By Steve Williams

Monday, May 29, 2006 was the big day, the very first hike by the Killington Section end-to-enders group. We intend to hike the Long Trail in bits and pieces as day hikes over the next two years or so.

We assembled at the Upper Cold River Road trailhead right on schedule. Our roster included Rich and Lindy Brown, Tom Copps, Mike Farrell, John Hale, Robert and Bonnie Lucas, Steve Williams and Cindy Oas-Kirk. Lynda Hutchins and her friend Gene had intended to join us but had to opt out the night before. Barb and Barry Griffith were present for shuttle service but they could not join us either.

Steve Williams had pre-positioned his car at Route 140 earlier and was kindly driven back to the trailhead by Barry Griffith. The nine of us started out for Gould Brook and what lay beyond, many of us in sandals. The previous Wednesday I had checked trail and discovered the brook to be high and running fast. Fortunately it was much lower so we all were able to get across, some in sandals, some in over their boots. Mike Farrell waded across the brook barefoot. We continued on to Kieffer Road, the very first waypoint for the end-to-enders!

Feeling good about ourselves we set out for Lottery Road and beyond. Enjoying our great adventure we continued over Beacon Hill and down to Clarendon Shelter for lunch. On the previous Wednesday there had been a person without any gear staying there; however he was gone when we arrived. After lunch and a short group meeting we set out for Route 103 and the swinging bridge across Upper Clarendon Gorge.

Everybody was quite surprised at the steep rocky, boulder-strewn descent from Clarendon lookout to Route 103. We all agreed that it is better to be going down this pitch than to be going up. We crossed Route 103 and the swinging bridge and started up the bank towards airport lookout. As we climbed the hill Bob and Bonnie Lucas decided that blisters developing from their wet stocks would preclude them from completing the trip this day so they turned back. This slope, although steep, is one of the prettiest parts of the whole trip. It is made up of ledge rock so wide that you have to watch carefully for blazes to make sure that you haven't lost the track. Soon we achieved airport lookout and everybody was glad to have another climb behind us. We all agreed that yes indeed, it certainly was a handsome airport and we were still making good time. But we still had a lot of climbing to do, so after a few moments we set out for the high points above Spring Lake and then down to Minerva Hinchey Shelter.

In due time we reached the shelter and sat ourselves down for a good long restorative rest. Mike Farrell decided at this point that he really did not want to climb Bear Mountain on this particular day. He bid us good luck and set out for the Spring Lake Ranch and the road down the hill to Route 103 where we promised we would pick him up in a couple of hours. After our rest we continued on up to Patch Hollow where several of us pitched in with an attenuated version of the Patch Hollow Legend. Of course it was nowhere near as lucid and entertaining as Barry Griffith's version but those who had never heard it were duly impressed.

Continuing on up Bear Mountain we climbed the last long steep climb. When we reached the top we were all satisfied that we had done what we set out to do and so what still lay ahead of us took us by surprise. We were not prepared for how long it would seem to take us to travel from the north peak of Bear Mountain to the south peak and then down the long switchbacks to Route 140. Even after we could see the roofs of horse barns on Sugar Hill Road below us we still had miles to go before we slept so to speak. Of course everything comes to an end, even a great trip like this, and finally we all broke out into the parking lot at 140 more or less together with great whoops and hollers because we had actually done it! We had completed the first leg of the end-to-enders great trek! And a wonderful hike it was.

We had started at 9:40 AM and were finished by 6:11 PM, for a time on the trail of 8 hours and 31 minutes. The trip was 10.8 miles giving a speed of approximately 1.3 mph. The Long Trail handbook estimates one half hour per mile plus one half hour per thousand feet. Since we had climbed 3027 feet according to DeLorme, the trip should have taken us to 6.9 hours for a speed of 1.6 mph. They may not consider us up to snuff but we sure do.

Sherburne Pass to Upper Cold River Road

17 June 2006, Leg 2
By Tom Shanahan

Besides the leader, this twelve mile section was completed by Tom Copps, Linda Hutchins, Cindy Oas-Kirk and Steve Williams who spotted a car at the Upper Cold River Road. The group then car-pooled to the Route 4 AT/LT crossing at approximately 08:30 AM. The hike was completed at approximately 4:00 PM.

The weather was cloudy and cool. The trail between Route 4 and Cooper Lodge was in good shape. There were many blow-downs on the trail in the area about a half mile on either side of the Shrewsbury Peak Trail. The rest of the trail to the Cold River road was in good shape.

Sherburne Pass to New Boston Trail

8 July 2006, Leg 3
By Steve Williams

This 13.3-mile section with vertical ascent of 2653 feet was completed by Rich and Lindy Brown, Tom Copps, Linda Hutchins, Allie Norton, Tom Shanahan, and Steve Williams.

After the gentle climb from Route 4 to Maine Junction, the trail meandered past the Tucker Johnson Shelter (this name represents two people, not one) to the Elbow Road crossing. With very restricted views and frequent direction changes, the intent of the original trail blazers was at times far from clear. The next landmark was the recently rebuilt and handsome looking Rolston Rest Shelter

More oscillations and undulations brought us to the ledges close to North Pond, from where there is a fine view over Chittenden Reservoir, and which proved to be an ideal lunch spot. En route, our GPS master Tom Copps was mystified by a stream flowing from left to right across our path in a location where we were shown to be on the west side of the ridge. Could it be that the Long Trail map is not as accurate as we thought? (Subsequent checking by Tom proved this to be the case).

From there it was over the hump to the curiously named "Telephone Gap". One participant suggested that was because cell phones don't work there. However, as that situation applies to much of Vermont, further explanation is still being sought.

A final pitch of 0.8 miles on the Long Trail brought us to a skimobile trail heading west, which provided a gentle downhill amble to be joined by the New Boston Trail from the Mount Carmel direction and then on to US Forest Service Road 99 and short hike to the leader's Jeep.

Brandon Gap to New Boston Trail

22 July 2006, Leg 4
By Tom Shanahan

Besides leader Tom Shanahan, this 9.8 mile section was completed by Tom Copps, Linda Hutchins, Cindy Oas-Kirk, Carol Wright and Steve Williams. The starting time was 8:30 AM; the hike was completed at 2:30 PM.

The weather was warm and cloudy. The last two hours of the hike were conducted during a heavy soaking rain. This last factor made all the hikers happy that Steve had been able to spot his car at the intersection of the New Boston Trail and USFS 99.

Brandon Gap to Middlebury Gap

5 August 2006, Leg 5
By Cindy Oas-Kirk

It was a beautiful day for a hike – neither too hot nor humid. The Hikers were Tom Bassett (O Section), Richard and Lindy Brown, Tom Copps, Lynda Hutchins, Cindy Oas-Kirk, Tom Shanahan, Dorothy Sullivan (O Section), and Steve Williams. The elevation gains of the five mountains would rise the temperature, but at that point, we would turn a corner and be relieved by a cool breeze.

We had two fine view points – Great Cliff, which is a protected area from 15 April to 1 August for nesting peregrine falcons, and Cape Lookoff Mountain. The other two hoped-for views, South Worth and Monastery Lookouts, were grown in. We lunched at Sucker Brook Shelter, which was about midpoint in our 9.9 mile trek.

Nine people started in at Brandon Gap at 8:40 AM and nine people arrived at Middlebury Gap at 4:30 PM – and they were the same nine. Another piece of the Long Trail and a great time.

Pine Cobble & Mass. State Line to Country Road

19 August 2006, Leg 6

By Tom Copps

The Killington Section End-to-Enders Group hikes the start of the Long Trail

On August 19 the end-to-end group of the Green Mountain Club's Killington Section hiked the Long Trail from the Pine Cobble Trail in Williamstown Massachusetts to County Road in Stamford Vermont. Our group included Lindy and Rich Brown, Tom Copps, Barb and Barry Griffith, Cindy Kirk, Tom Shanahan and Carol Wright. We were also joined at the trailhead by R.J. Hyden and Dylan Keenan. This pair had read of our adventure and come over from Troy NY to join us. Dylan is an environmental engineer with the state of NY where R.J. also works. R.J. is a powerful wide shouldered 270 pound ex-athlete with a very bad hip that needs replacement and a knee that is also due for an operation. Nevertheless, he sets a fast pace and quickly took the lead up the Pine Cobble Trail. Soon we were at Pine Cobble lookout. The Cobble is covered with a pretty forest of red oak. It has a fine view to the southwest over Williamstown and another to the east of North Adams. Barb Griffith pointed out that there seems to be only one pine tree on Pine Cobble. Since we were running late and it was already noon we decided to have our lunch right where we sat.

After lunch we made our way over the top of East Mountain to the Vermont line. East Mountain is an easy hill strewn with granite boulders. It has limited views, made even more limited by the weather, which was now closing in on us. Of course when we reached the Vermont border we stopped to take group pictures. Although the signs introducing people to Massachusetts were bright and clear those on the Vermont side were old, faded and difficult to read. At this point we had covered 3.3 miles with 3.3 miles still to go. The hiking was easy although the trail was sometimes muddy and slippery. The showers and drizzle that we had encountered in Bennington finally caught up with us and the rest of the trip was done in the damp.

Soon we crossed Risky Ranch Road at 5.8 miles and arrived at Seth Warner shelter at 6.2 miles. The shelter was in good shape with little sign of vandalism or graffiti. This marked our last waypoint with only half a mile left to go. Soon we crossed a power line and arrived at the County Road trailhead.

Although it had been a long drive for a relatively short hike we were pleased to have introduced ourselves to the Long Trail at mile 0. We had also introduced ourselves to the difficult logistics of spotting cars so far away on unfamiliar roads. R.J. promised to do the next leg for us and report on conditions so I guess he didn't find his new companions too slow and boring after all. As always a good time with head by all!

The Next Five Legs

Below is the slightly revised schedule for this fall: Hikers with long distance experience are invited to call a coordinator to discuss their possible participation.

Minerva Hinchey Shelter Goes South

By Herb Ogden, Section Trails & Shelters Chair

Minerva Hinchey Shelter has a new foundation, new sills, and a new location about a dozen feet farther south. The present shelter, once also called Sunnyside Camp was renamed in honor of Minerva Hinchey, who was GMC Corresponding Secretary from 1955-77, back in the days when the Club had only one year-round employee.

To be sure, the present shelter had only been there for 37 years, but it was showing its age. The rear sill was rotten. There were at least two causes. First, there had been years of failing provide for drainage in the rear, including when I had been Trails & Shelters Chair. Second, the builders had rested the sill only on a string of cinder blocks, and they had been heading slowly toward China for years. Consequently, even the floor joists were resting on the ground. Furthermore, the old asphalt shingle roof leaked.

Preparations for renovation began last year, when GMC Field Supervisor Kate Fish, Spring Lake Ranch representative Becki Bates, and a few of us Killington Section members sized up the problem and came up with a list of materials. Then, in July, with our own Jerry Parker in charge, most of the new foundation was laid. In one long day, Jerry, helped by Barry and Barbara Griffith, dug holes for three Sonotubes and poured four of the six footings. This involved moving some rocks that probably weigh a quarter ton.

The next stage began on 12 August, when Jerry led six other local GMC folks, five GMC staff, and one through hiker who decided to stay and help. Jerry Parker, Larry Walter, and GMC Field Supervisor Kate Darakjy deserve special credit, because they were on the site from 8 AM to 8 PM. Spring Lake Ranch folks moved the wood up to the work site for us in their amazing six wheel antique. The 20-foot long 8x8 pressure treated sills took eight people to move. We sawed out part of the old sill and dug out around the back of the shelter to accommodate jacks, laboriously jacked up the shelter, and put it on cribbing mostly donated by Spring Lake Ranch. Using two come-alongs simultaneously, we inched it about 15 feet south so the front rested on one of the new sills and the rear rested on cribbing. Meanwhile, others gathered up trash and pried the old nails out of the discarded sill and siding pieces so they made safe kindling wood. The die-hard evening crew, consisting of Jerry Parker, Larry Walker, and GMC Field Supervisor Kate Darakjy at least, dug two more 4-foot holes for the remaining Sonotubes and poured Sakrete mixed with Portland cement in them before going home.

About a dozen of us put in another full day on Sunday, 13 August. We drilled the remaining sill to fit the Sonotube bolts, put the sill onto the Sonotubes, and moved the shelter a couple feet west. (The westward move was necessary because the crew had poured as many Sonotubes as possible in July, including the west most one of the rear three, so of course the rear one had to be a couple feet from the original shelter location.) We improved our moving technique by using small logs as rollers this time, so it was possible to move a couple feet in perhaps twenty minutes, much faster than the day before, when sliding the joists over the cribbing often threatened to collapse the cribbing. We then rolled the shelter back onto the rear sill. Meanwhile, a couple of us had filled in the holes and done a little light landscaping. Others replaced the bottom course of rotten siding and sawed off the excess sill at either end. (The shelter is 16 feet long.) Last tasks for the day were to nail metal roofing over the bottom of the shelter front where it had been heavily gnawed and to build temporary rock steps on the same side. That task involved three people with rock bars and one or two others to shove the huge rocks into place.

There's more to do. The main task is to remove the old asphalt shingle roof and replace it with green metal that currently resides under the shelter. Remaining carpentry includes adding four corner board sets and probably building some steps for the front of the shelter, which is now a good deal higher than it used to be. It would also be nice to finish the landscaping, replace the table, which looks as if folks have built fires on it, and restore the fourth window. Please check the Outing Schedule elsewhere in this issue for the date of a September work party to finish up this big job.

Special thanks are due to head carpenters and planners Jerry Parker and Larry Walter and to Spring Lake Ranch for helping with people, materials, and a vehicle, and for allowing us to keep the shelter on its land.

Long Trail End-to-Enders' Quest Continues Bits & Pieces Start to Add Up

Mad Tom Notch to Prospect Rock

21 October 2006, Leg 8
by Allison Norton

With several cancellations in previous weeks due to scheduling difficulties and horribly rainy weather, the participants, Tom Copps, Allison Norton, Cindy Oas-Kirk, Tom Shanahan and Steve Williams, were thrilled to wake up to a clear day following the first bit of snow for the season in our area. There was no snow on the ground in downtown Rutland, but the higher elevations got a dusting. The sunny drive from the rendezvous point in Rutland to the Manchester area was absolutely gorgeous, with sparkling snow on all of the peaks bordering Route 7. Even with a pit stop for coffee and doughnuts in Manchester we got to the trailhead at Mad Tom Notch pretty early. Thanks Steve and Tom for planning ahead and spotting a car at the other end by the time the rest of us arrived. (I guess we should have brought them some doughnuts too).

For the first few miles we were hiking in several inches of snow. The trail was icy in some spots and like a waterfall in others. We saw an interesting phenomenon of stringy-looking ice along the edges of the trail, which someone said was hoarfrost. Killington section members sure are knowledgeable! Being well-behaved hikers and wanting to establish good leave-no-trace karma, we tried to walk on the wet parts of the trail rather than going around. At one point someone suggested that we were actually doing double the mileage by zigzagging back and forth across the trail! Unfortunately the wet trail resulted in at least three wet boots in our party within the first hour.

Bromley Mountain was cold, icy, and windy, but beautiful in the snow. We liked the idea of feeling like we were Bromley's first visitors of the ski season. We climbed the lookout tower which was even colder, icier, and windier. We also went in the ski patrol cabin at the peak. On the way down from Bromley, a few of us checked out Bromley shelter. Even though it is a

The last leg write-up is a hard act to follow, but here is a humble offering. For this final leg of the first season of "End to Ending" in bits and pieces, the participants were Cindy Oas-Kirk, Tom Copps, Tom Shanahan and Steve Williams. Based on two past experiences of the LT at high elevations with fresh snow, which had indicated just how hard white blazes can be to follow, Steve decided to take a look at the trail on the previous day, and did in fact ascend the first (Styles) Peak. From Mad Tom Notch to the peak snow depths varied from about two inches to maybe four or five. Contrary to Steve's concerns, this was not enough to make finding the trail difficult. There were two significant blow-downs just before Styles Peak, which raised another concern: Did the remaining ten miles of Saturday's hike have a similar problem?

After meeting at the USFS Route 10 trailhead at 7.15 AM to spot a car, the group traveled the seventeen miles over USFS 10 and What Color is Summer?

At a recent Killington Section board meeting we asked for suggestions on ways to spice up Smoke and Blazes. One of the first responses was "What about color?" A good idea!

My challenge then became – what color? We publish quarterly, by the seasons. The color for fall was an easy choice. It had to be orange – the color of fall foliage, of pumpkins, and of Halloween.

For winter we want the coolest color – blue. There is even a shade called ice blue. That's appropriate.

In spring the grass, the leaves, and almost everything else outdoors turns verdant green (which actually means "green green"). And we are, after all, the Green Mountain Club. So we have pretty obvious colors for three of the seasons.

But summer! What color is summer? Why was I stuck on this one when the other three were so easy? July conjures up red, white and blue but that wouldn't be practical for our one-color production process. After much thought the best I've been able to come up with is – yes – hot pink.

Help! Can anyone rationalize a better choice?

Thinking about colors and writing in this space, which is sometimes used for Vermontivia, sent me to one of my favorite references: Ester Munroe Smith's Vermont Place Names. Did you know the Vermont has 3 Green Mountains, a Green Peak, and a Green Hill (not counting the range, itself); 2 Black Mountains and 3 Black Hills; 2 White Rocks Mountains and a White Hill; a Red Mountain, a Grays Mountain, a Browns Mountain, a Blue Mountain, and our own Blue Ridge?.

Rattlesnake's Lament

by Sue Thomas

Nobody knows the trouble I've seen.
 I was minding my business down by the stream
 When out of the blue came a blood-curdling scream.
 Oh, sorrow and woe.

By the lake they call George my friends and I dwell.
 We like it just fine; the scenery's swell.
 Then the Killington Section turned our heaven to hell."
 Oh, sorrow and woe.

Later that day I told my friend Jake:
 "Even now when I think of it I start to shake!
 That boot coming toward me was too much to take!"
 Oh, sorrow and woe.

"By God, it was awful; I'll tell you no lie.
 That skinny one looked me right in the eye!
 It was chilling, I tell you; I thought I would die!"
 Oh, sorrow and woe.

"That's nothing," said he, "just wait till you hear --
 I nearly wound up on the point of a spear!
 That one they call Barb is a menace, I fear!"
 Oh, sorrow and woe.

So we hope that you hikers will give us a break.
 And if you come back to our home by the lake.
 Leave Barb and her stick in the car for God's sake!
 Oh, sorrow and woe.

Outing Reports

Quechee Gorge, Hartford

10 September 2006

by Roma Pulling, co-leader

Each of the five hikers who headed for Quechee on a cool but sunny Sunday morning had experienced the Gorge in some way, either walking into it or perhaps just riding over it; but each of us was able to add a new facet to the adventure.

Most of us had visited the area before development of the state park and found it very different. Instead of walking under Route 4 from the north side on an unimproved gravel road, we now parked in the new paved parking lot in front of the new Visitor's Center, both on the south side of the road. We started our hike by descending steps at the right of the Center to a new path which followed a series of switchbacks to the location of the old gravel road. In place of the old road was a thoroughly groomed version with a high metal fence on the side toward the gorge.

After the gradual descent we scrambled down onto the ledges and sat beside the Ottauquechee River to eat our lunch. The climb back to Route 4 was slightly more strenuous but not unpleasantly so, and we were soon on the trail under the road and on our way to view the falls near the site of the former Dewey's Mills. We continued on the trail, enjoying views from different angles, and discovered that instead of coming to an end it continued on as a wide swath through head-high goldenrod. There was much speculation about where the path was leading us, but no one suggested turning back.

At the end of a leisurely and very pleasant walk which was soon bordered by a body of water, we encountered another road and people enjoying water pursuits, including canoeing. A sign identified the site as Dewey's Pond State Recreation Area. Across the road I recognized Quechee Inn, which was formerly known as Marshland, the home of Joseph Marsh, Vermont's first lieutenant governor. In the '40s it was acquired by my cousin, Kathleen Robinson Goodwin, and her husband and operated very successfully as a dairy farm until they left under pressure from the state and the Quechee Lakes development. Alfred and I and the children enjoyed many visits to the farm.

Recognizing that it was time to leave, we retraced our steps but took time to walk across the 163-foot-high bridge over the gorge with a hiker who had never had that pleasure. Thus ended a familiar, but still different, visit to one of Vermont's natural wonders.

Silver Lake, Leicester

16 September. 16, 2006

by Bill Holt, leader

Six hikers arrived at the Minnie Baker trailhead at 9AM. The Minnie Baker heads east from Route 53 just south of Lake Dunmore. The trail is a very gradual up hill climb for about a half mile before leveling out. After another half mile the trail descends to the Leicester Hollow trail. We headed north on the Leicester Hollow trail for just a couple hundred yards before taking a turn to the left up the Chandler Ridge trail.

The day started out humid and somewhat heavy, but the moisture was welcomed by all the colorful mushrooms. They were most plentiful among the hardwood forest running along the spine of the Chandler Ridge trail. We hiked north on the Chandler Ridge trail, slightly uphill at first then mostly level for about three miles, before descending to Silver Lake.

There were quite a few people enjoying the lake when we arrived. One guy was swimming across a very narrow section of the lake near the dam holding his boots up in the air with one hand while swimming with the other. We crossed the dam and met the Silver Lake caretaker. He has a camper and is at the lake all summer, although many nights he goes home because he lives close by. We found a picnic table in the sun and had our lunch.

The roads leading into Silver Lake are gated -- no vehicular traffic. So if you come here to enjoy the lake for a day or to camp overnight you have to hike in a little over a half mile down hill. Coming back out is fairly steep, especially if you are carrying anything, and can seem much longer than going in.

After lunch we took the Leicester Hollow trail, a very gradual down slope for around three miles. This trail follows a meandering brook which begins its journey at the outlet of Silver Lake. Much of the Leicester Hollow trail is bordered by steep woods, large boulders, and moss. It is a wonderfully beautiful trail most often, but when the mosquitoes have hatched you'd better have protection. They can be fierce! We finished our hike by rejoining the Minnie Baker trail on which we started

The only disappointment was that we forgot to bring a snack to share See ya next time.

Bike Hike, Castleton

7 October 2006

Joan Davidson, leader

It was a cool clear morning when four of us bikers met across from the old Ft. Warren drive-in. We put on plenty of layers because it was going to feel even cooler once we started our ride down the "rails to trails" through Castleton State College. Once we got going, the ride was invigorating and full of fun and good conversation as we straddled the bike trail in two's. Half way to Poultney, we stopped and took a few layers off because the air temperature was rising as well as our own body temperatures from all the peddling.

Upon arriving at Main Street in Poultney, we were surprised to see a town-wide yard sale everywhere. Many people were meandering up and down the street looking for a deal as well as enjoying each others company. As we were taking a break, we had a nice talk with a couple who have been on another section of the "rails to trails" that goes to Rupert. That will have to be a trip for another day for us, because this is where we got off the trail and headed east down Main St. Once we rode by the congested store fronts, we slowly made our way down into the historical village of East Poultney. At the town green we took a left onto a dirt road that would bring us in a northerly direction back toward Castleton.

The back roads that we traveled had spectacular foliage with charming old farms and homesteads. During our lunch break, we had a few good laughs as we took photos of each other and experimented with the timer on the camera. Just before the biking group began its ascent up a steep hillside I left, due to lower back issues and proceeded back to the cars by a shorter less strenuous route. I later learned that the threesome saw tremendous views at Pond Hill Ranch before descending back into the village of Castleton. All in all, we had a beautiful day for our bike ride and wished you all could have been there too. Maybe next year?

You won't find West Mountain, Proctor, popularly known as "High Ledge," on any list of Vermont's 100 highest peaks; but when you arrive at the top you are in a very special place. You can pause to admire a view of Otter Valley.

I had made several trips to the lookout, including ones with friends and a few with a group of Senior Citizens, but the scariest was in the back seat of a jeep, an experience I don't care to repeat.

Leaving the park in Rutland we were a group of 19 hikers from ages 17 to 81. We drove to Proctor village via the West Proctor Road in four cars, which we parked at a wide spot across from Proctor Gas and started our hike there. We first retraced our route a short distance up the West Proctor Road to Cain Street, followed that street for some distance to where we could hike to our right and kept to our right at each trail junction until our destination was reached. Except that our teenager took a more direct route, climbing up the steep face of the bluff. No one else was tempted to follow him.

After eating our lunch while taking in the view, including what appeared to be a wildfire, we made our way back to our cars by the same route.

Putting the Trail to Bed

4 November 2006

by Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters

Eight people did the best we could to get our thirty-plus miles of trail ready for winter, but we covered only about a tenth of the total mileage. No, that doesn't mean we'd need ten times the volunteers (eighty) to do the job right. There are considerable stretches that have few waterbars and side ditches, and they don't need attention after all the leaves fall. For example, there's not much to do between Patch Hollow and Route 103 and between the Lower and Upper Cold River Roads on the Long Trail, and on the lower two miles of the Bucklin Trail. Still, the statistics do mean we sure could use more help to clear out the waterbars and ditches in the late fall so they can do their job in the spring and keep the water off the trail. Otherwise our "Footpath in the Wilderness" turns into a "Footbath in the Wilderness."

We eight began at US 4 and covered from Willard Gap on the north to Churchill Scott Shelter on the south. Two went north with a hoe and loppers, and the rest went south, armed with hoes, loppers, and a chainsaw. Countless waterbars and side ditches were cleared of silt and leaves, and this is by far not the first time since the trail was built. Things silt up fast. It's hard to remember that all the original waterbars and ditches were dug only about eight years ago when the trail was relocated from the present Sherburne Pass Trail to its present location.

If you have some time after hunting season, or even before that if you wear blaze orange and make noise, and if the ground isn't frozen yet, please consider calling me at 293-2510 to volunteer to spend at least a few hours with a hoe, clearing more waterbars and ditches so the water will stay where it belongs.

Killington Section Directors Meeting

by John Hale, Secretary

The Killington Section Board of Directors met at 6:00 PM, on 17 October 2006 at the Back Home Again Café in Rutland.

Attendance

Board members present: Barry Griffith, President; Barbara Griffith, Vice President; Roma Pulling, Treasurer; John Hale, Secretary; Lynda Hutchins; Steve Williams; and Wayne Krevetski.

Others present: Al Pulling, Bob Perkins, and Thelma Perkins

Secretary's Minutes

The minutes for the 23 May Board Meeting were reviewed. The spelling of Al Pulling's name was corrected and, in the Treasurer's report, the Restricted funds were corrected to show the Certificate of Deposit amount to be $13,345.27 and the Savings Account balance to be $1,832.75 rather than the vice versa amounts mistakenly presented. The revised minutes were then accepted with thanks to John.

Treasurer's Report

Roma Pulling reported on the Section's bank balances as of 10/17/06:

Un-Restricted:

Checking	$ 1,449.02
Savings	1,133.09
Checks not deposited	96.25
Certificate of Deposit	1414.51
	$ 4,092.87

Restricted:

Savings	$ 1,804.98
Certificate of Deposit	13,345.27
	$15,150.25

Total..... $19,243.12

These balances represent a $196.02 reduction from the total reported on 5/23/06. The Treasurer's report was approved as presented.

President Barry led a discussion about a $500 authorization of expenditure from the Kirk Fund (Restricted) to support the Minerva Hinchey shelter renovation. The Main Club has not requested us to disburse these funds and it was decided to await such a request. Treasurer Pulling was, however, directed to reimburse the Griffiths for the $50 they spent from the $500 authorization.

Main Club Board Meeting

Lynda reported on the Main Club Board Meeting of 30 September 2006. Some highlights are:

- Financially the GMC is running slightly behind last year's bad performance. It is, however, more of a cash flow problem than a fiscal crisis; the year will probably come close to breaking even with the $1.3 million budget.

- The Second Century Campaign is advancing but slowly. Pledges for $2.4 million of the $5.25 million goal have been received. The Campaign will be formally announced when $3.0 million in pledges is in hand.

- The Main Club needs specific sections to host presentations of the Taylor Lecture Series in March or April.

Lynda's detailed report is available from the Secretary.

Taylor Lecture Series

A general discussion ensued about the Main Club's Taylor Series program. Apparently the lectures in Rutland were embarrassingly poorly attended in the past. Some questioned whether we should offer to host. Lynda will find out the subjects of the lectures; the sense being that if some subject/speaker were really interesting, we might offer to host.

Trails & Shelters

• Minerva Hinchey Shelter

President Barry detailed how much work went into the recent renovation of the Minerva Hinchey shelter, especially the extraordinary involvement of Jerry Parker who put in an estimated 100 hours of effort. Others involved were Larry Walter, Wayne Krevetski, many of the Spring Lake organization personnel and the Griffiths.

• Governor Clement Shelter

There has been no response, formal or otherwise from the Shrewsbury Select Board who were to be looking into various tactics. In the meantime, there are anecdotal reports of another recent beating assault on a hiker.

• Little Killington Shelter

The Main Club has decided not to accept the cash donation offered in exchange for naming the New Little Killington shelter "Four Bears"; no new name has been established.

Herb Ogden has offered a gift of up to $1,000 in dollar-for-dollar matching of other donations received for the cause of building the New Little Killington Shelter.

While Herb is willing to continue as the Chairperson of the Trails and Shelters committee, he would appreciate sharing the effort with a new co-chair and would be happy to turn the job over to anyone who would like it. The Board discussed this situation.

Smoke & Blazes

Bob P. reported that delays in his receiving the hiking schedule are still a problem for him in getting out the newsletter. The last issue was two weeks late. President Barry will address this problem. Bob and Thelma send out about 200 copies.

The Long Trail in Bits and Pieces

Steve W. reported that this project is still very much alive with six to ten participants for each leg. Management has fallen back to himself and Tom Copps.

Outings Leadership

A general discussion ensued about whether a hike leader can/should turn away a prospective hiker. This point has been discussed at past Board meetings and we again confirmed the Killington Section policy that a hike leader has absolute authority to decide whether a person can participate in any given hike based on safety considerations of the individual and of the group at large. We also decided that a general statement of this policy should be included in the appropriate section of the "Smoke and Blazes" newsletter.

Barry and Bob will generate the wording.

Long Trail Festival

Wayne detailed his ideas about his Long Trail Festival to be held next year on 17 to 20 August 2007 at the Rutland County Fair Grounds. He is now forming a steering committee and establishing a budget. More complete details can be found at www.longtrailfestivalvt.com.

Appreciation of Jerry Parker

We all thought some token of appreciation is in order for Jerry Parker for all his selfless involvement in Killington Section projects: suggestions included a Proclamation, a Plaque (whether or not attached to Minerva Hinchey shelter), and Publication of the honors.

Ben Rose to Visit Area

Steve W. will host a special hike for Main Club Executive Director Ben Rose starting at Steve's house next Tuesday, October 24th at 10:00 AM: destination - Haystack.

Pot Luck Supper

The Killington Section fall pot luck supper will be held on 18 November.

Next Board Meeting

The next Board meeting will be held on Tuesday, 6 February 2007, at 6:00 PM and will involve food.

The meeting was adjourned at 8:34 PM.

three-sided affair, it is a palace of a lean-to! It has a large overhang and a sleeping loft.

The next several miles of our hike had less snow but a lot of stream crossings. Tom C. took several opportunities to politely recommend the investment of waterproof boots. Luckily the good LT karma from walking directly in the water and the mud on the trail prevented any of us from falling in any of the streams. Well, no one fell all the way in, anyway. After a treacherous crossing of routes 11 and 30, we had a lunch break by yet another water crossing (this one at least had a bridge). We took a spur trail up Spruce Peak to check out the views (and, of course, to say we'd done it). The spur trail involved some rock scrambling.

We then went on to Spruce Peak shelter, which is an enclosed cabin. One member of our group looked inside and found a taciturn non-hiker staying there. On our way back to the trail we mentioned the man to some hikers going toward the shelter, and they said that he had been there the day before as well. A general discussion of safety and shelter usage ensued. (Steve's post trip note: this was reported to Waterbury who in turn contacted the Forest Service. By the time someone went back to the shelter, the "resident" had moved on). Toward the end of the hike we found Prospect Rock. The views from the cliff were pretty nice with mist rising from the valley. The end of our hike was an easy walk down Old Rootville Road. Steve's Jeep came into view way too soon.

connecting roads to reach Mad Tom Notch. (This road had been closed two weeks before because of washed away culvert. Fortunately the Forest Service had been speedy in fixing the problem, thus saving the group the necessity of driving around via Routes 7, 11 and 30 and then the Peru back roads).

As the hike started, conditions were misty, a situation that prevailed until about mid-day. On Friday, Styles Peak had provided views to the East; on Saturday there was just the occasional glimpse of something from time to time. The group then passed over Peru Peak, which is notable for having no view whatsoever, and seems to be such an insignificant landmark that there is even no marker at the summit. The descent to Griffith Lake was the steepest and snowiest part of the day, but fortunately without the major blow-downs previously envisaged by Steve. All took some tumbles of one sort or another, fortunately without damage. Lunch was taken at the Peru Peak shelter, after which it was a short distance to the LT Expressway, aka the puncheons around Griffith Lake.

Shortly after the lake, we had our first encounter of the day with other hikers – a family who had come up the Old Job trail. They were last seen following our group towards Baker Peak, which provided its own reward of no mist and fine views over the Otter Valley. Then began the long and steady five-mile descent toward USFS 10. In about a mile the end of snow was reached, thus giving eight miles of snow and four of a very wet trail for the day's conditions. Apart from a slight irritation from the general wetness of the trail, the descent was actually a very pleasant amble in the woods.

Our second encounter with another hiker occurred at the Big Branch Shelter. A woman from Connecticut was just trying out her new overnight camping equipment. She appeared to be equipped with all necessities, except for a map. Thus the group was able to be the good guys and identify just where she was, upon which she decided that was the right place for the night. All bade their farewells and trundled off to the trailhead and the drive back to Mad Tom Notch.

It's Not Work If You're having Fun

Our Section is responsible for maintaining about 25 miles of the Long Trail and several miles of side trails. In his 2006 annual report to the main club in Waterbury, Herb Ogden, Section Trails and Shelters Chair, recently submitted some interesting Killington Section trail work statistics for the year.

37....number of volunteers
381....hours of trail work
69....hours of travel time
25....hours of white collar work

Why not consider becoming a statistic for 2007?

How To Do Good Deeds While Enjoying A Hike

by Herb Ogden, Sections Trails & Shelters Chair

For several years, a few people have made our work parties much more efficient by checking sectors of our trails ahead of time and reporting what needs to be done. That way, we no longer need to send work parties over the whole 33.4 miles of Long Trail and side trails we are responsible for.

Sector Checkers periodically visit their sectors, perform any maintenance they feel comfortable doing (which may be none if they are so inclined), and report to the Section Trails & Shelters Chair on the condition of the trail and the need for major work where help is needed. Tools and guidance by experienced trail workers are provided as needed. Typical maintenance by Sector Checkers or full-blown Section work parties includes pruning trailside foliage, trimming weeds and brush, hoeing out waterbars and trailside ditches, removing blowdowns, repairing or replacing signs, and repainting blazes. To become a Sector Checker or to be put on a list of volunteers to call when a need arises, please contact Trails & Shelters Chair Herb Ogden at 293-2510 or hogden@vermontel.net.

Two of our Sector Checkers have retired, Bill Robichaud for health reasons and John Horchner because he has moved away. The Section thanks them for their years of service. Their sectors, marked VACANT below, are open for new checkers.

Smoke & Blazes to Turn 60

This issue, Volume 60, Number 1, marks the beginning of the 60th year of publication of Smoke & Blazes. The Killington Section newsletter is believed to be the oldest of all Green Mountain Club section newsletters in continuous publication. Volume 1, Number 1, pictured on page 1, appeared in September, 1948.

The lead article explains that "someone had an idea" that "we have a monthly news sheet for the Killington Section". Almost apologetically it makes clear that "at present it is in the experimental stage" and that "the question of continuing the project after January will be presented at the annual meeting".

Well, the annual meeting voted its approval and the rest, as they say, is history – in more ways than one. For six decades Smoke & Blazes has chronicled and recorded the activities of the Section and its members – the day hikes and overnights, the paddling and pedaling, the spaghetti suppers and sugar-on-snow, the committee meetings and slide shows, and the blazes painted, the water-bars cleared, and the shelters built.

The other front page story on that first issue, for example, reported on the Intersectional held that August at the Monroe Farm at the foot of Camel's Hump. For many years the Green Mountain Club held annual, week-long campouts that were well attended by folks from all of the sections.

Fortunately, a couple of pack-rats retained copies of every issue of Smoke & Blazes and they are now available in the library of the Vermont Historical Society in Barre and at the Rutland Historical Society.

Outing Reports

Otter Creek Paddle

26 August 2006

by Barbara & Barry Griffith, leaders

Hauling the kayaks back into the barn to hang 'em back up off the rafters hauled out the memory of our last kayak for the club on Otter Crick....it was so much different than the '05 trip. This time the water was LOW. So I pulled out the old report and will excerpt it here:

One thing about high water on the Creek, it eliminates most "snags" as we refer to those stringers or walls of refuse that can occur across any narrowing body of water. They consist of trees, trunks, junk, rubbish, basketballs, and at times have sand and mud involved with vegetation growing abundantly.

An auspicious start with two participants dumping head over heels into the crick left us using Jerry's new pump to bail them out. Since the water was soooo low, no one really wanted to get mired knee deep into the mucky muddy clay of the crick banks. So instead, different launch methods were applied to start the voyage. As you gather, they were apparently unsuccessful attempts. Well, the mud got its hold on certain kayaks--and was reluctant to release its hold. You had to be there to have appreciated it

Low water we're coming around....Not too much grumbling once everyone was "remounted" and on their way. Must say the two were good sportsmen about their unscheduled swim. This was one way to cement the group together with camaraderie.

Along comes the first stringer to challenge the group. We manage to get all kayaks across without dumping (barely) and are on our way again. Then comes the 2nd., 3rd., 4th., 5th., 6th., 7th., ...well, we lost count somewhere along the way after lunch. One big portage had us wondering what the dickens we had gotten ourselves into. Two other groups came along to the same portage. We were delighted to encounter others out using the crick along with us.

I'll tell you this, the last log jam I had to haul my kayak up and over -- my arms were about done in. We really couldn't have done the trip without the cooperation of the group. Kayaks back on the vehicles, exchanges of how great a trip it was (really) and this person was more than relieved to make it home and collapse into a chair.

Hope to see more brave souls on the waters of Otter Crick next year. It truly is a beautiful place to spend the day.

USFS Road 10 to, Wallingford Gulf Road

9 September 2006, Leg 7

by Tom Copps, leader

On Sept. 9 the Long Trail end to end group hiked leg7 from FS 10 to VT 140. Cindy Kirk, Allison Norton, Tom Shanahan and Tom Copps made up the group with Tom Shanahan leading. As we were leaving the parking lot a bus full of young people pulled in. They were trail runners out for a training loop around the pond. The weather was threatening but comfortable for the moment at least. Within a mile the faster runners overtook us; we weren't in any hurry anyway. When we reached Little Rock Pond we found many of the runners already swimming and jousting with each other. The weather wasn't getting any better so we continued on toward Little Rock Pond Shelter. Presently a couple of the runners came down the trail obviously going in the wrong direction. They thought they were on the loop trail around the pond even though they were quite a ways below pond level. So we turned them around and sent them back up the trail. If we had not stopped them who knows; they might still be going.

Soon we reached the old Aldrichville site at the head of Homer Stone Brook. Quite a few artifacts still remain so we explored a bit and had a brief snack. However, with an eye on the sky we were soon moving again. We made our way comfortably up White Rock Mountain and across the top to the Rock Sculpture Garden. Unfortunately, a great number of the rock sculptures have been tipped over. We debated whether this was caused by vandals or the weather. We chose the weather. By now everybody was hungry (again) so we went down to the top of White Rock cliff for a leisurely lunch in spite of the sky.

Soon however we were hurrying down the trail past the Greenwall Shelter to where the Long Trail leaves the Keewaydin Trail and drops down to cross Bully Brook. Finally the rain found us and we picked up the pace again. Immediately we were drenched in a real downpour. As we continued down to Sugar Hill Road a bolt of lightning struck right next to us. It was so close that it left all of us quite shaken. We hurriedly crossed Sugar Hill Road then Route 140 to the parking lot. We were soaked but warm enough and happy as we hurriedly got into the cars. It really was a great hike, a little unusual but great!

Stratton Mountain

14 October 2006

by Sue Thomas, leader

I suppose that Stratton Mountain really ought to be approached with some reverence -- after all it is considered to be the birthplace of the Long and Appalachian Trails. Green Mountain Club founder, James Taylor, came up with the idea for the Long Trail while hiking there, and Benton MacKaye thought up the Appalachian Trail from the summit. As I led the Killington Section up the trail on a picture-perfect fall day, I expected some such life-changing inspiration to strike me too, but it was not to be. Oh well, I'll settle for a beautiful fall day in Vermont, good company, and a sweeping view from a lofty fire tower, and leave lofty ambitions to others.

On the summit a plaque tells the history of the mountain, and from the tower Somerset Reservoir, Mt. Snow, Glastonbury, Equinox, Ascutney, Killington, and Grand Monadnock were all visible.

Given the significance of this spot to the Club, perhaps we should make the climb a yearly pilgrimage. We might even sacrifice some ritual trail mix on the summit, dance around and chant...no, maybe not!

On the way home we stopped to see the nearby Daniel Webster monument commemorating the spot where the orator spoke to a crowd of 1600 at a Whig Party rally in 1840.

Masters Trail, Rupert

6 January, 2007

by Larry Walter and Viv Bebee, leaders

Others along for the walk in Merck Forest: Sue Thomas, Herb Ogden, Tom Copps, Mark and Connie Youngstrom, Steve Williams, Woody and Phoebe. (We were briefly introduced to Jerry Parker's 13-week-old Cairn terrier, Burdock, in the morning).

Access is southerly and then easterly from West Rupert. There's a place to park by the Merck gate, as long as you're not in the path of the bus or in the snow plow turnaround. Jeff Harvey and I had cleared the trail a couple weeks back, so it's a nice unencumbered grade up about 25 switchbacks or so, and then up the main southerly ridge from Mt. Antone.

We had a pleasant lunch at the lookout, just off the north side of the summit, where I managed to pick up a tick. It was windy and probably in the mid 50s -- really weird stuff for January. Just when we headed back to the south, a pretty good rain squall hit us as we made our way down Beebe Pond Trail.

I was ahead a little bit, looking for things to clear off of the trail, when I heard a loud WHUMP and one of the dogs yelp. I looked back up the trail to see Connie standing next to a freshly fallen, 12-inch-diameter, 35-foot-long snag. It had chosen that time (it was a bit windy) to fall as close as possible to our little band, without actually hurting anyone.

Phoebe recovered almost immediately, and we all scurried off the hill and dropped down the Wade Lot Road to Old Town Road, and southwesterly by the brook to our cars. Tom and I used Barb and Barry's trusty 3-foot bucking saw to remove a couple of windfalls along the way. Everyone counted their fingers and toes and climbed into our heated transportation devices.

Minerva Hinchey Shelter Hot Dog Roast

14 January 2007

By Roma Pulling, leader

On the day of our hike, my brother called me and asked me to call him "if" we got back! Another person asked if we were going to call it off because of the weather. There was light snow with the possibility of freezing rain, but the main roads were clear and the road from Route 103 to Spring Lake Ranch had been well sanded. By the time we all got together, there were 16 of us making our way to Minerva Hinchey Shelter for our winter cookout.

This outing turned into a team effort, starting with my co-leader, my husband, Alfred. Two people, Larry and Viv Walter, contributed wood for our fire. As there wasn't enough snow to make using a toboggan for delivering supplies to the shelter practical, several people pitched in and carried supplies in for us. And hikers who knew the area of the shelter well acted as hike leaders. Thanks to all of these people.

While Alfred built a fire in the outdoor fireplace and heated water for hot beverages, I set out supplies inside the shelter for lunch. The hikers headed south on the Long Trail and were back in time for our meal. I took a short walk on the trail myself. What a wonderfully peaceful experience compared to my home on the main road! The cookout was fun, too. We used to cook out more often in the old days. At that time there were fewer restrictions about where fires could be built.

We were honored on this outing to have four Killington Section Presidents – three former Presidents: Rob Carey (1984-91), Sue Carey (1993-95), and Steve Williams (2002-04), and our current President, Barry Griffith (2005 to date). When we all were full, we packed up what was left of our supplies and walked back to our cars after a short but very satisfying activity.

Quimby Mountain, Killington

20 January 2007

by Herb Ogden, leader

This outing taught us several lessons. First, don't believe me when it's noon but I suggest a better place for lunch because it's only about half an hour further along. Second, there can be a great difference in snow depth between the 1000-foot and 2500-foot elevations. Third, some forests recover remarkably rapidly after logging operations. Fourth, it's better to ride in Jerry Parker's jacket than to try to walk through snow that's deeper than you are tall. This applies only to the sole canine participant, however.

A beautiful sunny, crisp morning saw eight of us, including two guests who were new to us but obviously not new to hiking, gather at Main Street Park. There were actually nine of us if you count Jerry's amazingly cute and friendly terrier puppy, Burdock. Jerry says he chose the name because the dog has a rough coat the color of burdock. I think it's also because the dog should stick with him. Burdock hiked along happily at first, because the snow was only a couple inches deep. When the depth doubled as we climbed up the Appalachian Trail from the River Road in Killington, however, Burdock got a cozy ride in Jerry's jacket. By the time we reached the first (unnamed) peak, some 1,500 feet above where we began, the snow was about 15 inches deep, but it was fluffy and pretty easy going even without snowshoes.

That was where we should have had lunch, since it was noon. Fearless Leader, however, thought it might be too windy and urged continuing on to the old Woodard cellarhole in Quimby, where the walls would shelter us from the wind. I thought it would take about half an hour. Nearly two hours later, the first of our party arrived there. The snow along the ridge was denser than it was on the west slope, and that slowed us up some. Then I missed the overgrown turn from off the logging superhighway that runs south from Notown, crosses East Mountain, and ends up on Stockbridge South Hill near Pittsfield. Consequently, we had to follow it maybe half a mile farther south than usual and then climb back northeast up a somewhat overgrown logging road. Part way along it, there was a lunch mutiny, so only half the party reached the old Woodard place and no one reached the Woodard Cemetery.

We returned as planned down the Quimby Road. It has been closed to ATVs and snowmobiles and was pristine. A couple of us wished we had our skis. Even so, the hike down the beautiful steep sided Quimby Brook valley took only about an hour, and we were back at the Killington Town Offices by quarter past three.

Who was Quimby? I have tried to find out, but all I know is that the 1869 Beers Atlas of Rutland County shows an "R. Quimby" house on the ridge of East Mountain and a rough road leading to it, not up Quimby Brook but south of it. While the Beers Atlas did not always locate rough roads precisely, it usually did a pretty good job, and the "R. Quimby" location is so far from the Woodard cellarhole that I don't think they can be the same thing. No Quimby shows up in the town land records of the time, so he must have been a renter, not an owner. Madeline Fleming, who wrote a history in the 1960s, located one person whose grandfather had known him. Now a mountain, a brook, and a locality bear his name.

Who were Asa and Mary Woodard, who lie buried all by themselves in a little plot surrounded by a stone wall, high on the west slope of East Mountain? Mary died in February 1845, aged 72, and Asa died that July, aged 74. I surmise they were the last occupants of a large two story house about a quarter mile north of the cemetery. It must have disappeared by 1869, because the Beers Atlas doesn't show it. Nevertheless, its ruins are still impressive. The dry-masonry cellarhole is still some seven feet deep. It is roughly square, a good forty feet on each side. In the middle is a huge chimney pile, about ten feet on each side. The only likely reason for such a big chimney base would be to support flues serving multiple fireplaces on at least two floors. It must have been built some time after April 1812, because that is the date of the earliest deed to a Woodard in Killington (Asa, Sr.) and the deed says nothing about a dwelling.

Asa came from Stockbridge, legally and probably physically too. Building anything like a decent road from the River Road in Killington up Quimby Brook was probably impractical with nineteenth century techniques. Madeline Fleming's History of Sherburne (Killington's name for most of its existence) says International Paper built the present Quimby Road in the 1940s. I guess that, to reach Asa's place by road, one went south from Notown in Stockbridge on the old road to Little Sherburne, then headed over East Mountain by more or less the route of the present logging superhighway, and headed back north more or less on a contour. Fifteen years ago or so, before the last logging operation, a jeep road followed the route of the present logging superhighway south from the Appalachian Trail crossing, passed just west of the Woodard cellarhole, passed about 150 feet west of the Woodard Cemetery, passed just a few feet west of a very small cellarhole, and continued on south. Perhaps it followed the original road.

Asa began with 100 acres in 1812 and bought more land on East Mountain in 1824, 1829, 1833 and 1834. Half a year after his death in 1845, what may have been his seven children deeded their interests in one lot to another Asa, presumably his son. What happened to the home lot is not clear, because the volume of the town land records that probably showed it was destroyed in a fire. It appears, however, that all the Woodards had sold out by the 1850s. Unless the big house burned down, my guess is that old Asa was its last occupant, no one kept it up after he died, and the roof caved in by 1869 so it was not shown on the Beers Atlas of that year. Probably no one has farmed the west side of East Mountain for over 160 years since the death of old Asa, the original homesteader.

Pond Woods State Forest

27 January 2007

by Bill Holt & Joan Davidson, leaders

Around ten in the morning, eleven hikers started walking into the woods from Sunset Lake Road in Orwell. We were supposed to be snowshoeing but there were only a couple of inches of fresh snow atop a measly crust. It still felt like winter weather though, because the air was nippy.

We started bushwhacking up hill through hardwoods until we reached a trail used mostly by animals. The trail soon became steep and ledgy requiring careful footing in some spots. Soon, we got to the top of the ledge which had many scraggly pines, oaks, and blueberries trying to survive on a thin layer of soil. The ledge provided good views of Mud Pond directly below us. We could also see Lakes Sunrise and Sunset further off, but because it was overcast and snowing slightly we could only see for about five miles.

After leaving the ledge, we descended into a hemlock forest where the chill that we lost with the climb was back again. We kept up a brisk pace for the next mile until we reached the marshy end of Mud Pond. Mud

Pond, until four months ago, was accessible by four wheel drive vehicles, but it is now gated a mile from the pond because some nitwit decided to dump a whole truck load of household garbage right near the pond. Very few people ever drove up there anyway, so thank you nitwit for keeping Mud Pond free of vehicles.

We left the pond and did a little more bushwhacking through a mixed forest. We soon reached another body of water created by beavers. Since the pond didn't have a name, Larry dubbed it Joanie Pond. The ice seemed thick enough and we got across without losing anyone. Soon we reached a larger body of water known as Spruce Pond, although, I have never seen a spruce tree anywhere near the pond. Maybe there was at one time, but now the only conifers around the pond are hemlocks and white pines. We decided to stop for a bite to eat, but it was so cold that we didn't stop for very long.

After a good thirty minutes of legging it out with some elevation gain, we reached the top of Oak Hill, where there were red, white and chestnut oaks around. We then descended down to the back side of Doughty Pond. After going through a large grove of hemlocks we skirted the edge of the pond across the ice. We found some pitcher plants from last year popping out from the vegetation near shore.

We left Doughty Pond behind as we cut through mixed woods across a brook and were soon standing next to a porcupine tree. There was no doubt it was the home of a porcupine, because of the huge pile of scat at the bottom of the tree hole. We knocked and sure enough we could hear some scrabbling inside the tree.

After hiking for another mile we reached Sunset Lake where ice fishermen were trying their luck. They got a late start this year, and this was the first weekend we had seen anyone on Lake Sunset. After another mile of easy walking we ended our hike with Joan's pumpkin muffins.

See ya next time.

Lily Pond to Half Moon, Hubbardton

10 February 2007

by Sue Thomas, leader

"I see an ant leg!" exclaimed Barb, as she carefully dissected the scat of a pileated woodpecker to see what he'd had for dinner. (Does Killington Section know how to have fun on a hike, or what?) I decided to pass, not out of squeamishness but, due to poor eyesight – I don't think I'd be able to see an ant leg. So I contented myself with examining the very large hole in the tree from which the bird had extracted the yummy treat. Even taking into account the size of a pileated, the hole was impressive.

We'd set out for Lily Pond hoping to see signs of nature and, fortunately, the rest of our finds were much larger. Beavers have created a new pond which was formerly the trail. These are ambitious "Keep up with the Joneses" beavers. In addition to the usual large dam and lodge they'd taken out a second mortgage and built two smaller dams alongside, creating a kiddy pool and perhaps a hot tub.

The trail next passes small quarries where hefty cables are still anchored to boulders and huge piles of scrap slate. In other years with more snow I've seen otter slides on these piles. If I were them I'd contract with the beavers to construct a T-bar rope tow. This year (before the big blizzard) the snow barely covered the rocks, but we did find a slide a little farther up the trail. Tracks were plentiful – deer, porcupines, mice, grouse, rabbits, turkey, and a large wing print where a turkey had taken flight.

Lunch was a more formal affair than our usual. We dined in style at a "sidewalk café" along the trail complete with candles on the tables and a floor show, provided by the section's smallest (and by far cutest) member, Burdock Parker. Sporting a natty new sweater with leopard-print collars and cuffs, he prepared to show off a few tricks, but developed a sudden case of stage fright, which was entertaining also!

From Lily Pond we set off through the woods and managed to stumble on to Half Moon Pond, which was fortunate since that's where we'd parked the cars. We had a snack and bravely set off across the ice, which was, alarmingly, covered with water in places. Safe, but a bit frightened to be sure, terra firma was a relief.

Killington Section Directors Meeting

by John Hale, Secretary

The Killington Section Board of Directors met at 6:00 pm on 6 February 2007 at the Back Home Again Café in Rutland.

Attendance

Board Members present: President Barry Griffith, Vice President Barbara Griffith, Secretary John Hale, Secretary Roma Pulling, Lynda Hutchins, Wayne Krevetski, Andrea McQuade, and Steve Williams.

Others present: Bob Perkins, Thelma Perkins, and Al Pulling.

Special guests: GMC Development Officer Shawn Keeley and Montpelier Section Member Andrew Nuquist.

Secretary's Minutes

The minutes for the 17 October 2006 Board Meeting were corrected on page three (. . . the Main Club's Taylor Series Services program.) and a typographical error on page four, then accepted as corrected with thanks to John.

Treasurer's Report

Roma Pulling reported on the Section's bank balances as of 6 February 2007.

Un-Restricted:

Checking	$ 1,559.89
Savings	1,133.94
Cash/checks on Hand	311.25
Cert. of Deposit	1,454.36
	$ 4,459.44

Restricted:

Kirk Savings	$ 1,985.02
Cert. of Deposit	13,574.72
	$15,559.74

Total $20,019.18

Memberships: (not reported)

These balances represent a $776.06 increase from the total reported on 17 October 2006. The Treasurer's report was approved as presented with thanks to Roma.

Roma mentioned that the $500 expenditure from the Kirk Fund authorized by the Board at the 17 October meeting last year to be paid to the Main Club has not yet been requested and so not paid. Because representatives of the Main Club were present, Roma cut a check in the appropriate amount and gave it to Shawn Keeley for delivery.

Roma reported that Ms. Ellen Russell has died leaving one fifth of a life insurance policy valued at $9,305 to the Killington Section. Roma has received a letter from the estate and is now awaiting settlement. Ms. Russell was a long time member of the Club.

GMC Capital Campaign

Shawn Keeley and Andrew Nuquist made a presentation of the Main Club's Capital Campaign:

We are two years into the Campaign the purposes of which are 1) to provide an endowment with current income for Long Trail maintenance; 2) to protect the entire length of the Long Trail and assure public access (i.e. no dependence on private owners of trail land); and 3) to rebuild the burned barn at the Waterbury headquarters.

The focus of the Campaign started with the Main Club Board of Directors and staff, both of which groups have registered 100% participation. The second phase, just begun in Montpelier, Burlington and Ottauquechee Sections, is for each Club Section to approach its own members and the At-Large members living in that Section's geographic area.

The process for a section is to 1) assemble a team; 2) attend an orientation session provided by the Main Club; 3) attend a training session provided by the Main Club to learn how to solicit effectively and comfortably for money; 4) set up a program, make appointments and visit prospective contributors; and 5) participate in Report-Back sessions with representatives of the Main Club.

Andrew shared some of the Montpelier Section's experience. Their committee of eight people had to overcome their natural hesitancy and awkwardness in asking people for money. It was discouraging at the beginning but eventually all members found personal rewards in the effort beyond their successes in generating funds for the Club.

Note: There is a one million dollar challenge grant on offer which must be matched by the end of 2007 which is also the expected end of the Killington Section's fund raising efforts.

John Hale, and Lynda Hutchins both offered to participate in the Section's efforts; but neither could commit to heading up the group.

Main Club Board Meeting

Delegate Lynda Hutchins reported the following highlights of the Main Club Board Meeting of 20 January 2007:

The Capital Campaign has raised $2.9 million toward a revised goal of about $6 million.

The preliminary 2008 fiscal year budget was presented showing an $80,000 shortfall. Expenses have already been cut to the bone and staff is being stretched to their limits. On the other hand, we generate good income from publications and membership is growing. The Capital Campaign must succeed to put the Club on solid financial ground.

An official GMC logo is being researched; a larger emphasis on the Long Trail is wanted.

The Club is purchasing green lumber harvested under the Vermont Family forest program for use in the Head Quarters rebuilding project. This is a money saver and fosters sustainable lumbering.

Lynda's detailed report is available from the Secretary.

Trails and Shelters

Barry Griffith, reported that the Shrewsbury Select Board appears unwilling to "throw up" the road to Governor Clement Shelter and is seeking other alternatives for controlling hooligan misuse of the shelter. That board's position letter to the Main Club is expected shortly. The Main Club committee will then decide how to respond.

Construction of the new Little Killington Shelter, designed to replace Governor Clement Shelter, has been rescheduled to 2008, probably because of money concerns. The Clarendon Gorge area was recently cleaned of trash.

Smoke & Blazes

Bob Perkins was proud to announce that we are now printing in color. The next issue will come out at the end of February.

The Long Trail in Bits and Pieces

Steve Williams reported that the Long Trail in Bits and Pieces group is still going strong, planning for next season's hikes.

Long Trail Festival

Wayne Krevetski reported that the Long Trail Festival is making progress. The City of Rutland, through the Recreation Department, has agreed to cover liability insurance costs for the event. The City has agreed to the terms of the contract for use of the Fair Grounds and that document is expected to be formally signed shortly.

Section Annual Meeting

The Annual Meeting will be a pot luck supper again this year to be held on a Saturday, either 14 or 21 April, depending upon which best suits the Church. Sue Thomas will make the reservation.

Service Award

Steve Williams was presented with the Long Trail Service Award in recognition of his many contributions to the Club.

Congratulations to Steve.

Next Board Meeting

The next Killington Section Board meeting will be at the Annual Meeting in March.

The meeting was adjourned at 8:00 PM.

The next move is up to the Shrewsbury Select Board. Watch these pages for further developments.

Latest News from the Governor

The Forest Service, with concurrence of the Killington Section and other interested parties, has advised the Shrewsbury Select Board that Governor Clement Shelter will be razed unless the town takes steps this summer to permit gating the access road. In a recent nonbinding vote, townspeople indicated by a good majority that they preferred the shelter to the road, and there are indications that the Selectmen may be willing to along.

Governor Clement Shelter, circa 1930

Unwelcome partiers, often with alcohol and firearms, have made the shelter unappealing, and possibly unsafe, for hikers. All previous attempts to control the situation have been unsuccessful. Several legal steps are required in order to "throw up" the road so that it can be gated, but hopes are rising again that what may be the oldest Long Trail shelter still in use may be saved.

Stay tuned.

WORK PARTIES READY THE TRAILS FOR THE SEASON

By Herb Ogden,
Section Trails & Shelter Chair

First, the Honor Roll. Here are the people who sawed trees, dug out waterbars, pruned back brush, and generally got our part of the Long Trail in shape for the hiking season.

Greg [Badger?]
Rich Brown
Dave Coppock
Tom Cops (2)
Barbara Griffith
Barry Griffith
Wayne Krevetski*
Roland Marx
Allison Norton
Cindy Oas-Kirk
Herb Ogden (2)
Jerry Parker (2)*
Tom Shanahan
Wayne [Soros?]
Larry Walter*

Sorry. A couple of last names in the register were hard to read. Those with a (2) after their name came out for both work parties. Those with asterisks lugged chain saws.

On 19 May, eight volunteers showed up despite threatening weather. Two cleared brush and dug drainage ditches between Minerva Hinchey Shelter and the hilltop south of the Airport Lookout. Three cleared brush and many blowdowns between the Lottery Road and the Keiffer Road, and another three cleared brush and waterbars and several blowdowns between the Upper Cold River Road and Gov. Clement Shelter. Most of the rest of our section between the Wallingford Gulf Road (Vt. 140) and the Upper Cold River Road had already been cleared by a one man crew named Tom Shanahan. Thanks very much, Tom! Thanks also to Sector Checkers Connie and Mark Youngstrom, Tom Shanahan and Steve Williams for reporting on their sectors so we could send the crews where they would do the most good.

We do still have some problems on the lowland part of our trails. ATVs have been on the trail north of Bear Mountain. Minerva Hinchey Shelter needs metal edges on the table to foil porcupines that have gnawed it. Wet stretches north of the Lottery Road need bog bridging or relocation. Last but definitely not least, Gould Brook needs bridging. We may have help from a General Electric group on this.

On 2 June, National Trails Day, ten volunteers provided meals for black flies, chiggers and mosquitoes while looking out for thunderstorms. Rich Brown took two crews up the work road to the Killington Peak top station, courtesy of Killington, Ltd. A chain-sawyer and a brush lopper/swamper headed south to Gov. Clement Shelter, meeting three people with loppers heading north. Another chain-sawyer and a brush lopper/swamper headed north to Sherburne Pass, meeting three people with an ax-mattock, hoes, and a lopper heading south. The result was that the entire LT from Gov. Clement to Jungle Jct. and the Sherburne Pass Trail are properly cleared. Also, the Sherburne Pass Trail is better drained than it has been since at least the 1960s. We cleared or built some 52 waterbars, including a couple substantial new ones. Jerry Parker's little dog Burdock even pitched in on a couple of the waterbars!

Many thanks to the crew listed above and to Sector Checkers Larry Walter, Dave Coppock, Cindy Oas-Kirk, Allison Norton, and Deb Waggett. Many of the Sector Checkers not only reported where work was needed but also did some maintenance before the work party. In fact, by the time of the work day, the Bucklin Trail was already in good condition and needed no crew.

More work remains, however. We lacked crews to cover the Long Trail from Jungle Jct. to Tucker-Johnson Shelter, the Pico Spur, and the Cauty Trail up Blue Ridge Mountain. Several blowdowns are reported south of Churchill Scott Shelter, the shelter privy door blew off and must be replaced, the nettles north of Route 4 need scything, and ditches and waterbars south of Tucker-Johnson Shelter need cleaning. The Cauty Trail was cleared of blowdowns in early winter, but it probably needs attention again. If you have time, we have work for you! Tools are available. Please call Herb Ogden at 293-2510 or email hogden@vermontel.net.

Notes from the Road

By Cindy Taylor-Miller

[Mrs. Gorp has switched travel modes this year and embarked on a cross country bike ride. Smoke & Blazes has received the following communiqués, Ed.:]

Wallingford, VT, April 3: One last email before I head south to Yorktown, VA this morning to begin my TransAmerican Bike Ride to Astoria, OR.

Charlottesville, VA April 5: I have gone 186 miles since Sunday when I left Yorktown, VA and am currently in Charlottesville right at the University of VA. It's a brisk morning. Have a 5 mile UPHILL to Rockfish Gap this afternoon to reach the Blue Ridge Parkway.

All is well, feeling fine, and the bike, my Cannondale T2000 is running smooth.

Chester, IL, April 26: Hello from Chester, IL, home of Popeye the sailor man! Been on the TransAm route since April 1st and have covered 1,168 miles. Have had snow, broiling sun, strong headwinds, and today it rained for a brief bit, but for the most part the weather has been perfect for riding. The Appalachians were tough and hilly. Now the terrain has mellowed out a bit, averaging about 60 miles a day. My biggest mileage day so far has been 76 miles and the smallest 36 miles.

Had my Cannondale T2000 tuned up yesterday in Carbondale, IL. The bike has been flawless. I haven't even had a flat tire (shhhhhhhhhhh I don't want to jinx myself).

Back in Elkhorn City, KY, I waited out two days of pouring rain, snow showers and 35 degree temps. When I hit finally hit the road west again, I came upon a house in the middle of Rte 611. A mud slide had washed it downhill the evening before. One of the salvage workers helped me carry my bike around the mess to higher, dryer, less muddy ground and back to the blacktop.

All is well. I've had a shower every night and am eating well. I think Long Distance Bike Riding beats LD Hiking ;-).

Dubois, WY, May 19: Hello! I am alive and well and in Dubois WY. Survived the tornadoes in Kansas and tomorrow enter Yellowstone National Park. 2,775 miles and NO Flats!!!

Riding into Lander, WY the wind was so strong I had to pedal my bike going downhill a 6% grade. It made for a very long a tiring 128 mile day.

Baker City, OR June 1: Hello. Here in Baker City, Oregon. It's a hot day. By Sunday they're predicting a high of near 100*. I'm on slow bake.

There wasn't a welcome to Oregon sign when I crossed the ID/OR border near Oxbow. Instead, it felt like welcome to Hell's Canyon. Turn up the heat! I'm sorry I fretted the frozen toes back in Yellowstone.

The Oregon Trail passed through here in Baker City.

I should be touching the front wheel of my bike in the Pacific in about 5 to 6 days, depends on the heat and if I can ride in the afternoons. I need my nap when it gets too hot.

3,660 miles on the TransAm !

Outing Reports

Chittenden Brook

24 February 2007

By Joan Davidson, co-leader

This snowshoe trip was a little daunting due to the cold blustery day, as well as the enormous amount of snow that we had received the week before on Valentine's Day. We began the trek from the top of Brandon Gap, heading south on the Long Trail. Previous snowshoers and cross country skiers had already packed much of the trail down so the initial going wasn't too bad. After about an hour, we came upon moose tracks that were interesting to see, but made snowshoeing a little tricky, because you could easily get your shoe caught down one of the deep moose track holes. The views on the trail were spectacular of the Braintree range east of us, as well as the frost that glistened on the branches above our heads.

Once we reached the trail junction we ate our lunch, and then began our descent in an easterly direction toward Chittenden Brook campground. This trail had not been used by anyone, so it was slow going in the very deep snow. Also, the trail was hard to see in places and at one point we had to search around to find our markers. By the time we reached our vehicles at the front parking lot of Chittenden Brook, we all seemed pretty tired and happy to take off our snowshoes and gobble down our snack of oatmeal cookies.

Mount Antone II

24 March 2007

By Steve Williams, leader

Mount Antone I, ably led by Larry and Viv Walter from the Rupert side earlier this year, with its tree falling episode, was a hard act to follow. However, twelve Merck Forest enthusiasts arrived to join Steve on this "Mount Antone II" hike on a bright and sunny morning. The first concern was mud on the access road; two of the party wisely left their cars adjacent to Route 315, though the road itself was not as bad as Steve had anticipated from his scouting visit the day before. The Old Town Road section of the trail was easy enough with just a little ice thrown in to merit attention. Shortly after taking the side trail towards Clark's Clearing there was a blow-down across the trail. At this juncture we were fortunate to have with us Sawman and Axeman (aka Larry Walter and his protégée, Peter) fully equipped with their tools of choice) who enthusiastically removed the offending tree.

Upon reaching Clark's Clearing, snowshoes were donned until shortly before the summit, where the southern exposure led to mostly bare ground. En route the principal diversion was the discovery by Jerry Parker's dog Burdock of a number of chipmunks in a tree. Burdock, being of a breed bred to chase and catch rodents, anticipated great sport. However, in the art of tree climbing the chipmunks demonstrated a definite superiority, and in fact it was they who had the better sport.

At the summit we celebrated the birthday of Diane Bergiel, at which point the well equipped Cindy impressively produced a candle and a match. Congratulations on the birthday, Diane! Jerry Parker followed up this act by finding an owl pellet and pointed out the knee and other bones of a mouse which had moved on to the lunch stage of its life, unfortunately that of the owl.

On the way back to the visitors center, the group stopped by at the sugar house (equipped with a new reverse osmosis unit as well as a conventional evaporator) where many sampled some of the syrup samples available and some went for the pancakes on offer. Not too much later the rain started. Good timing!

Chittenden Brook Trail

12 May 2007

By Roma Pulling, leader

Carpets of delicate spring beauties interspersed with dog tooth violets, wood anemones and Dutchman's britches delighted the nature lovers in our group. The trip could have been billed as a wildflower hike!

Our group of fourteen people and one dog left the park in Rutland with five cars which we parked by Route 73 at the beginning of the road to the Chittenden Brook Campground in Rochester. Due to the fact that the gate was still closed, it added a mile to our usual 3.5-mile walk; but I didn't hear any complaints.

It is a road walk with only gentle uphill.

At the junction marked #4 on our map, where the main trail continues on to the Long Trail, we stopped for a lunch break and to wait for part of our group to catch up. Then we took a side trail to the beaver pond, where we could watch salamanders near the shore. The beavers were not home or at least did not have their welcome mat out.

The return trip was uneventful, and we left for home, congratulating ourselves on having picked another day of perfect hiking weather.

Killington Section Annual Meeting

By John Hale, Secretary

The annual meeting of the Killington Section, Green Mountain Club was held on 32 March 2007 at the Good Shepherd Lutheran Church on Hillside Avenue in Rutland, VT.

Board Members present were Barry Griffith, Pres.; Barbara Griffith, VP; Roma Pulling, Treas.; John Hale, Sec.; Lynda Hutchins; Andrea McQuade; and Wayne Krevetski. About 15 other people attended.

A Pot Luck Dinner began at about 5:30 PM and was enjoyed by all.

President Barry brought the business meeting to order with the observation that this likely was the 95th annual meeting of the Killington Section, our founders having started the Section in 1912.

The Minutes of the 2006 Annual Meeting as printed in Smoke and Blazes were approved as presented.

Treasurer Roma Pulling reported the following account balances as of 31 December 2006:

Un-restricted:

Checking	$ 1,509.89
Savings	1,741.52
CD	1,704.06
.....	$ 4,955.47

Restricted: (Kirk Fund)

Savings	$ 1,985.02
CD's	13,559.11
.....	$15,544.13

Membership:

Memberships	145
Voting Members	166

The Un-restricted assets increased $1,204.19 from last year and the Kirk Fund assets increased $366.11 from last year. Our registered membership decreased by seven.

Smoke and Blazes editor Bob Perkins reported that the publication continues its smooth quarterly appearance. He asked people to submit articles and pictures for inclusion. Bob was roundly thanked generally and especially praised for his inclusion of color in the publication.

President Barry mentioned one item that did not appear in the publication: Bob and Thelma Perkins have granted an easement to the Green Mountain Club for a section of the Cauty Trail that is part of their family's property.

Deb Waggett was thanked again for her service in generating the Section's webpage the new address for which is:

web.mac.com/gmckillington.

Herb Ogden, Trails and Shelters Chair, reported on various shelters:

- Minerva Hinchey Shelter was significantly improved last year but still needs new front steps.

- Mill River suspension bridge area is still hard to maintain because of the illegal camping and partying that occurs there. Overlapping official jurisdictions make the policing more difficult.

- Gov. Clement Shelter is still being abused, most recently with journal entries from the last hiking season indicating that a through hiker was beaten by several people who had driven to the shelter. There is some good news. On town meeting day the voters of Shrewsbury approved an advisory ballot item calling for abandonment of the town highway leading to the shelter so that the Forest Service can erect a gate to keep Governor Clement from being razed. However, only the Town Selectmen can authorize discontinuance of a town highway, after a public warning and hearing. This process will probably play out in the months ahead; the outcome is unknown at this time. If the Forest Service is unable to gate the road during the summer to help insure hiker safety, it is expected that Governor Clement will be demolished.

- Little Killington Shelter will not be constructed this year primarily for lack of funds but also because of the uncertainty surrounding the Governor Clement shelter.

- Cooper Lodge will be demolished because of misuse; the foundation will be retained as a memorial.

- Pico Camp is now in good shape but if the new owners of the Killington ski resort decide to create the long proposed inter-connect between Killington and Pico, the shelter could be lost for being physically in the way.

Herb has been informed that a group of about 20 local General Electric employees want to do volunteer trail construction this summer. A bridge over Gould Brook is under consideration.

Tom Copps reported on the first year's activity of the Long Trail in Bits and Pieces Project. Most participants have completed nine of the 29 sections in the project totaling 94 miles mostly in hikes near Rutland. Most sections are of ten to 11 miles in length, nearly twice the length of Killington Section's weekly hikes. All are welcome.

Lynda Hutchins reported on her attendance at the latest parent club meeting held on 24 March.

John Hale reported on the parent club's Second Century Finance Campaign as it will be supported by our Section. John, Lynda Hutchins and Steve Williams are the committee which will reach out to club members in our area asking for contributions.

More than $3,000,000 of the $5,250,000 expected in the Campaign has already been raised.

Upcoming Events: This year's GMC Annual Meeting will be held at Hildene in Manchester on 8 – 10 June.

- The Rutland Area Physical Activity Committee (RAPAC) has asked our Section to join them in offering weekly articles to the Rutland Herald newspaper.

- The first annual Long Trail Festival will be held at the Rutland Fairgrounds on August 17 - 20. Much fun is expected for all. The webpage is: www.longtrailfestivalvt.com.

- It is not too early to begin thinking about the ATC's Biennial Meeting to be held at the campus of Castleton State College in July of 2009.

- The Green Mountain Club Centennial is also in the offing coming up in the year 2010.

President Barry opened the meeting to nominations for Board Members for terms to end in 2010. John Hale, Lynda Hutchins, and Cindy Taylor-Miller were nominated, seconded and unanimously approved:

The full Board then met in closed session and elected the following officers for the coming year:

Barry GriffithPresident
Barbara Griffith. Vice President
John Hale... Secretary/Treasurer

The next Board meeting date was set for 6 PM on Tuesday 19 June at the Back Home Again Café.

The meeting was adjourned at about 8:00 PM

Long Trail Festival Big Success

Hats off to Killington Section members Cathy and Wayne Krevetski! Last year when they broached their idea for a Long Trail Festival almost everyone offered mild encouragement but many privately feared low attendance and an embarrassing failure. After all, this is Rutland, Vermont, not a well known trail town like Damascus, Virginia whose Trail Days Celebration was the Krevetskis' inspiration.

Well, the estimated 1,000 attendees proved the doubters wrong.

Pot Luck to Feature Yukon Trip

The Killington Section's annual fall pot luck supper will take place at 6:00 PM on Saturday 10 November at the Good Shepherd Lutheran Church on Hillside Avenue in Rutland. Members and nonmembers alike are invited to attend. Bring a plate, utensils, and a dish to share.

Following supper Paul Houchens of the Burlington Section will present a slide show of the Yukon River canoe trip that he and five other GMCers, including our own Lynda Hutchins, took last year.

GMCers heading north

Here's what Paul has to say:

"There are strange things done in the midnight sun..." These famous words by poet Robert Service, The Bard of the North, inspired a group of six GMCers to trek northward last summer to discover the allure of the northern summer. Following the footsteps of the Stampeders in the Klondike Gold Rush of 1898, the group climbed the infamous Chilkoot Pass from Alaska into Canada and then boarded canoes for the 550-mile journey down the Yukon River to Dawson City. Under almost perpetual daylight they paddled through Miles Canyon, camped on the "marge of Lake Labarge," shot the Five Finger Rapids, explored abandoned settlements and panned for gold on Bonanza Creek in the Klondike Valley. Did they strike it rich? Well they do have a wealth of stories to tell!

Hopeful Signs for Gov. Clement

The Shrewsbury select board recently held a public hearing and a visit to the site proposed for the gate on the road to Governor Clement Shelter. Although no official action was taken, it appears that the selectmen are heeding their constituents who, in a nonbinding but substantial majority vote, have said that they want to save the shelter.

The discussion has progressed from whether the road should be gated to the resolution of a number of details such as who should hold title to the road, who should pay for the gate and parking area, and the dates when the gate should be locked and unlocked.

Another public hearing is scheduled for 6:00 PM on 19 September at the Shrewsbury town clerk's office.

Remembering Al and Bill

The Killington section lost two of its long-time and most dedicated leaders this summer with the deaths of Al Pulling and Bill Robichaud, each in his early eighties. Al and Bill had contrasting personalities but they shared a common devotion to the outdoors and to the Long Trail in particular.

Gregarious Al served as a Section Director and Treasurer for many years, alternating the jobs with his wife Roma when term-limit rules came into play. Al and Roma led hikes in all seasons over the years including their popular annual winter snowshoe trek and hotdog roast. As a sideline, Al transported long-distance AT and LT hikers around the state and was an expert on locating all the trailheads. On a wall of their home Al and Roma had a huge map of Vermont with photos of (I think) every Long Trail shelter. They had visited and photographed them all.

Independent Bill also served as a Section Director but meetings, committee work, and group outings were not his things. He was happiest in the woods, especially with a pair of loppers in one hand and a hoe in the other. Bill turned out for almost every scheduled work party and no one knows how many days he went out alone, or with anyone he could recruit, to clear waterbars and blowdowns. Bill was our official Sector Checker for Long Trail from Cooper Lodge to Tucker-Johnson Shelter and was a key participant in the major relocations on the west side of Pico and over Bear Mountain. As a GMC Corridor Monitor Bill spent hours tramping off-trail to help ensure the integrity of our protected lands.

The Killington Section is fortunate to have had leaders like Al and Bill. We send our condolences to their families.

Bits and Pieces End-to-Enders Still Going Strong

Kelly Stand Road to Old Rootville Road

23 June 2007, Leg 11

By Steve Williams

While six participants had been expected until 9.00 PM, the night before, this number was suddenly halved, to Tom Copps, Cindy Oas-Kirk and Steve Williams. However, as the weather forecast was promising (and eventually proven correct) and the minimum of two cars available was met, the outing proceeded. The threesome met at Zoey's in Manchester and proceeded to leave Steve's Jeep at the lower end of the Old Rootville Road whereupon Cindy drove the approximately 22 miles to the trailhead on the Kelly Stand Road for a 9:50 AM start.

Two and a quarter hours, 3.8 miles and 2000 feet of elevation gain saw the party atop Stratton Mountain. At about three-fourths of the way up Tom's illusion of seeing the lookout tower at the summit is believed to be the triumph of hope over reality. However, at the summit, a climb up the tower was very worthwhile, even if a chilly experience because of the wind. With Killington, Somerset Reservoir, Ascutney and the Adirondacks all in sight it was a fine place to be. The group had an interesting chat with the GMC caretaker on duty who told of the one week's training new caretakers receive, covering all aspects of their jobs: care of facilities, interaction with visitors, first aid, rescue operations and the management of composting privies. Any takers?

On to Stratton Pond, a relatively easy, mostly downhill, 3.2 miles with the pond providing a picturesque lunching spot. From Stratton Pond to Prospect Rock is 5.7 miles of nothing in particular (except for a fine new bridge at the entry point to the Lye Brook wilderness) but which does very adequately meet the Long Trail description of "A Footpath in the Wilderness". Approximately half a mile before Prospect Rock, the trail comes out on a surprisingly smooth and well groomed extension of the Old Rootville Road. It was in such great shape in fact that we met a through hiker who had previously passed us coming back because he thought that he must have missed a turnoff somewhere.

Prospect Rock, with its fine view of Manchester, was a welcome rest spot before the rigors of the 1.8 mile descent of the Old Rootville Road. Sounds easy, but with a number of steep stretches, a rough surface, and knees feeling the effect of the previous miles, the last stretch is a good one to have behind you.

All in all, a fine day out.

Middlebury Gap to Emily Proctor Shelter

7 July 2007, Leg 12

By Allison Norton

The participants for our hike included Allison Norton, Tom Copps, Steve Williams, Lynda Hutchens, Cindy Kirk, Rich Brown, and Lindy Brown. Our day started out bright and sunny and we were in great spirits as we crossed Route 125 and began a steep climb up the trail, entering the Breadloaf Wilderness. We were very chatty and conversation topics included the weather, small-engine aircraft, and privy etiquette. Soon, however, not a word was spoken as we proceeded to sneak past the turnoff to the Silent Cliff trail (Shhh!). We continued to climb and you could actually see that we were on a ridgeline as we hiked, with the land dropping off on either side of us. After a few miles we reached Boyce Shelter. When the guide says, "On the trail," they aren't kidding. It looks like someone just dropped it right in the middle of the trail. I expected to see the Wicked Witch's feet sticking out from under it! We were on the long green tunnel, though, not the yellow brick road, so after a short break for snacks and a few really great photos we were off again.

Leaving the shelter, the trail seemed tricky to find at first but we found it. We came to some really old log puncheon that was very, very, slippery. After that we chose to go around the log puncheons when we came to them rather than trying to use them. We made sure to step right in the mud, rather than widening the muddy sections, of course. For the next few miles we went up and down along a ridgeline through the Breadloaf Wilderness, crossing over Mt. Boyce and Battell Mountain (no real views from either). We spent most of this time looking forward to lunch at the next shelter (well, at least I did, and a few others kept asking how far to our lunch stop!). And, as on most hikes, the estimates of how far away we really were from our intended lunch spot ranged from a few minutes to a few miles. We were very happy when we reached the sign for the spur trail to Skyline Lodge at Skylight Pond.

Skyline Lodge is a really fancy enclosed log shelter. Fancy compared to the board lean-tos, anyway. It has a front porch, a table inside, and two levels of sleeping platforms. I have less positive things to say about Skylight Pond—it is rather muddy and weedy. Last year Tom and I read in the shelter log that someone had seen a six-inch leech in the pond! Swimming anyone? Leeches or no leeches, the pond gave us a great view, so we ate lunch on the porch and enjoyed our break. Upon leaving the shelter a member from our party said that it seemed longer than a tenth of a mile back to the LT, and mentioned that a tenth of a mile would be 176 yards. I bravely suggested that I count steps to see, and giant-stepped back to the LT! It was 221 steps, give or take a few rocks and roots, so whoever does the mileage for the signs and guidebooks wasn't all that far off.

Leaving the Skylight Pond trail we went north on the LT continuing our ridge walk. We took a short side trail for a lookout on Breadloaf Mountain, and it really was a lookout (Look out!) with a trail that suddenly drops off. It was getting windier and a little darker, though, so we tried not to hang around for too long. It started to rain, and just as we reached Emily Proctor Shelter, the skies opened and it really rained. Rich and Lindy who had gotten to the shelter ahead of us said they were making tea, but unfortunately they were teasing. We had to admire the shelter, though. It is a cute little log lean-to with what is probably a great view, although we couldn't see anything due to the weather.

After a longer than usual rest at the shelter we roused ourselves for the 3.5 mile trek down the Emily Proctor Trail to Steve's jeep. It was a very slippery hike down, especially for the first mile or so, with pouring rain and dripping rocks, and more than one of us ended up on our backs on our packs, like turtles. On the way down we were marveling that we'd be coming back up that same trail in a few weeks for our next leg! At some point on the way down, a new tradition (maybe!) was begun. Steve suggested that we make bets on when we'd be back at the car; with each person contributing a quarter (closest guess takes all). Rules were discussed, including: 1. Everyone has to be off the trail and at the car for it to be official; and 2. No fair purposely dawdling or hurrying so your time wins. I don't remember what the winning time was, but Rich was the winner, and he commented that with his winnings he'd be able to buy half a gallon of gas.

Killington Section Directors Meeting

By John Hale, Secretary

The Killington Section Board of Directors met on 19 June 2007 at the Back Home Again Café in Rutland. The meeting was called to order by President Barry at about 6:00 PM.

Attendance

Board members present:

Barry Griffith, President,

Barbara Griffith, Vice President,

John Hale, Secretary/Treasurer,

Lynda Hutchins, and

Andrea McQuade.

Also present: Editor Bob Perkins.

A Loss

A great sadness and sense of loss came over the Board when we learned that Al Pulling, long-time member and former Treasurer, passed away yesterday. The Board paused in silent remembrance of this fine man.

Secretary's Minutes

The Meeting Minutes of the 2007 Annual Meeting were approved as presented.

Treasurer's Report

Treasurer John Hale presented the Cash Flow Report for the year to date showing income of $3,068.98 and expenses of $801.31, and a Current Balance Report showing the general account of $6,334.48 and the Kirk Fund of $15,725.01. Copies of these reports are available from the Treasurer.

John was asked to provide the Section's membership numbers with the financial statements next time and to bring the Killington Section Membership List that the Main Club provides, to the next Board meeting.

[After Note: According to Waterbury's list, the Killington Section has 142 memberships with 195 voting members as of 30 May 2007.]

Second Century Campaign

Treasurer Hale presented a financial idea for the Board's consideration: that the Killington Section make a $15,000 donation from the Kirk Fund to the Main Club's Second Century fundraising campaign. He reasons:

* The Kirk Fund is reserved for use in maintaining the Section's portion of the Long Trail; and the Section values the Kirk name and has a strong interest in preserving the Kirk legacy.

* While the Section has enjoyed the interest earned on the fund (ranging from $300 to $600 per year), the Section's actual expenditures from the Kirk fund average only $315 annually over the past 11 years for standard maintenance. [Extraordinarily, the Section decided to support the Main Club with a $2,000 donation for "Bridge material" in fiscal 2003.]

* An analysis of the Section's income and expense over the past 11 years reveals that income from dues averages $1,071 and standard expenditures average $1,018 [The Section was extraordinarily assessed $1,472 by the Main Club in fiscal 1998 for its share of the main liability insurance policy.]. We basically break even financially each year.

* The Main Club needs support now for the Second Century campaign and offers to recognize the endowment of a shelter by name in the Long Trail Guide, Annual Report, website and at Club Headquarters and promises a good faith effort to continue donor acknowledgment in perpetuity.

* The Kirk Fund balances currently stand at $15,725.01 in the Section's accounts at Key Bank; and the General Fund balances stand at $6,334.48.

* John feels that by means of this suggested donation, the Kirk funds would be spent on trail maintenance per the Kirk mandate; the Kirk name would be remembered in posterity; the Main Club would begin to actively use the funds for trail and shelter maintenance as part of the Second Century campaign; and the ongoing work of the Killington Section would not be negatively impacted.

A general discussion ensued: Could the new Little Killington shelter be endowed in this way? Should the general membership be asked for input? For approval? Do the By-Laws authorize the Board of Directors to make decisions of this type? Can the Kirk funds principal be distributed or rather only the interest? President Barry offered to speak with Herb Ogden about these last two issues. John hoped that a decision could be made before the end of this year, and the Board agreed to discuss the suggestion again at its next meeting in September.

Clement Shelter

The Governor Clement Shelter saga continues. The Shrewsbury Selectmen will visit the site personally in the next few days and appear ready to decide whether the town will "throw up" the road, allowing it to be gated. There is some reason for optimism. The US Forest Service requires a decision from the town by the end of this summer.

GMC Directors Meeting

Lynda presented her minutes of the Main Club's Board of Directors meeting held at Hildene in Manchester on 9 June. Her written report is available from Secretary Hale.

Trails and Shelters

The Trails and Shelters work parties have been successful so far this summer.

Smoke & Blazes

Bob Perkins reported that the Smoke and Blazes newsletter continues to do well. He noted that he is using one folded folio sized piece of paper now rather than separate stapled sheets. President Barry opined that ours is far and away the best newsletter produced by any of the GMC sections.

New GMC Logo

Lynda presented the two options for a new section logo offered by the Main Club for our consideration and choice. Unanimously, the Board chose Alternative B in which the word "Vermont" continues to appear in the bottom arch of the circular logo and in which the word "Killington" appears outside and directly below the circular logo. Lynda will report our decision.

Long Trail Festival

Everyone was reminded that the Long Trail Festival will be held on 17-20 August. Board member Wayne Krevetski is looking for more hike leaders for that Sunday.

Potluck Dinner

The Fall Potluck Dinner is to be scheduled for either November 17th or 10th in that order of preference. The date will be finalized after Lynda speaks with prospective guest speaker Paul Houchens about his availability. Paul has a fine presentation on the Yukon and a particular hiking/kayaking trip taken by GMC members last year.

Sympathy

There was a discussion about using Section funds for a remembrance for Al Pulling. The general consensus was that were Al himself involved in the discussion, he would vote against such an expenditure on the grounds that it would be a dangerous precedent. We all agreed that individual expressions of sympathy would be most meaningful.

Next Board Meeting

The next Board meeting will be at 6 PM, Tuesday 16 October at 6 PM at the Back Home Café.

The meeting was adjourned at 8:00 PM.

Notes from the Road

By Cindy Taylor-Miller

[In the May issue we left Mrs. Gorp in Baker, OR on her trans-continental bike ride. Ed.]

Twisp, WA, June 13: Hello all. I reached the Pacific Ocean at Florence OR on June 7. So far 4,086 miles and I'm riding back to Vermont via the Northern Tier. Currently I'm in Twisp Washington. Long day, 96 miles of which 50 were all uphill over the Northern Cascades. I don't have much time on this computer and they're closing the library.

Mrs. Gorp and her biking companion, Stump Thumper, a five-time AT through hiker.

Williston, ND, June 28: Bucked strong headwinds to reach the MT/ND border this morning. I feel cursed. First I had three flat tires in five days in Montana and now the winds are blowing strong from the East – the direction I'm headed. Had two great days of westerly tail winds and rode 122 miles, (my 7th Century), in six and a half hours.

Saw two wolves this morning before the border and a black bear near the Libby Dam in Montana. I'll be riding through Canada, taking the most direct route home. I'm about a third of the way home!

Superior, WI, July 10: Yesterday was the 100th day on this journey and we rode 101 miles from Grand Rapids MN to here to celebrate. Not really, it just worked out that way. We got to Cloquet MN about 2 PM and decided to keep riding. It's a rainy morning here so I'm not leaving bright and early. I should be back in Vermont in about 3 weeks. Today I hit 6,000 miles!

Middlebury, VT July 31: Guess it's time to let you know that I finished my cross country bike ride last week, on Wednesday July 25th in Middlebury. I rode to the same bike shop where I bought my Cannondale T2000 last winter. It's for sale now, a low mileage 2007 model.

116 days; 6,786 miles; 20 States; 1 Province; and 3 flats.

I'm slowly getting back into the swing of things around here in Wallingford. My body is here but the old brain is still on a bike tour. I've gone through a three-foot pile of unopened mail and thought it was time to bring the pool furniture out of the pool house. I'm working on the weeds, one perennial bed at a time.

Yesterday, I visited the Minerva Hinchey Shelter on the AT/LT and ran into several AT thru hikers I know. That was a good diversion and made me realize how much I LOVE VERMONT.

[Cindy went on to say that this winter she'll be planning her next long distance bike tour. Ed.]

I think I'd like to ride the Southern Tier. This way I'll have traversed the country three times: once across the middle, once across the north, and once across the south.

What is the Kirk Fund? – Why Should I Contribute To It?

By Barry Griffith, Section President

"Recent Killington Section Members sometimes ask 'What is the Kirk Fund?' or 'Why should I contribute to it?'" I asked these questions after joining the Killington Section, and have inquired with more purpose since joining the Section's Board of Directors. Longtime members were able to provide general information, but not the specifics. I volunteered to do some research. I found the sentence quoted above in the January 1981 edition of Smoke & Blazes! I also unearthed the information set forth below.

Establishment of the Kirk Fund was announced at the Killington Section's 15 January 1977 Annual Meeting – more than 30 years ago. George Kirk died in 1966, having worked as a reporter and editor at the Rutland Herald for 57 years. He was also an observer for the Weather Service for over 25 years, and was reported to be an expert on botany and ornithology as well as "all items of natural history." Smoke & Blazes articles describe him as "an ardent Green Mountain Club member" (Jan. 1977) and as "an active hiker who probably climbed Killington more than anyone else." (Oct. 1978) If George Kirk held the record, I wonder if it has since been eclipsed by W. Churchill Scott, Bill Robichaud, or others following in his footsteps!?

Dorothy Wyman Kirk (1907-1987) was a Radcliffe graduate who taught English at Rutland High School for many years. Dorothy Kirk continued her association with the Killington Section following the death of her husband and her retirement in 1972. The Annual Meeting minutes contained in the January 1977 issue of Smoke & Blazes explain the Kirk Fund as follows:

Mrs. Dorothy Kirk established a Fund in memory of Mr. George L. Kirk with a check for $500.00.  To be named the George L. Kirk Trails and Shelters Fund of the Green Mountain Club, Inc. This Fund to be managed by the Killington Section and when the princip[al] reaches $5,000.00 the % [interest] income will be used for maintenance. Mrs. Kirk will continue to contribute with the understanding that the Section will do the same. A number of methods were discussed: voluntary donations at the time of paying dues, gifts in memory or honor of a person, or a small donation on hikes.

Subsequent Treasurer's reports show the Fund steadily growing, thanks to the commitment and contributions of Dorothy Kirk and other Section members. The January 1981 Smoke & Blazes reported:

Over the past five years Mrs. Kirk has made several substantial donations which when added to the contributions of club members presently total $4973.19. After reaching our goal of $5,000 the interest earned will be used for the maintenance of our section's trails and shelters. With constantly increasing expenses...the Kirk Fund is vital to enable us to meet our responsibilities.

The October 1981 Smoke & Blazes reported that the goal had been reached "and according to the terms of the agreement, interest earned will [now] be used for trails and shelter maintenance."

I have not reviewed our Section records for the decades since the $5,000 threshold was achieved 26 years ago. Your Killington Section Board of Directors has authorized expenditures for trails and shelters work, and will continue to do so. Thanks to continued donations and accrued interest, the Kirk Fund now contains more than $15,000.

The minutes of the last Section Directors' meeting, contained elsewhere in this newsletter, reflect that the Board recently considered a proposal to donate $15,000 from the Kirk Fund to the Main Club. I believe I speak for your Killington Section Directors when I state that the decision not to transfer these funds to the Main Club intends no disrespect to the laudable goals of the Second Century Campaign. We encourage Killington Section members to contribute to the Second Century Campaign as they are able. Rather, I believe your Directors' decision was intended to honor the stated terms of the Kirk Fund, and in particular the stipulation set forth above that the Fund "will be managed by the Killington Section."

Expenditures for the improvement of the trails and shelters in our area have been approved during my tenure on the Board. There will be projects needing financial assistance on "our" stretch of the Long Trail in the near future – Gov. Clement repairs and the projected new shelter on Little Killington are two which spring to mind. The Board expressed its willingness to expend Fund monies on such worthwhile projects, while respecting the $5,000 reserve and other conditions for its management and use accepted by the Killington Section when the Kirk Fund was established.

I hope this investigation and report memorialized in Smoke & Blazes will inform a new generation of Killington Section members about the establishment and use of the Kirk Fund. We should all be thankful to Dorothy Kirk and other past Section members for establishment of and generous donations to the Kirk Fund, which will continue to pay dividends as the Green Mountain Club and Killington Section enter their second century protecting and maintaining the Long Trail.

Secretary's Report: The Minutes of the 19 June Board meeting were reviewed and approved as presented by Secretary John Hale.

Treasurer's Report: Treasurer John Hale presented the Financial Statements dated 10/23/07 which reflect Total Assets of $22,535.58; Income and Expense for the period 1/1/07 to 10/23/07 of $3,813.42 and $1,069.66 respectively yielding a Net Income for the period of $2,743.76.

Income for the period came primarily from Donations of $2,253 and Membership Dues of $1,255. Expenses for the period were primarily Newsletter Expenses of $381, Hall Rental for our two social events and a $500 donation to the Main Club regarding the Minerva Hinchey Shelter.

Statewide Club: Lynda Hutchins reported on her attendance at the Main Club's Board Meeting of 28 September 2007:

- The Main Club cash flow is running slightly better than last year but is still an area of concern and various painful options are under consideration including cutting the share of dues given back to Sections from 25% to 20%.

- The Second Century fundraising campaign stands at about $4,400,000 with $845,000 to go to the goal.

- Preparations are underway for the new Main Club Headquarters building; Act 250 and other permit applications are submitted, a construction bid is expected by January, a residential wind turbine has been donated for education purposes, lumber is being measured and cut.

- Two men have been arrested and charged with the felony count of damaging public property. During this summer, these men clear cut a 3,000 foot long by 60 foot wide section of Big Jay (Jay Peak) in an area under GMC management by deeded easement. The Main Club is suing the men for civil damages and pursuing other punitive action.

Lynda's full report is available from the Secretary.

Governor Clement Shelter: The Governor Clement Shelter saga continues. The Town of Shrewsbury originally offered to "throw up the road" to the shelter so it could be closed to vehicular traffic and so shut out miscreants. The Town Board of Selectmen has since decided to downgrade the road to a "trail" allowing its entrance to be gated. In theory the gate would be locked during the summer party months to keep out the vandals and opened in the late fall and winter for hunters and snowmobilers. The timing of the locking/unlocking is still being discussed, but this solution appears to be workable for all parties. The Shelter will likely not have to be torn down as a result.

It was moved, seconded and passed that a $100 donation toward the Town's cost of installing the gate (which is to be provided free by the US Forrest Service) be offered by the Killington Section to be consummated once the gate is actually installed. This gesture is meant to encourage the Town and indicate the Section's pleasure at their decision. President Griffith will write the offer letter.

Smoke & Blazes: Bob Perkins reported that the next Smoke and Blazes newsletter will be sent out at the end of November and asked that reports on hikes be submitted more quickly. He was asked if recycled paper can be used for our publication; Bob will research.

Kirk Fund: John Hale again presented his idea that the Killington Section contribute $15,000 of the Section's Kirk Fund to the Main Club's Second Century campaign. A contribution of this size would endow a particular Long Trail shelter and be recognized by name in the Long Trail Guide, the Annual Report and website, and at the Main Club Headquarters.

John felt that the Kirk funds would be spent on trail maintenance per the Kirk mandate; that the Kirk name would be remembered in posterity; that the Main Club would begin to actively use the funds for trail and shelter maintenance as part of the Second Century campaign; and that the ongoing work of the Killington Section would not be negatively impacted.

A motion was made and seconded that the Board make the fall potluck dinner meeting scheduled for 10 November an official Section meeting; that an extraordinary mailing be sent out to all Killington Section members noticing the meeting and the contribution proposal; and that the general membership should decide the issue. (John offered to pay for the extraordinary mailing).

In active discussion, the opposing view held that the original intent of the Kirk family donation appeared to be to put control of the funds in the hands of the Section; that the funds could have been given to the Main Club but were not; and that the Section has an obligation to maintain control of the funds as we have for the past 30 years.

The motion was defeated in a vote of two Yeas and seven Nays.

Trails and Shelters: Trails and Shelters Chairperson, Herb Ogden, asked that the Board consider allowing him to represent that the Killington Section is willing to support upcoming projects in our area with substantial financial contributions. This would allow him better leverage with the Main Club's Trail Management Committee in having our own project needs set higher on the priority list.

It was moved and seconded that the Killington Section should stand ready to contribute as much of the funds from the Kirk Fund balances ($15,920.84 as at 10/23/07) as necessary to support worthwhile projects within the Section's purview with the provisos that the Kirk Fund balances shall not be drawn down to less than $5,000 and that the Section Board review and approve all such projects before funds be expended. The motion was intended to serve the dual purpose of supporting Herb in his relationship with the Main Club and to settle the issue of how the Kirk Fund monies may be utilized.

The motion passed with five Yeas, three Nays, and one abstention.

Outing Publicity: President Griffith reported that the Rutland Herald has changed its method of accepting public notices for publication. An electronic filing system is now employed and Bob Perkins offered to enter information about the Section's hikes in that way.

End-to-End Hike: Steve Williams reported that there are six End to End hikers still in the program and the last hike of this season will be held on 3 November.

Trailhead Issues: The Route 103 parking lot and the adjacent Clarendon Gorge areas are being misused, particularly with trash and garbage discards. There is no person or organization now responsible for policing the area. Herb Ogden will bring up the subject at the next Main Club Trail Management Committee meeting. One suggestion was to hire people on probation from the courts.

Upcoming Events: Upcoming events include the Second Annual Long Trail Festival in August of 2008; the Appalachian Trail Conference Biennial celebration in July of 2009 (the Killington Section contact will be Sue Thomas); and, of course the Green Mountain Club Centennial in 2010.

The Education Committee of the Main Club sponsors speakers in their Taylor Series and on February 6, 2008, Board member Cindy Taylor-Miller will speak about her recently completed transcontinental bicycle ride. There is no official charge for attending the program, but any donations collected will accrue to the Killington Section.

The speaker at the 10 November Fall Potluck Dinner will be Paul Houchens who will describe his (and Board member Lynda Hutchins') experiences in the Yukon last summer. A motion was passed to reimburse Mr. Houchens $60 toward the cost of his car transportation to the meeting.

Next Board Meeting: The next Board meeting will be held on Tuesday, 12 February at 6:00 PM at the Back Home Again Café in Rutland.

The meeting was adjourned at 8:39 PM.

A note from our schedule coordinator, Sue Thomas, 773-2185

After our scheduled trip to the Valcour Island Lighthouse had to be cancelled two years in a row, I've decided that the way to make the channel freeze over is to not list it in the schedule! I will keep an eye on conditions, and if it's safe enough for the Historical Society to open the lighthouse, we'll go. It's likely to be the first or second Sunday in March. Phone me if you'd like to add your name to the to-be-called list.

Sable Mountain Area

4 August 2007

By Herb Ogden, leader

This was going to be a moderate to difficult eight mile hike along the flank of Mt. Hunger and (yes) Delectable Mountain in Stockbridge and Barnard. For three reasons, it wasn't. First, the forecast was for temperatures around 90 degrees. Second, I checked out the bushwhack part of the route and discovered that an old, logged-over area that was fairly easy to navigate in April had turned into something with such lush, high ferns that one had to walk very slowly to avoid tripping over the logging leftovers that were now hidden beneath all the vegetation. Third, part of what looked like a nice woodroad walk in April was choked with tall nettles. After conferring with the other two who showed up, I changed the hike to an old road walk. I'll put the original on the schedule for next spring.

We drove up Pittsfield's South Hill Road from Vt. Route 100 and left the car at the height of land. Walking down a pretty passable road to the Fletcher Brook Road, we passed several cellar holes and a nice new camp. We then headed north on the Fletcher Brook Road, very happy on such a steamy day to be in a steep, shady valley with a brook at the bottom. Leaving the valley, we hiked up the Taggart Hill Road. When the grade lessened, we retreated up a shady lane to the former J. Taggart farm, where we lunched and enjoyed a little easterly view.

Soon after lunch, we turned left onto a less used road, where logging had created some local views. Quite a ways up the road was a rustic year round house with lawn ornaments! There were also several foundations. As the road deteriorated, we finally stopped climbing toward Sable Mountain and the road took us south to the car. We saw no wildlife to speak of but enjoyed the relatively cool woods on this hot day.

On the way home, we toured the old cemetery. Some of the stones from the early 1800s are beautiful. There's also the gravestone equivalent of yellow journalism – the headstone of a deaf mute who was "killed by the fall of a tree." This was a good place to ponder what life was like up there about two centuries ago.

Mount Independence
Senior Shuffle at Sundown

15 September 2007

By Roma Pulling, Leader

Saturday morning was very disappointing with dark clouds and showers. It didn't seem likely that we would ever see the sun set, as we never saw it rise. When we left the park at 5:00 PM, it started to rain again. But at the lookout on the Orange Trail at Mt. Independence, we saw the most beautiful sunset I ever remember.

Four of us set out on the trail that had been "improved" to accommodate wheel chairs since our last trip there. Still, it seemed long for such conveyances with sharp turns, and I was glad to be walking. At the new lookout we ate our supper and enjoyed the view. Returning as dark settled in we needed the flashlights that we had stowed in our packs.

Thank you, Sue, Barb, and Charlie, for sharing this rewarding experience with me.

Bird Mountain-Poultney

7 October 2007

By Barbara Griffith, leader

We've been to the top of Bird Mountain a number of times but we've never made the hike up the same way. None with us this day had made the trek. When we pointed in the general direction of the western summit stating that that was our destination all that was seen was a fog bank. The clouds cloaked the mountain and the hikers knew not what they were climbing towards. Perhaps the mystery spurred them on.

Our footing was fine as we traveled up a well maintained path skirting the fields at the base of the mountain. Steadily we climbed onto the steep incline that is stoned into the path. Noses to the hill we carefully made our way to the area between the ridges then winding to the southwest. In the time it took us to attain the top of the outcrop the fog and clouds parted and we were rewarded with breath taking views to the valleys below. Dinner in a fine restaurant would be found wanting after lunch at this altitude's panorama.

Bird Mountain, located in the Taconic Range, has a prominent 2216-foot rock outcrop. Barry and I gleaned some historical information about Bird Mountain or Birdseye as some locals call it: From the "History of Rutland County" one learns that Colonel Bird spent an unscheduled night "on the summit of a precipitous mountain" circa 1767. Thus the name Bird Mountain. Some say he woke up and had a "Birdseye View" of the panorama below.

Bird Mountain from the South

According to their website the Vermont Fish & Wildlife Department now oversees the Bird Mountain Wildlife Management Area, which has 175 acres in Ira, 115 acres in Castleton and 350 acres in Poultney. According to the "History of Bird's Mountain Masonic Monument" the Masons erected a monument on the top on 27 August 1886. When the corner stone was laid there was a great ceremony with over 2000 participants. This Masonic Monument was later struck and demolished by a bolt of lightning. We have it from a local mason that many of the bricks were retrieved and used in the construction of the Castleton Masonic Lodge.

Little River State Park

13 October 2007

By Viv & Larry Walter, leaders

We had a good turn out with 13 folks eventually joining up. The Little River State Park is an 1100-acre tract within the Mount Mansfield State Forest situated west of Waterbury, VT and north of the Waterbury Reservoir. The park headquarters closed the weekend before, so we hiked an extra mile up the hill from the gate to the trail head. This little park is a historical gem with many cellar holes, graveyards and points of interest. A thriving farm and mill community existed here from the mid 1800s into the 1930s. We guessed that the total mileage was about five miles. Except for the first quarter-mile or so, most of the hiking was on an easy grade. We managed to see pretty much everything and were leaving the old Waterbury Last Block Co. Sawmill site when it began to drizzle. I then led everyone on an errant shortcut (it's traditional) before about-facing to our warm automobiles. Anyone interested in obtaining guide maps to the different sites can get one at the park headquarters during the summer, or they can give us a call. There are several trailside history stations with short descriptions of who occupied different sites, some tragic and some humorous. It's worth the trip the next time you're in the Waterbury area. A clockwise loop would be a nice choice if on skis.

Lincoln Gap to Appalachia Gap

4 August 2007, Leg 14

By Cindy Oas-Kirk

Lindy Brown, Tom Copps, Allison Norton, Cindy Oas-Kirk, and Dorothy Sullivan hiked the 11.6 miles over this very interesting section of the Long Trail. We set in at 8:45 AM and emerged at 6:15 PM. I don't think there was a winner of the "Time Out" contest. Most guesses were between 4:30 and 7:00 PM. Who guessed 7:00 PM? And was that a second guess?

The weather was perfect. We did have to add a layer atop Mt. Abraham as we sat having a snack. It was crowded on Mt. Abe that day. The caretaker was very helpful, pointing out various peaks including Camel's Hump (where we will be hiking on the next leg of our Bits & Pieces project), Killington, and some of the Adirondacks, and Whites. It never ceases to amaze me how the mileage shrinks when viewed from the mountain tops. This section of the Long Trail offers boulder scrambling, rocky terrain, softwood northern forest, and three ski areas – some runs look very formidable without snow. There are also many fabulous lookouts.

An interesting find along the way was the access to the Theron Dean Shelter via a side trail and/or a cave. Another factoid is that the Long Trail from Lincoln Gap to the Winooski River is called "The Monroe Skyline". In the 1930s there had been a plan to build a highway along this section but it was voted down.

For peak baggers, we did summit two of Vermont's five 4,000-foot peaks: Mt. Abe and Mount Ellen.

Vermont Route 9 to Kelley Stand Road

22/23 September 2007, Leg 16

By Steve Williams

All six "regulars", meaning Rich and Lindy Brown, Tom Copps, Allison Norton, Cindy Oas-Kirk and Steve Williams were available for this hike, so far the only one where an overnight was undertaken. Originally the idea had been to undertake it in two legs, with the breakpoint being access to the ridge via a forest road (by Jeep) followed by a stretch on a skimobile trail (on foot), which access had been surveyed by Steve and Tom. However, discussion of the time required and the associated logistics led to the decision to overnight at the Goddard Shelter, 0.3 miles short of Glastenbury Peak.

The day was great and, with the help of early starts by all for the trip to leave two vehicles at the Kelley Stand Road trailhead, the group left the Route 9 trailhead shortly before 8.00 AM. The trail was easier than the mid-state locations which had been the subject of other recent "End to End" hikes and was also without any bugs (which, earlier in the season are a plague in the area). The party reached the Goddard Shelter in mid afternoon, left gear there and went on to the summit to view the surrounding area from the fire tower. This was a good move, as on Saturday afternoon humidity was low and the view good, as opposed to the next morning when the reverse applied. A spectacular coverage of green meets the eye from East to West and North to South, from the Adirondacks to New Hampshire and from Stratton and Mount Snow to Massachusetts.

It was the writer's first encounter with freeze dried foods, but the beef stroganoff and noodles proved to be splendidly filling, and were followed by an ice cream sandwich (in the usual chocolate biscuits), for which saliva provided the hydration. Ingenious, and definitely recognizable as ice cream even if not first choice in comparison with, say, Ben and Jerry's. Tom and Rich were purists and set up tent near the peak (see below); the remaining four settled for the comforts of the shelter which we had to ourselves. Initially the wind and the early "heads down" time of 8.00 PM were deterrents to sleep, but eventually the rigors of the day overcame both.

On Sunday morning two unaccompanied fine looking hounds appeared, of which more below.

Now, some vignettes from the party:

- Lindy Brown: "My favorite part was waking up Sunday morning in the shelter on Glastenbury Mountain to very chilly temperatures. After breakfast we hiked 4.1 miles to Kid Gore Shelter for our first lunch of the day. It was so beautiful there. We sat in the sunshine looking out at gorgeous foliage and a body of water. I wanted to spend the day but they told me we had a few more miles to go! Later in the day at our next lunch (adequate food being an essential of longer distance hiking) we met a couple that had spent the night at Kid Gore. They had had a moose walk right by the shelter that morning".

- Tom Copps: "Soon after Rich and I pitched our tents at the top of Glastenbury and crawled in for the night I was awoken by running animals racing closely around his tent. I was concerned. What could they be? Bears? No, too fast. Raccoons? Again no. Coyotes? Maybe. On about lap ten the second one whimpered to the front-runner and the mystery was explained. They were hounds out on their own. They spent the whole night chasing around the top of the mountain annoying us. Two hikers who were sleeping without even tents on the top of the mountain were also the target of rambunctious nocturnal carousing and got little sleep. However, they probably diverted attention from Rich and me, allowing for a comfortable nights sleep after all"

- Allison Norton: "I have to say I was thrilled when we got to the trailhead at Route 9, because I had looked forward to this trip all spring and summer! I second the previous comments that we found this hike to be easier than some of the other LTETE trips further north. A particular feature of the trip that was especially nice was the "mauve squad" which consists of Cindy, Lindy, and me, all with similar shades of backpack, and sometimes hiking as a trio. One of the main things I remember from the first day is that we were never really sure where we were, or how far from our campsite, because there were no signs and few landmarks! I think we were all surprised when we got to Goddard Shelter as soon as we did. I also insist on including the following useful tidbit of information: on the first day we passed two HUGE piles of bear scat right on the trail. Also on the first day, as we got closer to the shelter, we came across two young guys who were obviously hiking faster than us and were taking a break. They caught up toward the "mauve squad," as we were hiking together at the time, and we discussed holding them up somehow so we could get to the shelter first. I considered holding my hiking pole out to the sides like a balance pole. But when we talked to them, they mentioned that they were going to just sleep on the ground without tents, and we relaxed a little. The shelter was beautiful and clean with a nice porch, which provided a psychological if not physical barrier to roving wildlife. And, the second day was pretty much a slow, gradual downhill all day with only a few minor uphill. Like everyone else, I was surprised and excited to see Sue and Barry at Story Spring. Seeing those two, coupled with running into Pooh Bear and Happy Tails (see below), resulted in a noisy, excited reunion of sorts at the shelter, much to the surprise of some other hikers who said they hadn't seen people in days!"

- Cindy Oas-Kirk: "As we came into Story Spring Shelter--our last stop along this division of the Long Trail, I thought I was seeing things. But no--indeed, there was Sue Thomas and Barry Griffith approaching from the North with treats of bottled water, cookies and stories of the "Glastenbury Triangle". WOW!! How thoughtful!! We learned there is a history of mysterious disappearances on this section of the Long Trail. Yes, we were all accounted for and pleased to learn this on our way out. The last four miles seemed easy as we moved right along chattering with our welcoming party"

- Steve Williams: "Also at Story Spring Shelter were Pooh Bear and Happy Tails, previously met in mid-state and still looking remarkably trim and enthusiastic as they made their way to the Massachusetts border. (As trail names do not give much away about their owners, let's add that Pooh Bear was an attractive woman with many years of youthful advantage compared to the more mature members of our own party, while Happy Tails was a Nova Scotia Duck Toller Retriever. Not too many of these out on the trails.)"

Before the final stretch, Forest Service Route 71 to Kelley Stand Road, the party met a man and his (presumed) daughter who were looking for two hounds which, from their description, were the two described by Tom above, and last seen by the searchers the previous day. After some discussion about missing canines, it emerged that there were two missing bipeds also, but these appeared to be of less concern. The Glastenbury Triangle strikes again?

The hike concluded at about 5.00 PM. with a feeling of satisfaction by all at having conquered the longest continuous roadless section of the Long Trail.

Duxbury Road to Bolton Notch Road

3 November 2007, Leg 18

By Lindy Brown

Come along with us as this is a trail of three men and a lady! On Saturday Steve Williams, Tom Copps, and Richard and Lindy Brown hiked the Long Trail from Duxbury Road to Bolton Notch Road. Steve and Tom were to meet us in Jonesville at 8:00 AM. We arrived in Jonesville, looked in our rear view mirror, and there they were at 8:00 AM. How's that for coordination?

We started hiking at 8:35 AM on a very cold day; frost was still on the grass. Tom thought we needed to jog. Well, Steve soon put an end to that idea! We paused for a photo opportunity under the I 89 overpass as this marked a milestone in our 8.2-mile journey.

The wind was really whipping at Duck Brook Shelter where we stopped briefly for a chilly lunch at 11:00 AM. In the afternoon we had a few outlooks and then time for another snack at the 1680-foot height-of-land.

We were fascinated by the beaver pond and by all the fresh work the busy animals have been doing. Tom took a picture of a tree being held up only by an inch of wood remaining in its center. After a little difficulty crossing the final brook, we arrived at the car at 1:45 PM. We stopped for tea and HUGE brownies on the way home.

Mrs. Gorp: On the Road Again

[Killington Section Director, shelter adopter, and AT End-to-Ender, Cindy Taylor-Miller, (a.k.a. Mrs. Gorp), who last summer bicycled across the country and back, provided the following update.]

Once again I'll be riding across the country on my bicycle. This time the route I'll follow is called the "Southern Tier", as it traverses 3,159 miles through the states of California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida. I'll begin this adventure at the Pacific Ocean in San Diego, CA and ride east to the Atlantic Ocean

I'll have a bit of climbing to do to get out of San Diego before I spill out into the desert near In-kopah Pass. This route is best ridden before it gets too hot. That is why I'm making this my end of February get-a-way from the snow ride.

I will reach the route's highest point at Emory Pass, 8,228 feet in New Mexico. Once I ride out the Texas hill country the route should "flatten out" as I pedal through the bayous and farmlands of the Gulf Coast and reach the Atlantic Ocean in Florida.

I hope to be back in Vermont near the first of May, just in time for black fly and mud season!

Minerva Hinchey Shelter Maintenance Endowed

By Cindy Taylor Miller

Smoke & Blazes has been informed that the future maintenance of Minerva Hinchey Shelter has been permanently endowed through a generous Second Century Campaign contribution from Scott and Deb Livingston of Bolton, Connecticut.

Scott Livingston is President and CEO of Horst Engineering, a 61 year old manufacturer of precision machined components for aerospace and other high technology industries.

The Livingstons both are competitive endurance athletes, and completed a thirteen day End-to-End of the Long Trail in 2005. Their Long Trail hike was chronicled in the June 2006 issue of the Appalachian Mountain Club's Appalachia. When asked why they chose Minerva Hinchey Shelter, Deb said, "I lived in Mendon and taught snowboarding at Killington for many years. I feel a closeness to that area because of that."

The Killington Section is thankful for generous people like the Livingstons who have the ability to ensure the future of one of the seven shelters within our section.

Section Directors to Meet

It's not often that a Killington Section event is postponed because of our fickle Vermont weather but it happened in February, not to an outing but to the regular quarterly meeting of the Section Board of Directors. President Barry Griffith has rescheduled the meeting for

6:00 ~~AM~~ Tuesday 25 March at the Back Home Again Café

on Center Street in beautiful downtown Rutland

Board meetings are not always the most exciting way to spend an evening but meetings are open to all members and, in fact, to anyone who is interested. This would be a good opportunity to gain some insight into what it takes to manage our program of outings and maintenance of our section of the Long Trail. You might even find a way to become more involved in your club.

Directors Steve Williams and John Hale at a Previous Board Meeting

And then there's our second favorite sport. While discussing club business you can enjoy a cup of tea, a light snack, or even a full delicious Back Home meal (on your own nickel, of course). Join us on the 25th.

Outing Reports

Black Mountain, Whitehall, NY

14 July 2007

By Allison Norton, leader

A fifty percent chance of rain was forecast, but the day turned out to be clear and sunny. We had a nice group of nine people plus everybody's favorite terrier. When signing in at the trail register on Pike Brook Road, I wrote a greeting to the Burlington Section in the log, because according to the GMC calendar they would be doing the same hike the next day!

After a little climb out of the parking lot, the trail is an old road for a while, goes past someone's (uninhabited?) camp with outbuildings, and then turns up the Black Mountain trail toward the summit. The trail to the summit is pretty steep and very eroded. As we were climbing, we met a woman and her puppy. The puppy became Burdock's new best friend and for much of the climb, the two dogs raced and chased each other up and down the trail, back and forth past our group. They must have gone at least ten times the distance that we people hiked.

When we reached the summit, we found that the windmill was gone, which was a surprise to some of us. There were some solar panels instead, along with the usual assortment of communication towers and the remnants of a ranger cabin and an old fire tower. Having anything on top of a mountain, especially in a wilderness, is controversial to many of us, but personally I prefer solar panels and windmills to condos. The weather was still clear and sunny at the top, and we enjoyed a leisurely lunch while discussing the views.

The area around the peak has some steep cliffs, but the only casualty was one water bottle. From the peak, we could see Lake George, Lake Champlain, the High Peaks, and Route 4 extending to our very own Pico, Killington, and Mendon. We could even see White Rocks when the haze shifted. I swear I could even see the faintest outline of the Champlain Bridge, but don't ask me to explain exactly how to find it!

After our lunch was the moment of decision: in the hike schedule, I had listed the hike as a trip to the summit, with an "optional" longer loop down the west side of the mountain, depending on weather and the group's preference. The decision was enthusiastically unanimous, or unanimously enthusiastic, to continue the loop! The trail down the west side of the peak is beautiful, with views of Lake George much of the way down. It is much less eroded as well. We followed a few faint side trails in search of better views. It was only after bushwhacking through chest-high shrubbery and across rocky ledges to reach some blueberries that someone mentioned the possibility of rattlesnakes! No sightings, even though we had Barb with us. I wasn't on her infamous snake hike, but I've heard!

The trail switchbacks down, down, and down some more. We marveled at the well-constructed trail, with retaining walls built of rock, and we wondered if it had been a road in the past. At the bottom of the trail, we looped back to our starting point, along the Black Mt.

Pond trail and the Lapland Pond trail. Black Mt. Pond had a lean-to with a nice new picnic table. Both ponds were pretty clear, and we could see frogs and little fish. Near Lapland Pond, we were able to catch a view of the towers on the summit of Black Mt., and with all of the climbing and descending we had done, the summit didn't really look all that far away. Much of the Lapland Pond trail heading back to the junction with the summit trail was pretty wet, but for a warm sunny day we put up with it just fine. Once we reached the junction with the summit trail, it was an easy walk back to the trailhead.

Great Hawk Colony, Rochester

25 November 2007

By Gordon Cawood, leader

Eight GMCers resisted the temptation to go skiing on this, the first decent ski weekend of the season. Instead, we enjoyed what developed into a sunny hike up Austin Hill in Rochester, VT. We admired the upscale Great Hawk Colony dwellings from roads clearly marked "Hunting Prohibited". The hunters were busy, however, judging from the rifle reports sounding from the Maple Hill area to the west. The sun came out while we had lunch beside the community's swim pond.

A moment of excitement occurred when Viv's still-rolled-up seat pad rolled out onto the ice. A gentle breeze took it out near the middle of the pond. After some agonizing minutes another playful zephyr brought it back to shore where it was quickly recovered. Views to the west of the lightly snow covered hills were irresistible.

Thanks for coming, Arlene Zivitz, Larry and Viv Walters, Sue Thomas, Allison Norton, Gerry and Cheryl Martin. I enjoyed your company.

Crown Point Road, Proctor

1 December 2007

By Barry Griffith

We carpooled to Proctor, where we were met by Jim Moore, our leader for this outing. Jim told us that he went on many Killington Section outings as a teenager, learning from Churchill Scott, Craigie Perkins, and others. He was pleased to share his knowledge and love of the outdoors with us. Appropriately, we met at a Crown Point Road marker at the northeasterly corner of Beaver Pond. The Crown Point Road could be described as Vermont's first hiking trail. After driving the French from Lake Champlain in 1759, British General Amherst sent troops to cut and mark a route from Crown Point to Fort No. 4 on the Connecticut River. In the years which followed colonists used this route to come and settle here.

Traces of the old Crown Point Road are hard to spot in most towns. However, as we descended into the Garden of Eden Jim pointed out a remarkably well-preserved abutment carved into the hillside above his home. We paused to admire the workmanship in a stone house Jim has erected nearby. We then continued north, past another noticeable abutment, and on to Shelter Rock. The southerly side of this massive outcropping benefits from solar warmth even in the winter, and was likely used as a campsite.

Our next stop was the cellar hole of Roger Stevens, who settled here in 1770. His home was west of Gorham Bridge, on a tract with a great view of the Otter Creek valley and Green Mountains to the east. Jim shared stories about Roger's son, Roger Jr., who remained loyal to the Crown during the American Revolution, and was required to remove to Canada to avoid the wrath of his neighbors. We then struck out to the west until we came across another old highway, the Market Road, which was used to take goods from Middlebury and other towns along its route southerly to Albany. We followed this road south to the Powers cellar hole – home of another early area settler. We talked about the local marble industry, dominated by the Proctors in the years which followed.

A short trek along the present-day highway returned us to our vehicles. We expressed pleasure with our walk in the woods, enjoying both the natural features and the history of the area. Thanks for a great day, Jim!

High Pond, Sudbury

5 January 2008

By Barbara & Barry Griffith, leaders

Holidays over, cabin fever amongst us – twenty snowshoers and one dog came out for this hike. It was so nice to see everyone again. We were fortunate to have along with us a former maker of signs and resident of the High Pond ski area. Gleaned from Cindy Taylor-Miller was history of the '80's. The mystery of the trails and signs that crisscross the area was solved.

The Nature Conservancy trailhead to High Pond Preserve is on Ganson Hill Road in Hubbardton. High Pond itself is in Sudbury. The hiking trail was constructed by the Vermont Youth Conservation Corps in 2005. One word of caution – you hike into and down to High Pond. Thus you hike out and up when you leave.

Conservationist Douglas Burden started buying parcels of land here in the 1930's. Eventually these lands came under the Conservancy's care in the early 1980's. The preserve now includes nearly three thousand acres in Hubbardton, Brandon, Pittsford, and Sudbury. There is quite a history about the site. If you wish to learn more, let the Griffiths know and we will forward the information to you. For history buffs, there is evidence that an old military road passed by the Pond. We noted evidence of the Taconic Mountains, with shale and slate outcroppings here and there.

Returning to Rutland we managed to drive over High Pond Road, and stopped to view the site of the old High Pond Ski Area. There are old buildings still existing with remains of ski tows and trails. There are even gravestones beside the old farmhouse across from the old ski area. One can go online to the NELSAP website (New England Lost Ski Area Preservation) and read about High Pond's history from the 1940s to the 1980s.

Mad Tom Notch Road

12 January 2008

By Larry Walter, leader

Tom Capps and I recon'd this hike the weekend before and encountered a nasty combination of zero Fahrenheit and a hard crust with four inches of powder on top. Any side hill traversing rapidly degenerated into frustrating skating expositions with poles and shoes scattered over a 200-meter radius (speaking for myself here...Tom did a lot of waiting). Thankfully, a long rain and lots of January thaw had lowered the snow level and made the footing a lot better for the GMC hike.

The trail begins about a half mile east of the Dorset Town Clerk's office where the paved road turns northerly. We parked at the town office. It's a nice place to park, but beware of speedy automobiles slaloming off of the hill. Once on the trail, it continues about a half mile along the north bank. That's where the road crosses to the south side over a bridge that was washed out in the early 1900s. The twisted remains of an I-beam stringer lie down stream from here.

Mad Tom Brook

I'm inclined to think that this was more than just an access route for pig-iron smelters. The bridge footings (at least three of which we encountered) were all substantial, with stone and mortar wing walls. When the road crossed back to the north bank, further up the ravine, we found beautifully constructed retaining walls complete with iron support cradles built into the stone work (to support wooden rails?). When we hit the third massive bridge footing, where the road crosses back to the south side of the brook, we paused for lunch. A dark fisher-cat trotted side slope to the north of us.

Lunch at Mad Tom

All in the party appeared well and relatively oblivious to future hazards (similar to Irvin and Mallory?), so we left the drainage and climbed northerly and westerly over a series of old skid trails until we hit the height of land. Earlier, some of us were silly enough to believe my proclamation: "we probably won't need snow shoes". It got a bit dicey on the southeast slope with some glazed surfaces and post-holing. Lesson learned...I'll be a bit more conservative the next time. Tom kept track of our progress with his trusty GPS. The satellites accurately indicated us as being within striking distance of Pierre, South Dakota. We were welcomed by a relatively bare, razor-back ridge upon which we descended several hundred feet southwesterly, catching views of the back side of Bromley and Stratton as well as the Taconic Range. We discovered several, beautiful old maples and oaks along the way, some with cryptic cross-hatched scribe marks and blazes. Some of the old snags had been all but disassembled into brick-sized chunks by the local woodpecker. Not many people get up this way. Eventually we had to bail off the west side onto old skid roads, eventually joining back onto the main trail. We got back to the cars at about three o'clock and rendezvoused at the local store for essential sugar, fat, salt and caffeine supplements. Nine souls started and nine finished with no injuries...just the customary dose of whining (brownies were provided to soften the blow).

I'm going to attempt to get the Town and the Forest interested in adopting this route, bridge crossings included, as an official LT side trail. Mad Tom Brook is a beautiful stream with huge pools. The third bridge is within easy reach of Mad Tom Notch Road and Forest Road 21. Another branch could easily be established to a major ridge to the south which eventually tails out near East Dorset. We'd probably need another bridge crossing there. I'll schedule a fall hike, when the water levels are negotiable, for one of these extended routes. Being that I'm allergic to spot-the-car scenarios, I'll probably attempt to loop things off. Hope to see you there.

Ski Day for Shareheat, Peru

27 January 2008

By Connie Youngstrom

Wild Wings XC Center, located in Peru, VT., was the host of this year's Shareheat fundraiser. BROCC organized the event to raise money for heating assistance. With the current high fuel prices, the fundraiser was especially important this year.

Cindy Taylor Miller, Mark and I were the representatives from the Killington Section. The month of January saw a big meltdown, so skiing was limited to the easier terrain, mostly on the level near the warming cabin. Under overcast skies with a light snow fall we climbed the hills and enjoyed exhilarating downhill, while taking in the views of the snowy woods.

In total we raised almost $500 for this important cause. Many thanks to those of you who made donations.

Merck Forest Ramble, Rupert

2 February 2008

By Steve Williams, leader

With icy conditions on the afternoon and evening of the preceding Friday, and thinking of the connecting road from Route 315 to the Merck Forest Visitor Center, the key question about the hike was whether it would be held at all. Fortunately, the leader was able to make contact with Merck Forest, specifically Ken Smith, the man responsible for sanding the aforementioned road. With a reassuring report by Ken at 7.30 a.m. the leader felt sufficiently confident to invite others to join him, which a surprising number of eleven did.

Most of the four-hour loop trail hike was on the Forest's old logging roads, but with the last half mile or so down from the shoulder of Spruce Peak being a more conventional hiking trail. Fortuitously all participants had snowshoes or yak tracks or similar which, given the occasional ice beneath the snow covering of a few inches, were highly desirable. Views out towards the Adirondacks, Mount Equinox and Mount Antone were all worthwhile, even if mostly through trees. Larry Walter did some sterling maintenance work by cutting and removing a number of obstacles from the trail.

All in all a pleasant outcome bearing in mind what might have been expected from the previous day's inclement weather.

Gifford Woods, Killington

16 February 2008

By Roma Pulling

Without the help of my co-leader, Steve Pulling, this roast would never have gotten off the ground. He drove his truck, which was a big help in carrying our equipment and supplies; he lifted crates of wood and a 5-gallon water carrier with great ease; and he strapped all this stuff to a toboggan and hauled it to the shelter.

As our 11 hikers and 2 dogs were on their way over Route 4 to our destination, we saw a car lying on its side on the shoulder. It was surrounded by a police vehicle, fire truck and ambulance with westbound traffic backed up for some distance, but eastbound traffic was moving smoothly and we were soon in the parking lot near the maintenance shed at Gifford Woods. Steve quickly had the supply toboggan ready to go and we proceeded on snowshoes for a short distance to a group of lean-tos named Locust, Pine and Cherry but decided on Aspen as having a fireplace we could actually identify under the snow. Taking turns with the shovel Steve had carried in, the men cleared enough snow away so a fire could be built. Jerry and Steve P. volunteered as firekeepers while 7 of our group went on a snowshoe hike. Jean and I enjoyed an abbreviated version and returned to the shelter to find that our firekeepers already had water boiling so we could warm up with hot chocolate.

Hot-dogs on the Fire

Shortly the long trekkers returned, and we partook of roasted hot dogs in rolls, chips, mustard and relish and topped it off with a cake and candle in honor of my grandmother's 144th birthday. For both the idea and the cake I owe thanks to our Outings Chairperson, Sue.

Who was my grandmother? Ruth Ellen Lewis was born February 16, 1864, in Bridgewater and upon completing her education taught in area schools. On 21 February 1885, she married Gilman Fernando Robinson and settled on his farm in Bridgewater Chateaugay until they were hired to work on renovation of the Inn in Wallingford, he in construction and Ruth furnishing meals for the workers. While there, Ruth gave birth to her first child [my uncle].

On completion of the work in Wallingford, Gilman purchased a farm just over the Bridgewater line in the town of Woodstock, where my mother was born. Besides caring for her two children, Ruth mothered three boys from Gilman's first marriage, his mother and his brother, and a two-year-old child which they adopted from an orphan train and even a grandson for a while. In time Gilman and Ruth had a new three-story house and a five-story barn built, which are still there, now being used as a bed-and-breakfast.

Thanks to everyone who came on the annual roast and helped to make it a huge success.

Nina LaPenna

By Sue Thomas

The Killington Section has lost another devoted member with the passing in February of Nina LaPenna, 91. Throughout the 1980s and early 90s Nina was a regular on hikes, short and long, and an enthusiastic and welcome contributor to pot luck suppers.

Raffle Quilt

Calling all sewing enthusiasts: The Killington Section is planning to make a quilt, which will be raffled off to benefit the Green Mountain Club's Second Century Campaign. Our goal is to have it completed in time for the annual meeting in late May. If you'd like to help by contributing a square (or two, or three...!), by donating money or materials, or by helping with the construction and quilting, please contact Sue Thomas, 773-2185.

Allison Norton Elected New Killington Section Director

At the recent annual meeting of the Killington Section newcomer Allison Norton (trail name Landshark) was elected to the Board of Directors. Also elected to the nine-member board were former director Sue Thomas and continuing director Barry Griffith.

Allison graduated as a psychology major from Alfred University and has an advanced degree from SUNY Albany. She works as a school psychologist for grades K-6 in Whitehall, NY.

Growing up in the Buffalo area, Allison's outdoor experience was pretty much limited to occasional visits to her Dad's hunting camp and to family camping in state parks. When a friend, seven or eight years ago, invited her to climb Sleeping Beauty Mountain near Lake George she was hooked on the woods and hiking.

Allison settled in Rutland in 2005 and soon found the Green Mountain Club. She became an active participant and before long was leading Killington Section hikes, especially in the southern Adirondacks. With a small group from the club, Allison has been hiking the Long Trail in bits and pieces. Her favorite spot on the Trail so far is – surprise – Little Rock Pond. She expects to become an End-to-End by this October.

At Emerald Lake State Park in July Allison Norton will become Mrs. Allison Henry. Phil Henry, her husband-to-be, a teacher in West Rutland, is not much of a hiker, but somehow arranged for them to be on top of Mount Mansfield when he proposed.

Killington Section Kayak Raffle

By: Wayne Krevetski

Do to the generosity of Eastern Mountain Sports of the Diamond Run Mall; the Killington Section was able to raffle a Kayak during Mother's Day weekend, in conjunction with Eastern Mountain Sports 20% Gear-Up Sale. EMS donated the Kayak, a Perception Prodigy 10, and allowed us space at the entrance to the store to sell tickets. Thanks go to Allison Norton, Sue Thomas, Cindi Taylor-Miller and her son Kyle, Bob Perkins, Chryl Martin, and Barry Griffith for spending part of a beautiful weekend in doors at the Mall to sell tickets as well as to others who helped with ticket sales. The Kayak was won by GMC member, Paul Dahm of Poultney. All of the proceeds, $267.00 will go to the Killington Section. Lastly thanks to Sarah, Craig, Scott, and the rest of the gang at EMS for their help in making this event possible.

AT Thru Hikers Companion

By Kathy Krevetski

I am working with the Appalachian Long Distance Hikers Association as a field editor for their AT Hiker's Guide the "Thru-Hiker's Companion". The "Companion" lists the resources available to hikers along the length of the Appalachian Trail, and is up-dated every year. I will be helping to up-date the section dealing with the trail running through Vermont, and ask that any members who find any new hiker resources or resources no longer available to contact me so that the information can be included in the next printing of the "Companion". I can be contacted at kkrevetski@hotmail.com or by phone 779-1485. People who are not familiar the "Thru-Hiker's Companion" can view and/or download the latest edition for free at the Appalachian Long Distance Hikers Association website at www.aldfa.org. Your help will be appreciated, thank you.

Killington Section Treasure Hunt

By Herb Ogden

I will give a Long Trail Guide from the 1960s to the first person who sends me the correct answer to this paper treasure hunt -- and I will give the Kirk Trails & Shelters Fund $100 in that person's name, too.

- Start at the site of the southernmost shelter, camp, or lodge that ever existed in the Killington Section.
- Go north on what was the LT until the 1997 relocation, to the top of the first hill.
- Go west until you hit the present LT.
- Note the first letter in the first word of the name of the place where you now are.
- Go to the former camp complex developed by a man whose last name began with the same letter as the first word in the name of the place where you just hit the present LT. It is on a blue blazed trail maintained by the Killington Section.
- Go as far north as you can on this blue blazed trail.
- Note the first letter in the second word of the name of the place where you now are.
- Go to the shelter whose name used to begin with the next letter in the alphabet.
- Hike 13.8 miles on the LT while remaining in the Killington Section.

Where are you now?

Emily Proctor Shelter to Lincoln Gap

21 July 2007, E2E Leg 12

By Steve Williams, leader

Participants; Tom Copps, Allison Norton, Cindy Oas-Kirk, Steve Williams, and special guests Nicola Culmo, Sara Jones and Brian Culmo ((Steve's daughters and grandson respectively)).

The first key feature of the day was rising early enough to coordinate an early enough start for all participants to be at the Emily Proctor trailhead by 8.00 AM., with a car already spotted at the Lincoln Gap end point.

The next feature was 3.5 miles on the Emily Proctor trail before the Long Trail was even reached. Fortunately the weather was kinder than on the descent down the trail two weeks earlier when rain had made the steeper top section a tad hazardous. In addition, the trail starts off at a very gradual incline, so the hiker is lulled into a comfortable feeling that "there's nothing to this".

Once on the LT this belief in the ease of LT hiking was rapidly dispelled by the ascent and partial descent of Mounts Wilson, Roosevelt, Cleveland, and Grant and Little Hans Peak. Together with the ascent on the Emily Proctor Trail, this results in a day's total climbing of over 4200 feet: not a bad workout by most standards. A summary of this leg is readily given: trees, rocks, ups and downs, and occasional splendid views over great swaths of the Green Mountains.

Of note was the party's search for Sunset Ledge, 1.1 miles short of Lincoln Gap. In mid afternoon, with a fair degree of exhaustion setting in, with the party's GPS and topographical identification skills being at a low ebb, and with one participant feeling that it was just around the next corner, some two hours were spent eagerly awaiting our arrival at Sunset Ledge. So, when the Ledge was finally reached, with the knowledge of its proximity to the concluding trailhead, it was welcome indeed.

Two memories remain of the descent to Lincoln Gap, 1) the non-appearance of Lincoln Gap Road until it was only twenty five yards away, and 2) that it was reached about half an hour after sunset, which is about as close to losing light that one wants to be. Nevertheless, the party learned from the experience, and on the following hike all were equipped with hiking headlamps.

The journey home was notable for two events, the first being the ride back to Bristol from the Emily Proctor trailhead. The Williams party parted from the others and, following the suggestion of one of the other participants, took off on a dirt road toward Vermont Route 125. This turned out to be much longer than expected, with the result that the travelers arrived at a crossroads in the middle of nowhere, with no indication of which way to travel to get to "somewhere". At that point an angel of mercy, in the form of a woman in a Volvo, unafraid of coming across a large SUV with out-of-state plates, rolled down her window and said "Can I help you?" which she then did most effectively.

By this stage the youngest member of the party, athlete Brian, having acquitted himself very creditably all day long, including the consumption of a not insignificant number of energy bars, decided that food was an absolute and immediate must. Bristol having nothing to offer, the travelers set off for Middlebury.

Oh what joy, a drive-in restaurant with lights ablaze appeared! With great expectations the travelers drove in, full of anticipation of burgers, Philly steak subs and all the trimmings. Given the state of the travelers' hunger, the waitress appeared to have the attributes of Marilyn Monroe and Mother Theresa combined. And then the anti-climax: "We closed ten minutes ago".

But now the good news; said waitress directed the party to a bar and restaurant in Middlebury, which was reached in some ten minutes. Some members of the party, including the writer, having covered their attire with mud during the day, there was nervousness as to whether such a group would be admitted. Nicola was delegated to use her charms and gain entrance. As a college town, with hikers frequently in the area, the staff showed great sympathy, readily admitted the group and rapidly responded to the pleas for something to eat immediately (fresh bread and oil) and then made available pasta and other good things. Crocodile tears were shed when the next would-be entrant was denied admission as the restaurant was closing.

End of story, apart from an uneventful drive to return home shortly before midnight.

Appalachian Gap to Forest City Trail

25 August 2007, E2E Leg 15

By Allison Norton, leader

Allison Norton, Tom Copps, Steve Williams, Rich Brown, and Lindy Brown were present for this leg. Cindy Kirk could not join us but she'd already hiked this leg the week before. Not only did she hike it, she backpacked it out-and-back, spending the night near Camel's Hump.

Much of this leg was characterized by short, steep "puds" ("pointless ups and downs") through small notches and up and down rock faces, and through much of the hike I marveled at the thought of Cindy traveling the section alone, with a full backpack, in both directions!

From our particular experiences on this particular hike, several lessons can be learned. As a public service to the fine readers of Smoke & Blazes, the lessons will be pointed out in due course. First, we started out in several cars so that we'd be able to spot a car at the northern end, as usual. The first rendezvous point was the trailhead on Camel's Hump Road. The pair of us in my car had some difficulty locating the group in the other car, until we found them at the other trailhead on Camel's Hump Road. There are two. We found the others, consulted our maps as a group, and decided that the trailhead at the end of Camel's Hump Road would be the best choice, resulting in the shortest side-trail hike at the end of the day if we hiked down the Forest City Trail but took the Connector to the Burrows Trail to end up at the spotted vehicle.

We are thrilled to be hiking the whole Long Trail, but we do whatever we can to shorten those side-trail hikes. So, Lesson 1: Take the time to figure out exactly which trailhead you'll be meeting at before you set out, especially if you're the one driving. But, when you get there, perusing the maps once more and checking the distances is still a good idea.

We drove around to Appalachian Gap (VT 17) and set out north on the Long Trail as planned. As we climbed over Baby Stark and Molly Stark Mountains, we met Pooh Bear and her dog Happy Tails who were hiking the LT southbound. Sound familiar? If you recall from Steve's write-up of the Glastenbury overnight, we ran into Pooh Bear and Happy Tails at Story Spring Shelter, and realized that we'd met them before. Well, this was our original meeting with them, a month earlier.

After the Starks, we passed Birch Glen and Cowles Cove shelter. Cowles Cove has an interesting feature – an outhouse that isn't an outhouse at all. It's an "out" with no house around it! Next was Burnt Rock Mountain, which has a huge outcropping of rock with the blazes going right up the rock face. If you like Deer Leap, this is more like Deer Leap's grandpa. We proceeded through Ladder ravine, which consists of an aluminum ladder bolted to the rock, and Paris Skidway, which has nothing to do with Paris Hilton.

The "puds" continued, with much scrambling and sliding to get up and down each rockface, and our pace was slowed considerably each time. We passed few hikers on this trip, but we did pass one or two backpackers and they mentioned that they were concerned about finding water, as it had been an extremely dry August. We scratched our heads and thought that maybe the last significant water we'd seen was near Cowles Cove, quite a few miles behind us. Lesson 2: Be prepared!

Around the time we reached Mounts. Ira and Ethan Allen, we heard thunder in the distance. As it was late afternoon and we still had several miles to go, we were concerned. Rushing to lower ground seemed to be the best option at the time, but most of us were simply too tired to go very fast. The sky darkened and it showered as we descended, but the brunt of the storm passed far to the south of us. We reached Montclair Glen and the turnoff to the Forest City Trail without anyone falling off a cliff or getting struck by lightning. The sky had cleared by this point and it was quite nice again. This leads us to Lesson 3: Don't panic if a thunderstorm is looming!

As we set down the Forest City Trail, we heard someone clapping. Nope, not a welcoming committee, it was a couple of people and their dog headed toward us. The man said that they were clapping to scare off bears. Looking around at the gathering dusk and dense shrubbery, I decided it wasn't the most foolish thing I'd heard all day. We asked why they were hiking UP Camel's Hump so late. They sheepishly reported that they'd gone up Camel's Hump as a day hike from the eastern side, had descended the wrong trail by mistake, and didn't realize it until they'd reached the trailhead and the parking lot was totally different. We offered our condolences but could offer little assistance as our car would be overstuffed as it was, but they seemed in good spirits and were prepared with headlamps, snacks, and jackets. This leads us to Lesson 4, a repeat of Lessons 1 and 2: Look at the map and be prepared!

We made it down the Forest City Trail and to our car as it was getting dark. On the drive home, as we got closer to Rutland we noticed downed trees, dark houses, and power company trucks out in force. It appeared that the storm had been much worse in Rutland than it had been in the area we'd hiked. I turned on my phone and found several frantic messages from home, saying, "Where are you? The weather is horrible!" Lesson 5: If you're returning after dark and the weather has been bad, call home to reassure your loved ones!

Fox in Locks, Hudson Falls, NY

18 November 2007

By Allison Norton, leader

This trip started as an impromptu hunting season outing, and ended up as an adventure we'll be talking about for years. A small group of us met up at the Five Combines locks in the Hudson Falls/Fort Edward, NY area. We had planned on walking several miles of the trails and then adding on a road walk through the village to make a loop.

There are a total of five locks, each dropping around 10 feet. The walls of the channel are made of large bricks and it is roughly a 15 to 20 foot drop to the water's surface. When we arrived at the park, we went over to look down into the locks. Much to our surprise, a fox was looking up at us! He must have fallen into the water. With no way up or down the channel as he was hemmed in by a ten-foot lock on each end, he had made his way onto a little shelf in the wall.

He looked wet, tired, and scared, but otherwise in good health. It appeared that his little hiding space was due to a missing brick in the wall. Tom used his cell phone to call the police, stating that while it was not a medical emergency, assistance was definitely required to get the fox out and on his way. The individual on the other end of the phone stated that someone would be sent out. Our group chose to eat lunch and wait for the fox's rescue, rather than beginning our walk as planned.

Once we'd finished eating help still hadn't arrived. Tom and Larry decided to walk into the neighborhood and to try to borrow someone's phone book to make a more specific call for help, possibly to Fish and Wildlife or the SPCA. The rest of us started our hike.

Tom and Larry caught up to us after a while, stating that they'd had some trouble finding someone who'd let them use a phone book and a phone. If Tom and Larry came running up your front lawn going on about a trapped fox, would you let them in? They had contacted the DEC who had stated they'd try to send someone, but it might take awhile because most of their staff was dealing with deer hunters coming in to log their kills.

We completed our walk on the trails and then through the neighborhood, and on part of our road walk we happened upon a car accident that had happened moments before. What a day! When we got back to the lock area, a local man was at the scene, and was on his own phone trying for help. This gentleman seems to have been affiliated with the village somehow. He told us that in the past, a puppy and a fawn have been rescued from the same area.

Finally, about two hours after our initial call for help, an officer from the Hudson Falls Police Department arrived. About 20 minutes after that, two fire trucks arrived on the scene, along with an ambulance and a truck containing a Wildlife Rehabilitator. The arrival of this last vehicle resulted in a collective sigh of relief, as it was exactly what we wanted to see—it had a logo on the door indicating it was from the Wildlife Department, and the back was full of cages. Perfect!

The gate was unlocked and one of the fire trucks was backed down the road to the canal area. The firefighters opened a little door in the back of the truck and pulled out a long extension ladder. The Wildlife Rehabilitator was ready with his catchpole, a long pole with a loop of cable attached (just like you see on TV!). The ladder was lowered to the top of the lock just downstream from where the fox was sitting. The fox didn't like the ladder coming down at him for some reason. He jumped into the water and began swimming back and forth between the locks. When the ladder was pulled up again, the fox got back onto the shelf.

The ladder was lowered again, and when the fox jumped into the water again to swim upstream, one of the firemen went upstream of the fox and tapped the water with a pole. The fox swam back toward the ladder. The Wildlife Rehabilitator was ready on the ladder, and caught the fox around his middle with the catchpole. The fox was hoisted out of the water with his legs kicking, was quickly released, and had run halfway to the nearby woods before half the spectators even realized that he'd been rescued!

Cook Mountain, NY

8 December 2007

By Allison Norton, leader

The Cook Mountain Preserve in Ticonderoga, NY is part of the Lake George Land Conservancy. We had 10 participants for this hike, and we were very enthusiastic as this was the first snowy hike of the season for most of us. Several inches of snow covered the ground in the woods.

The trail starts as an old woods road, with "Nature Conservancy" and "No Hunting" signs along the way. We followed the Red Trail. After climbing a small hill, the trail makes a sharp turn off the road and heads straight up the mountain. Just beyond the turnoff we could see signs intended for travelers on the woods road coming from the other direction. The signs indicated that it was a protected area, and hunting was not allowed. There were deer tracks everywhere, and I chuckled at the thought of deer running just over the boundary and going "Nyah, nyah" to hunters in pursuit.

We climbed for just over a mile, getting decent views along the way, until we reached the summit of Cook Mountain. At the top was a "Summit" sign, but it was hanging loosely in a tree as it had been detached from its signpost. I walked around with the sign for a bit, thinking that a "portable summit" could be useful in motivating weary hikers!

After reaching the summit, we went on for a few tenths of a mile to a great overlook, looking south over Lake George. The view was just beautiful with partial sun and a bluish glow over the mountains. We tried to pick out familiar mountains to the south, such as Black Mountain and Buck Mountain, but we had a hard time reaching a consensus because they all look less familiar when you are looking from a different direction than usual!

On the way down, we slipped and slid down the trail, and once we reached the woods road we chose to loop back via the Yellow Trail for variety. This trail goes through a wetland past remnants of a beaver lodge. We also passed remnants of local festivities, and everyone pitched in to help pack out the cans and bottles that had been thoughtfully arranged in little piles around the area.

When we returned to the cars, several people crossed the road to check out a historical marker. The marker documented "Abercrombie's Landing." It states that in July 1758, 15,000 men landed in the area to attack Ticonderoga during the French and Indian War. They were defeated by Montcalm, luckily for us.

Lake George, NY, Wild Forest

19 January 2008

By Allison Norton, leader

This hike began at the Pike Brook Road trailhead, which is also one of the trailheads typically used for Black Mountain. We'd received plenty of snow in the previous week or two, but we arrived to a freshly plowed trailhead lot courtesy of the Dresden Highway Department.

I had originally considered a hike all the way to Black Mountain Point for this trip, but it would have been almost twelve miles round trip, and that is just too far for a snowshoe outing. Out of our group, about half chose to use snowshoes and half chose to use stabilicers or something similar. Everyone seemed happy with his or her choice.

We headed south on the much-used Pike Brook Road trail toward Lapland Pond. We passed several junctions with trails leading to the Black Mountain summit, but because a) it hadn't been listed in the hike description and not everyone wanted to go up there and b) it might not have been safe due to possibly icy conditions, we decided to head to the ponds.

We stopped at the Lapland Pond lean-to for a snack, and then took the Lapland Pond trail to Millman Pond. This trail was much less traveled and had no tracks in the snow. We played "find the marker" to figure out our way. I must say that the bright yellow disks nailed to the trees were easy to follow in the snow—no offense to certain other trails that use white paint. Even though we had to search to follow the trail, this section was pretty easy, with little climbing or descending and some nice wetland areas. We observed that this trail is probably very wet in warmer weather.

We reached the Millman Pond lean-to for lunch. The lean-to and privy are a sight to behold, maintained by an obviously dedicated caretaker. The lean-to was very clean and had lots of shelves, hooks, and cubbies for storage. The privy was even more impressive. It had poems and cartoons about outhouses tacked to the walls, a generous supply of toilet paper, and, most importantly, a bright red toilet seat! Lifting the lid, one finds a message scripted carefully in permanent marker: "Millman Pond Hot Seat."

After a long, sunny lunch break, we retraced our steps on the Lapland Pond and Pike Brook trails. Once again, we passed several turn-offs to the Black Mountain summit, but in addition to reasons a and b above, we now had c) we'd be descending in the dark. We stuck to the plan and arrived at the cars with plenty of time until dark. All in all, we'd done a little over 8 miles, and the hike was declared a success. I was one of the folks who chose to wear snowshoes, and I slept over eleven hours that night!

Pharaoh Lake Wilderness, NY

29 March 2008

By Allison Norton, leader

For this hike, we began at the Putnam Pond Campground in Chilson, NY (just west of Ticonderoga). On the day of our hike, the road leading from NY 74 to the campground was plowed only to the last house. Beyond that, we followed deep ruts through slushy, wet snow downhill into the campground.

I was concerned about difficulties getting out, but figured I'd deal with that at the end of the hike! Rather than drive to the trailhead, we chose to park at the entry booth of the campground and walk the extra two tenths of a mile because of the snowy road. Larry was attired in several shades of yellow and green, causing several to comment on his ensemble.

The hike started just beyond the boat launch on Putnam Pond, and took us along the Grizzle Ocean Trail. There were several feet of snow in the woods, and most of us wore snowshoes. As I'd warned in the hike description, we had several stream crossings. Some had actual bridges and some had snow bridges, but a few required leaps of faith. It was only about two miles to the Grizzle Ocean lean-to where we had our lunch.

After lunch, we walked out on the pond, roughly following the shoreline and making a nice loop. We returned on the trail back toward the campground. About halfway along, we encountered a side trail to the south shore of Putnam Pond. The views were absolutely beautiful, with clear blue sky and the pond (which is actually the size of a lake) covered in ice and snow.

A few brave souls ventured out onto the ice, and before we knew it, the entire group was on the ice. I had my reservations about this, as did several others, but groups often follow each other, and a "shortcut" (still about a mile) across the flat pond in the sun was just too tempting. So, most of us, including me, began to trek across the ice. Several group members held back and politely voiced their concerns about safety, and chose to head back through the woods.

It was a long trip across the middle of the pond, and as we walked I noticed that much of the ice along the shoreline was gone. As we got closer to the boat launch, I wondered what we'd do if the ice was thinner there or if it was gone altogether. We made it onto the pier without incident, and the hikers who'd chosen the woods route met up with us only a few minutes later.

Our drive out of the campground was also without incident, and we once again made it home in one piece. After the hike, I learned from the Longstreet Highroad Guide to the Adirondacks that the name Grizzle Ocean comes from a logger named Grizzle who "boasted so much about the fish he caught in this pond that his friends joked it must be an ocean."

First AT Thru Hiker Spotted

Swan Song reports the first AT thru hiker of the season passing Gov. Clement Shelter on 13 May. The hiker said he left Springer Mountain in January. Mad Hatter says he must like hiking in snow.

Deer Leap? – Plan B

3 May 2008

By Steve Williams, leader

This hike was a reschedule of that of 27 October, which was rained out.

On Monday, in preparation for the Saturday hike, Tom Copps and Steve Williams hiked the route to check for any missing signs, none were found; but they did have three hours of rain, some gusts of wind up to thirty-five miles an hour and a few slabs of residual hard packed snow come ice to contend with. The view from the overlook to Sherburne Pass was intermittent, and it was hardly the spot for a relaxed lunch.).

Now to Saturday, when the 6:00 AM weather forecast indicated "showers" for the morning. From that time on there was continuous rain until Steve arrived at the Rutland meeting point to find Sue Thomas and Tom Copps. Sue's take on the day was "Not for me", and Steve and Tom's reaction was "Been there, done that", so they decided to sit in Steve's car and await further arrivals, if any. Surprise, surprise, there was one; Allison Norton, who had a strong disinclination to return home.

After some discussion an acceptable alternative to Deer Leap was agreed upon and the three enthusiasts were on their way, at which time the rain stopped, though the temperature remained on the low side. During their three-hour hike the group visited two ponds, could see where Pico and Killington would be seen if they were not hidden in clouds, descended into a fifty foot gorge, which hardly challenged Quechee, but which was picturesque nevertheless, observed some vicious orange reptiles, passed some recently charred stumps and timbers, found a piece of aged transportation equipment and an antique liquor holder, lunched overlooking one of the ponds, and ascended a peak known by its elevation.

Steve offers a Toblerone bar to the first correct identification (by telephone or e-mail) of the location of the hike. The opening date for this challenging competition is when the judge, aka Steve, receives his copy of this edition of Smoke & Blazes.

Killington Section Annual Membership and Directors Meetings

By John Hale, Secretary

The Killington Section annual general membership meeting and a meeting of the board of directors were held on 5 April 2008 at the Good Shepherd Lutheran Church in Rutland. About 26 people attended including the following board members:

Barbara Griffith, VP	Wayne Krevetski
Barry Griffith, Pres.	Andrea McQuade
John Hale, Sec. & Treas.	Roma Pulling
Lynda Hutchins	Steve Williams

Our pot luck supper began about 5:30 PM and was enjoyed by all.

President Barry Griffith brought the business meeting to order with the observation that this was probably the 97th annual meeting of the Killington Section, the presentation of the agenda for the evening, and the announcement that two new member of the Board of Directors would be elected this evening.

The meeting minutes of the 2007 annual meeting, as printed in Smoke & Blazes were approved as printed.

Treasurer John Hale presented the Treasurer's Annual Reports for the year ending 31 December 2007.

*Treasurer's Note: The 12/31/06 Financial Statements as originally presented, showed Total Assets of $20,499.60. This figure was reduced by $707.78 to reflect a more accurate balance as of that date: $19,791.82. A full reconciliation of this revised statement is available on request of the Treasurer.

John pointed out that the Section is basically running at break-even with dues and interest covering expenses. This year's extraordinary donation from the estate of a former member caused the increase in assets.

The Treasurer's annual reports were accepted as presented.

Trails and Shelters Chairperson Herb Ogden spoke about Section accomplishments in 2007 and challenges for 2008.

- Minerva Hinchey is finished except for some more staining to be done.
- Governor Clement Shelter may yet be saved. The town has "thrown up" the road but has yet to pass the ordinance necessary to install the gate.
- Cooper Lodge is still scheduled for demolition but will not be torn down until a new tent platform is built to replace it. New signage is especially needed at this location and a volunteer with a router and skills is sought.
- A sign board is needed at the Bucklin trailhead because the existing one cannot be read from the road.
- Trail blazes are in need of refreshment and volunteers are sought.
- Thanks were offered to Dave Coppock and Larry Walter for extraordinary volunteer service.
- One project seeking a volunteer is that of reading, condensing and compiling the data in the trail registers: traffic volume, comments, etc.
- We have tools to loan to those who want to work outside the regular work parties.

Main Club Director of Field Programs Dave Hardy spoke about projects elsewhere in Vermont.

- The State of Vermont is proposing to allow mountain biking and horseback riding on some of the single path trails in specific sections of the state parks. The Main Club plans to object to this use. (The Long Trail is protected from these uses because it falls under national jurisdiction.)
- The Thundering Falls Bridge is scheduled to be dedicated on Saturday, 13 September this year.
- A developer has purchased the defunct ski resort, Snow Valley near Bromley. The plan is to build expensive homes and re-establish the ski resort for homeowners only. While it seems unlikely that the snowmobile trail (VAST 7) currently running through the property would be re-routed to share the Long Trail, still the Main Club will intercede to assure that the VAST 7 is not re-routed at all closer to the LT.
- Big Jay Mountain adjoins the Jay Peak ski area. Both mountains are on State property but the Green Mountain Club holds a conservation easement on Big Jay and the bowl in between the two mountains. The bowl has been traditionally and illegally used by back country skiers. Last year two men allegedly clear cut 800 trees in the bowl to facilitate their winter sport. The men have been identified and charged with the crime; they face up to five years in prison. The Main Club has closed the damaged area to allow re-generation and the back country skiing community is up in arms.
- The Main Club has agreed to further exploration of a connection with the North Country National Scenic Trail which now runs from North Dakota to Crown Point in New York. Any connection would likely run through Addison County to connect to the Long Trail in the Middlebury Gap area. These are preliminary negotiations.

GMC Board Representative Lynda Hutchens presented her report of the 22 March 2008 Main Club board meeting.

- Financially, the Main Club has a current account deficit caused primarily by the Capital Campaign pulling donations away from the three appeals processed during a year. Next year's budget will be prepared without increase.
- The Vermont State allocations included $25,000 for the Club.
- The Second Century Campaign is within $50,000 of our goal to raise $5.25 million, has been a big success, and will be completed shortly.
- Construction for the new headquarters building will begin shortly as all necessary permits have been obtained and the funds are at hand.

Lynda's full report is available from the Secretary.

Smoke & Blazes editor Bob Perkins was thanked for his tireless work. S&B appears to be 61 years old this season.

Sue Thomas announced a quilting bee project the product of which will be raffled off to the benefit of the GMC. Everyone is welcome to participate.

Steve Williams reported that the Long Trail in Bits and Pieces group is still hiking having completed 19 of 29 defined sections. There are four section members hiking and Tom Copps has completed all of the 19 sections.

President Barry Griffith set out some upcoming events:

- GMC Annual Meeting, Waterbury Center, 31 May 2008
- Second Annual Long Trail Festival, Rutland, 15-17 August 2008
- ATC Biennial Conference, Castleton, 17-20 July 2009
- Green Mountain Club Centennial Celebration, 2010
- Killington Section Centennial Celebration, 2011

Board member Wayne Krevetski reported on plans for this year's Long Trail Festival, the second annual, to be held on 15-17 August this year. "The Long Trail is not just a brewery."

The general membership nominated and elected Allison Norton, Barry Griffith, and Sue Thomas to the Killington Section board of Directors. The new board met and elected the following officers for the coming year:

- President, Barry Griffith
- Vice President, Wayne Krevetski
- Secretary and Treasurer, John Hale
- GMC Board Representative, Lynda Hutchins
- Alternate GMC Board Representative, Steve Williams

The next board meeting was scheduled for Tuesday 3 June at 6:00 PM at the Back Home Again Café.

The meeting was adjourned at about 8:30 PM

Feeling Lucky? – Win a Quilt!

By Sue Thomas

The Killington Section is selling raffle tickets for this beautiful queen-size quilt. The top squares in the "bear paw" pattern were made by Karen Bowles, Joan Davidson, Ruth Gibbud, Barb Griffith, Carol Hare, Cindy Oas-Kirk, Cindy Taylor-Miller, and Sue Thomas. The whole thing was put together by Barb, Cindy, and Sue in a marathon week of sewing (and ripping out and re-sewing!). It was a fun co-operative project, and we're all proud of what we accomplished together.

Proceeds will go to the Green Mountain Club, earmarked for trails and shelters. Tickets are $2.00 each or three for $5.00 and will be available on Killington Section hikes throughout the summer and at the Long Trail Festival in August. The drawing will be held on 27 September at the Green Mountain Club Volunteer Appreciation Picnic in Londonderry.

If you're interested in buying (or selling) tickets, call Sue Thomas, 773-2185.

[Smoke & Blazes regrets that our monochrome printing cannot do justice to the beautiful and bright quilt of many colors. Ed.]

Killington Section Low Elevation Trail Ready for Summer Hikers

By Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters Chair

Thanks to work done by Sector Checkers Bob Shanahan, Cindy Taylor-Miller, Barb and Barry Griffith, Connie Youngstrom, and Steve Williams, nine of us were pretty much able to do the work necessary to put the Long Trail from Wallingford Gulf to Gov. Clement Shelter in good to excellent shape.

Four of us cleaned out the long ditches on the Long Trail north of Patch Hollow, made a start at repairing a bridge, and clipped back what was growing into the trail. Three more worked between Route 103 and the Lottery Road. Two of us pruned from the Gov. Clement Road to Gov. Clement Shelter and spent most of our time building up a walkway through a wet place on the side hill north of the former Haley farm.

Some work is left. We did not cure the perennial nuisance of wet trail in the cow pastures on both sides of the Lottery Road. That would take either a lot of volunteers with pick axes and shovels, or a small backhoe, to dig a ditch just uphill from the trail. This may be the only remaining place on the LT where the presence of cows complicates the drainage.

Minerva Hinchey Shelter needs stain on the extended rafters, needs its privy moved to a new hole by fall, and could stand a little other work.

Another remaining task is to finish repainting the blazes from Bear Mountain to Minerva Hinchey Shelter and from Clarendon Lookout to the Lower Cold River Road. I've found blazing to be a pleasant one mile per hour task, not bad even for a hot day. The chief requirements are that you need to paint a neat, square cornered two-inch by six-inch blaze, exercise good sense about what to blaze (for example, don't repaint a blaze on a dead tree that may soon fall), and either be at least five and a half feet tall or be able to levitate to reach the higher blazes.

Killington Section Member Summits Kilimanjaro

By Cindy Oas-Kirk

I had put my name on a waiting list and made a deposit two years ago. Passport – check, inoculations – check, forms in at Pack Paddle Ski – check, airline reservation confirmed – check. The day of my vacation was drawing near. Finally gear – the most thought-requiring item in spite of a basic list that had been sent. I think I'm ready!

On 8 February I headed to Rochester, NY, caught a plane the next day, and the day after that arrived in Moshi, Tanzania, Africa via Detroit, Amsterdam, and Kilimanjaro. There were eleven of us, three from Vermont and eight from New York, plus Rick and Yusaf, our guide/leaders. Our base was the Springland Hotel in Moshi.

Early next morning we were up and headed out on a three-day safari to Lake Manyara and the Ngorongoro Crater where we saw all the Big Five except the jaguar. On our fourth day we began our climb of Mt. Kilimanjaro via the Machame Route, which is a five-day ascent allowing for acclimatization. The route was via Machame Hut, Shira Hut, Barranco Valley, Karangua Barafu Hut, to Uhuru Peak at 19,340 feet.

We started the summit climb at 11:30 PM, arriving at Uhuru Peak at 6:30 AM to watch the daylight arrive. Most of the group made the hike with a couple people getting altitude sickness and unable to make the summit. On summit night (and throughout our trek) we were well tended with one porter to about every two hikers in case someone needed help. The porters would burst into song now and again along the trail. Heading up the mountain our headlights were on, and soft, beautiful, melodic music began, here and then there, from the porters along our rank and file. To me the overall effect was that of a pilgrimage. Ahead and behind us were other similar groupings of light.

We descended via the Mwiki Trail, which is more direct and took two days.

Mount Kilimanjaro

In our travels we carried a day pack with water, snacks, and gear for any weather condition. The porters pampered us by carrying everything else up the mountain as well as by cooking our meals. The effects of altitude were the most unpredictable factors. The weather was changeable with the clouds, and the temperatures dropped as the elevation increased. Once we were back at the hotel, Thank Yous and gifts were given to the porters. We were a changed group. Our strides were proud. We had climbed Kilimanjaro!

P.S. A surprising coincidence occurred on the trip. One of the couples and their 16 year old daughter mentioned being on the Long Trail last summer. In a river in the Shrewsbury area they came upon a stash of soda that was cold and heaven-sent. I quickly mentioned that I knew of the stash and the gentleman who kept it supplied for hikers. A big Thank you to Jerry Parker from Debbie, Joe, and Liz!

How about that! I travel halfway around the world to hear about the trail magic from Jerry Parker. (I actually met a couple of men on the Long Trail on Camel's Hump last summer who also spoke highly of finding Jerry's stash.) It's a small world. Your deeds do not go unnoticed.

Killington Section Treasure Hunt

In our May issue Herb Ogden posed a Killington Section virtual treasurer hunt. Here it is with the clues and solution revealed.

- Start at the site of the southernmost shelter, camp, or lodge that ever existed in the Killington Section. Buffum Lodge
- Go north on what was the LT until the 1997 relocation, to the top of the first hill. Button Hill
- Go west until you hit the present LT.
- Note the first letter in the first word of the name of the place where you now are. "P" Patch Hollow
- Go to the former camp complex developed by a man whose last name began with the same letter as the first word in the name of the place where you just hit the present LT. It is on a blue blazed trail maintained by the Killington Section. Perkins (Craigue) Tall Timber Camp
- Go as far north as you can on this blue blazed trail.
- Note the first letter in the second word of the name of the place where you now are. "R" Blue Ridge Mountain
- Go to the shelter whose name used to begin with the next letter in the alphabet. "S" Sunnyside Camp
- Hike 13.8 miles on the LT while remaining in the Killington Section.

Where are you now? Cooper Lodge

Sue Thomas was first to locate the virtual treasurer and, as promised, Herb presented her with a 1960s Long Trail Guide and has donated $100 to the Kirk Fund in Sue's name.

County Road to Vt. Route 9

20 May 2007, E2E Leg 10

By Cindy Oas-Kirk

I was asked to recapture this hike, whose write-up had been overlooked. Let me see – the hikers were Rich and Lindy Brown, Tom Copps, Allison Norton, Cindy Oas-Kirk and Tom Shanahan. I recall meeting on Route 9 east of Bennington. We left a car there and drove to the trailhead on County Road. This route affords a view of the power generating windmills at Searsburg to the south although very few windmills were in motion that morning.

This was the hike on which I learned what a puncheon was. There seemed to be miles of puncheons, both above and below the water line. A number of us thought we would see how waterproof our boots were. Others – smarter than us – took their boots off and went barefoot. Several aerial acts demonstrated how slippery puncheons can be.

There was an outstanding phenomenon at a point where the trail bordered a pond. As we came around a bend we encountered a five-to-six-foot wall of branches, a beaver dam, which sealed off a river to create the pond whose surface was eye-level above us. This was a little disconcerting, but there were no leaks. What an engineering marvel!

After seven miles of up and down Harmon Hill offers an expansive view of Bennington. The thought of Lindy's cookies and lemonade at the car was a perfect carrot for us over the 1.8-mile steep, descending, rocky staircase to Route 9.

Great hike!

Merck Forest Overnight, Rupert

19/20 April 2008

By Larry Walter, leader

We had a near-record turnout for the day hike portion of this trip with 18 heads counted at the trail head. After a brief visit with the Merck kitty cat we headed up the hill towards the barn and sugar house. The first real grade is a bit steep in places so we re-grouped at the first trail intersection and watered up. Tom, Peter, and crew took out some small windfalls along the way with the arborist saw.

A quick sidestep onto the Lourie Trail put us at Ned's Cabin where we had lunch and conducted a brief inspection. There are several places in need of attention, including some rotting deck boards on the front porch, a sticking rear door and deteriorating insulation material on the floor. We decided the dead mouse hanging from the rafters was an acceptable ornament, especially since we couldn't reach it. All in all though, the cabin is still a very nice place to stay. The whole group had lunch at and around the picnic table. The black flies were out and biting, but we managed to bat them away.

Part B of the hike involved a steep pitch up the Beebe Trail (next time we'll take the Buechner-Lookout route) where the group got stretched out a bit. Some of us ran out of water (it was HOT!) but some sharing of bottles helped. Included in this section was a detailed recitation of a past Merck hike near-catastrophe when a 12-inch beech snag nearly clobbered Steve, Connie, her doggie (Phoebe?) and Tom. Said log is still laying there along some stone steps.

After we hit the saddle, another ten minutes up the ridge landed us at Mt. Antone for some nice, although somewhat hazy views. Some patches of snow afforded some relief from the heat. On the way back down Antone Road, the group split up at the Wade Lot Road intersection where six of us returned to Ned's for the overnight stay. There were several windfalls along this section as well, some too big for our little saw to handle.

Upon arrival at the cabin, Tom and I hiked up to the small culvert to the southwest of Ned's to filter some water for dinner. I discovered my little MSR was missing a small check ball, but Tom came to the rescue with his filter and we soon had enough to get us through two meals. I stuffed a quart of milk up the culvert for cold storage purposes. Dinner was simple, but satisfying. We rigged up a nylon suspended, twin candle-lantern over the top of the table. Tom and I attempted to read amid flying debris while Sue, Viv, Allison and Peter waged an increasingly aggressive card game. I can't remember the name – Pummel? Annihilate? Crush? Something like that.

Next morning we were up at 0600 to pick up several spindled and/or burnt playing cards, cheap cigar butts and a couple pink-handled throwing knives (!) embedded in the rafters above the table. A brief hike found the milk still safely hidden away in the culvert. We had breakfast and strolled back down Antone Road with a detour down Clark's Clearing Trail to Birch Pond. Some of us paused to visit the barn animals and the crosscut saw collection before we rendezvoused at the visitor center. The house cat was feeling better, even getting lured into a brief game of swat the paper. Seems they said she was 18 years old.

Vermont Route 15 to Coddington Hollow Road & on to Davis Neighborhood Trail Jct.

25/26 May 2008, E2E Legs 19 & 20
By Cindy Oas-Kirk

Participants: Tom Copps, Cindy Oas-Kirk, and Steve Williams.

This two-day excursion was our first of the 2008 End-to-End in Bits and Pieces season. We will complete the Long Trail this year if all goes as scheduled.

We switched our hikes for this weekend because reports from headquarters state there is snow on Bolton Mountain. We will begin at a lower elevation. The travel time and mileage are adding up as we head north and I feel like a tourist on the holiday weekend as we traveled the beautiful Vermont countryside. We left Rutland at 8:45 AM, stopped at GMC Headquarters and dropped off some gear, spotted cars, and set out from the Route 15 West Settlement Road trailhead at noon.

We went a short distance and gee – it was lunch time. We found a large rock beside the impressive, new, Lamoille River suspension bridge and had lunch and then continued our Long Trail journey on this beautiful day. Prospect Rock Lookout overlooking the Lamoille River valley was definitely the highlight of this section. We emerged at Coddington Hollow Road at 5:00 PM.

Back at GMC Headquarters we settled into one of the enclosed shelters and then headed for the Back 40 building with kitchen and showers. Sleep came easily after Steve's lasagna and Cindy's dessert. The next morning started off correctly with Tom's bagels and cream cheese. (Note the accent on food.) We packed, spotted cars, and returned to the Long Trail at Coddington Hollow Road at 8:00 AM.

Mt. Laraway and the Laraway Lookout offered fabulous views of Mt. Mansfield and of the area of our previous day's ramblings. Atop the mountains, alas, we came into snow – just a small stretch beneath the puncheons.

The prediction of rain came true when we were a mile from Corliss Camp. We lunched at the shelter and proceeded to Davis Neighborhood Road, exiting at 12:45 PM.

Two days of moderate hikes was a gentle introduction to our third year on the Long Trail. We are in good hands with Tom tracking our routes and mileage with his GPS and Steve, with his new altimeter, offering an encouraging expletive every 1,000 feet of elevation gain!

Bolton Notch Road to Lake Mansfield Trail Junction

8 June 2008, E2E Leg 21

By Lindy Brown

Cindy Oas-Kirk, Allison Norton, Tom Copps, Steve Williams, Dorothy Sullivan, and Rich and Lindy Brown started this hike at 7:45 AM with the temperatures in the 90s! We had our first lunch at Harrington's View, which was beautiful with a great view. This was my favorite view as the others along the way were grown in or hazy.

Along the way we visited Buchanan and Puffer Shelters and Taylor Lodge. Taylor Lodge was named for James P. Taylor, founder of the GMC. It was really picturesque sitting on the porch. We climbed three mountains: Bolton, Mayo, and Clark.

The black flies were relentless. They seemed to thrive on bug spray! We were covered in bites by the end of the hike. When a porcupine crossed our trail we gave him the right of way. We hiked near beaver ponds, climbed down a ladder, and followed the trail of a constipated moose!

Allison won the time out contest so we each had to give her a quarter. She surprised us with brownies at the end of the day.

Chipman Lake, Tinmouth

8 June 2008

By Roma Pulling, leader

In three cars our seven hikers made their way onto Tinmouth Pond Road and parked our vehicles, with permission from the owner, at what is known as The Pavilion. Returning westward on foot, we made our way north on West Shore Road, crossing the pond outlet on a makeshift footbridge and onto West Birch Road. We followed this eastward along the north shore until we came to East Shore Road and took that south to Tinmouth Pond Road and the start of our hike.

I wanted to tie this part of our trip in with a visit to the grave of Nathaniel Chipman so drove to the cemetery next. It being lunchtime by then, we stopped in the shade of a line of shrubbery and ate before continuing with our exploration. Nathaniel was a very important individual in the Tinmouth community, which is why some people call the lake by his name; others call it Tinmouth Pond. By this time our group had dwindled to three. One person was more or less captive as she was riding in our car! Knowing Chipman's status in the town, we looked for the tallest monument on the highest point in the cemetery and found what we were looking for. Nathaniel arrived in Tinmouth from Salisbury, CN, having been born there 15 November 1752. He graduated from Yale, served in the Revolutionary War, was Chief Justice of Vermont, U. S. District Judge, U. S. Senator, and was one of the commissioners who negotiated the admission of Vermont into the Union in 1791.

Later Rutland replaced Tinmouth as the county seat, and Nathaniel along with other VIPs moved here to live.

Lake Mansfield Trail Junction to Smugglers Notch

28 June 2008, E2E Leg 22

By Steve Williams, leader

This was the fifth leg north of I-89, with the group comprising Tom Copps, Allison Norton, Cindy Oas-Kirk and Steve Williams. The group again camped at Golden Brook Campground at the south end of Stowe; a good site by a brook.

There was an early departure to spot a car in Smugglers' Notch and drive the 45 minutes back to Lake Mansfield for a 7.00 AM. start; an easy 1.5-mile stretch up the Lake Mansfield Trail to Taylor Lodge and shortly thereafter to join the LT at an elevation of 1850 feet. Subsequently there is a 3.5-mile climb to 3080 feet at the "Eye of The Needle" (where the trail passes through a cleft between two boulders), but with a lot of ups and downs on the way. (The "ups and downs" add about a 1000 feet of elevation gain in excess of a straightforward ascent to the Mount Mansfield peak).

The group lunched at Butler Lodge, where, it was speculated, there would be a good view to the west if not surrounded by mist. Of three different routes to the so-called "Forehead", the group chose what seemed to be the original, and most difficult. The most fascinating spot was where the only way forward is to lie on your stomach on a sloping rock with 20 ft drop behind you, hold on with both hands as you inch across to the far side, where a firm foothold is available and where you can return to the vertical position. Once above this challenge it was a fine scramble over ledges to the so called "Forehead" at 3940 feet, followed by a "walk in the park" to the top of the Mansfield Toll Road, and then on the actual summit, the "Chin", 1.4 miles away.

And now we come to the Trail Magic in the form of Phil Henry, Allison's then fiancée, now husband, with a backpack of goodies; very encouraging, highly appreciated, and a good excuse to sit for half an hour. There were a few good views to the west, before the mist settled in once and for all as the group headed for the Chin. This was not the place to hang around with the weather giving every appearance of deteriorating rapidly, with rain commencing shortly, and then continuing until the end of the hike.

The descent was steep for the first half-mile; no massive exposure, but considerable care was called for to avoid moving in the wrong direction too fast. The group stopped at Taft Lodge; where some drowned looking, but remarkably equable, scouts had just arrived for the night.

Then came the long, long steep slog down to Smugglers Notch. There was a debate about when a vehicle from Smugglers Notch could first be heard; some claimed an hour before reaching it (aural mirage?), some, including the writer, not until they were within twenty-five yards of the road.

The sweepstake on the end time, 5.50 PM. was again won by Allison. For the record, our average speed was, again, about a mile an hour.

Mount Ascutney, Windsor

19 July 2008

By Herb Ogden, leader

Trail work has taken so much of my scarce spare time since I became Trails & Shelters Chair that I have been on few hikes, so perhaps the low attendance was because not many people know me any more. Or perhaps some were daunted by the notice that this was a "difficult" hike. Or maybe some actually believed the forecast for a hot day with a chance of thundershowers. For whatever reason, nobody showed up at the meeting point in Rutland. One person from South Burlington had, however, arranged to meet me at the bottom of the Brownsville Trail, so I had to go. We had fun anyway. We decided to save time by not spotting cars and to hike up and down the Weathersfield Trail. I think this is the most scenic of the four trails up Ascutney, though the Windsor Trail has a special place in my heart because it was the first one my late father and I reopened in 1966 after the 1938 hurricane had closed it. Dad and I then founded the Ascutney Trails Association, which maintains all four trails and publishes an excellent guidebook.

When we arrived, the Weathersfield Trail parking lot was nearly full. People on the trail ranged from the very young to the pretty old. Despite this wet summer, the small cascade and the flume were nearly dry, and the 70-foot Crystal Cascade was pretty feeble. Water flow on this granite monadnock is strange. Apparently it takes so long for water to percolate through the rock that the water table lags a year or two behind the rainfall. Luckily, we had brought plenty of water and kept sipping as we chugged up the trail and enjoyed the sights. My guest especially liked the level stretch south of the Crystal Cascade with views to the south, and the east views from Gus's Lookout. By the time we reached the top, thunder and dark clouds lay to the north, whence the wind was blowing, so we did not tarry long on the observation tower. We did, however, succeed in getting most of the way down before it rained, and we arrived back at our cars with our clothes only slightly dampened and our enthusiasm not dampened at all.

Davis Neighborhood Trail to Vermont Route 118

2 August 2008, E2E Leg 24

By Allison Henry

The participants for this hike were Allison Henry, Tom Copps,

Steve Williams, Cindy Oas-Kirk, and Dorothy Sullivan. A few of us camped at the Lakeview Campground in Eden the night before. The proprietor warned us of the difficulty of the trail ahead, and we wondered whether to feel worried or amused.

After a very uneventful night we got an early start on the Davis Neighborhood trail. The walking was easy and we got to Corliss Camp very quickly. As usual, I must comment on the shelters. Corliss Camp is a very cozy looking enclosed cabin with bunks, a porch, and an open loft above the main cabin.

On the official Long Trail map, the next section of our hike is marked off as a 6.7-mile hike with no viewpoints, major peaks, side trails, or any other landmarks indicated on the map other than a few smallish peaks noted by black triangles. I was very concerned about this, thinking we'd be walking through a monotonous green tunnel for hours, choosing our breaks arbitrarily and wondering when, if ever, we'd reach ANYTHING of note. However, there were in fact several viewpoints with decent lookouts. Even better, the Laraway Section of the GMC did not disappoint—each smallish peak and even each stream was marked with a sign indicating exactly where we were.

The "6.7 miles of nothing" flew by with a few snack breaks and we were at Spruce Ledge Camp in time for a lovely lunch. Spruce Ledge is another well-maintained enclosed cabin with bunks and a porch, and even a sliding front door. At Spruce Ledge Camp there is a lookout (LOOKOUT!) toward Belvidere Mountain, which will be on our next leg. On the side of Belvidere there is a grayish thing sticking out. The consensus was that it is remnants of some sort of asbestos mine, if I got that right. To me, it looked like a UFO. Believe what you want!

Our next adventure was Devil's Gulch. Devil's Gulch is a notch that one must navigate by going over, between, and around boulders of various sizes, mostly big. The Long Trail Guide describes Devil's Gulch as a "challenging route." The shelter logs made it sound even worse, with the southbound authors insinuating that they'd thought they'd never get out alive. One comment in a shelter log called it "Tolkien-esque," and another called it a "mini-Mahoosic Notch."

With a little bit of trepidation we headed north and before we knew it, rocks were beginning to appear around us. Just when we were asking, "Are we in the Gulch yet?" there was another fine Laraway section sign stating that we were there! After all that buildup, Devil's Gulch was great and not at all difficult compared to say, The Forehead. There was one boulder shelf that I sat down on and said, "Hmm, now what," wondering whether I wanted to jump, fall, or slide onto a very pointy rock down in a crevasse, but Cindy looked ahead and saw there was terra firma just to my left for a landing point.

After we got through the Gulch, wiping our brows and saying, "Whew, that was nothin'!" we found ourselves headed down toward distant Ritterbush pond. We were so far ahead of our usual schedule that I thought "oh boy, time for a swim!" Unfortunately, the trail went up again and not toward the pond, so there was no swimming for Landshark today! We went up some more (of course) to Ritterbush lookout, and then had a nice, rolling walk down toward the car on Route 118.

We were out of there by three o'clock or so, setting a new land-speed record. I believe Steve won the "time out" contest. Two more excellent things happened after that. First, it started raining about ten minutes after we got in the car (translation: a victory, we beat the rain!). Second, we FINALLY made it to Ben and Jerry's in Waterbury before they closed!

Killington Section Directors Meeting

By John Hale, Secretary

A regular meeting of the Killington Section Board of Directors was held on 10 June 2008 at the Back Home Again Café in Rutland. Attending Board Members:

- Barry Griffith, President
- Wayne Krevetski, Vice President
- Sue Thomas
- Cynthia Taylor-Miller

- Roma Pulling
- Allison Norton
- Lynda Hutchins
- John Hale, Secretary & Treasurer.
- Absent:
- Andrea McQuade
- Guests:
- Bob and Thelma Perkins

President Barry G. called the meeting to order at about 6:00 PM

The minutes for the Annual Meeting of 31 March 2008 and the Board Meeting of 5 April 2008 were approved as presented.

The Treasurer's Report ($23,300.73 assets, no liabilities, net income $1,114.75) for the period 1 January 2008 to 6 June 2008 was approved as presented. Treasurer John H. committed to having Section membership numbers at the next Board meeting.

Lynda H. reported on the Main Club's Board meeting of 31 May 2008. (A full report is available on request of the Secretary.)

The Governor Clement Road gate is now installed. The State of Vermont provided the gate itself; signage is expected to be erected by the Town of Shrewsbury; and the vehicle turn-around area is to be expanded. No supporting funds will be requested of us.

Keys to the gate will be provided: the snowmobile club president will have one, and the Killington Section President will have one.

President Barry G. recommended that log-in stations be installed both at Governor Clement and Clarendon shelters. These devices provide valuable information about traffic volume and hiker feedback. Barry G. offered to take charge of implementation after consultation with Killington Section Trails and Shelters Chairperson, Herb Ogden and Main Club contact, Dave Hardy. Barry G. also recommended that signs be installed one mile before and after each shelter, which plan he will also coordinate.

Barry G. spoke about signs the Killington Section will post on the Trail welcoming hikers to the section of the Long Trail under our protection. After a discussion, it was decided not to include Section Board members' names and contact information on the signs, but rather one single contact name, that of President Barry G., should be provided.

Hikers may use the contact to request emergency assistance or to request transportation. The signs are to be printed on especially durable and waterproof paper by the Main Club.

Sue T. led a discussion about advertisements posted along the Long Trail. The first reaction was that all advertisements should be taken down when discovered. A discussion revealed that some advertisements (public bus schedules for example) might be appropriate and the line became less clear. Lynda H. offered to query the Main Club to see if there may be an official policy on this issue.

Sue T. reported that this year's Trails Day was successful. There were two groups on the Killington section clipping, clearing, and digging. One group transported puncheon lumber for later placement. Three blow-downs were cleared and there was a picnic afterwards.

Herb Ogden's request for funding of $405.20 for puncheon lumber was approved; the funds will be expended from the Kirk Fund balances. The Board also authorized Herb to spend up to $500 for new roof shingles for the Governor Clement Shelter.

Cindy T-M. presented a bill for $32.84 for stain for the Minerva Hinchey Shelter and asked whether the Killington Section or the Main Club should make the reimbursement. She reasoned that since the Main Club has received a $15,000 endowment for the maintenance of the MH Shelter, they should pay. It was agreed that Cindy will contact Dave Hardy at the Main Club to determine any policy or procedure in regards this type of expenditure.

The EMS kayak raffle might have generated more for the Section

if we had had slightly more notice, but everyone agreed it to have been a generous gift from EMS that earned the Section $274.

Sue T. and other kind souls have sewn a quilt on the theme of four bears and will raffle the quilt for the benefit of the Main Club as a contribution of the Killington Section. Tickets are priced at $2 each or three tickets for $5 and the winning ticket will be drawn on 27 September this year at the Volunteer Appreciation Picnic in Londonderry.

Sue T. mentioned that, often enough, she has problems getting hike leaders to commit to specific dates in a timely manner. This delays her input to the Smoke and Blazes newsletter and delays the newsletter's publication. A general discussion of this issue ensued. Two things became clear: 1) Sue does a great job that cannot be improved upon; and 2) a special notice to hike leaders should be placed in the next newsletter, asking for compliance with deadlines and calling a Hike Leaders Meeting where the issue can be explored.

The Long Trail in Bits and Pieces is still going strong. The participants are now camping overnight through the more distant and longer sections.

The Second Annual Long Trail Festival will be held this year on 15 to 17 August at the Fair Grounds in Rutland. A wonderful event is expected again this year.

After setting the next Board meeting for Tuesday, 7 October at 6:00 PM at a Rutland restaurant to be announced; the meeting was adjourned at about 8:20 PM.

The Top Ten Things I've Learned On Our Bits and Pieces Hikes

By Allison Henry

10. At the first lunch break, the food is delicious. At the second break, you are grateful to have some food left. By the third break, you figure you should be grateful that at least you have half an old granola bar and some pulverized chips.

9. You can amuse yourself for long periods of time by talking about your favorite recipes, favorite restaurants, and what type of take-out you're going to order when you get home.

8. There are many possible ways to get past a blowdown. Bushwhacking around it, walking carefully over it, climbing over it, and taking a flying leap and yelling, "Geronimo!" are all acceptable alternatives.

7. There are many possible ways to get down a big slab of bedrock. Bushwhacking around it, walking carefully down it, climbing down it, and taking a flying leap and yelling, "Geronimo!" are all acceptable alternatives.

6. No matter what time you get going in the morning, you always start walking around 7:20 AM and always finish just before dark, with only a few exceptions.

5. We are never truly sure exactly where we are on the trail, even after consulting ourselves, different maps, the Long Trail Guide, the GPS, and hikers coming from the other way.

4. You fall down so often, get swarmed by so many clouds of bugs, and push through so much thick brush that you never recall each individual incident, but you spend the next day wondering where that odd-shaped bruise, humongous bug bite, and suspicious rash came from.

3. No matter how religiously you wash and air out your gear, you will find that your house, your car, your pack, and your self will smell like a foot for days afterward.

2. Long day-hikes on a Saturday take the whole weekend—you spend Friday packing and driving, Saturday hiking and driving, and Sunday resting, inspecting wounds (refer to number 4), and dealing with all your gear (refer to number 3).

1. On hike day, by eleven in the morning you are counting down the miles and hours until the hike will be over, but 24 hours later, when you are sitting around at home, you will be counting down the days or weeks until the next hike!

Outing Reports

Hadley Mountain, Hadley, NY

9 August 2008

By Allison Henry, leader

For most of the week before the hike, the forecast called for rain (big surprise!) but by Thursday night, weatherchannel.com indicated that the town of Hadley would have sunny weather on Saturday with only a 20 percent chance of rain! The weather held and we had a gorgeous clear day.

With rendezvous points at the park in Rutland and at the welcome center in Fair Haven, a group of seven set out for the long drive to Hadley. Even though it is far, it is a neat area for a road trip if you like tourist traps. We passed a lot of mini golf courses, ice cream stands, and rafting outfitters along the way. The lot was full when we got there; it's a popular place.

Hadley Mountain is "only" about 2675 feet high but the hike involves a 1500 foot elevation gain in less than two miles. Most of the trail is worn down to bare bedrock. According to the Longstreet Highroad Guide to the Adirondacks, the area had several forest fires, accounting for not only the thin soil but also lots of paper birch. I think of this trail's difficulty as being the opposite of most other mountain trails. Rather than winding up the mountain gradually and ending in a steep scramble to the summit, the trail goes straight up the side of the mountain for the first two thirds or so, then levels off and winds around to the summit.

We made it to the top without too much difficulty and joined the hordes of other tourists already there. Hadley Mountain has an open, rocky summit with 360-degree views. We had a leisurely lunch in the sun and debated with the caretaker and each other about the geological features in the distance. Here's the rundown: we could see Great Sacandaga Lake, various Adirondack peaks (but probably not Marcy), the Catskills (faintly), and various Green Mountain peaks, even including, you guessed it, our own Killington.

By the way, Hadley Mountain has a fire tower, too. Most of our group ascended the tower, although I personally made it only to the highest landing and couldn't bring myself to go up the rickety ladder into the box.

On the way back down to the trailhead, Sue found a hat that Steve's friend Barbara had lost on the way up. Not quite understanding who had lost the hat, Sue triumphantly placed it on the head of Barb Griffith, resulting in lots of laughter from the rest of us as we said, "Wrong Barb!"

At the trailhead there is a sign noting the difficulty of the hike, and it says that "expert" hikers can make the trip up in an hour, "moderate" hikers should take an hour and a half, and "novices" (or something like that) would need several hours. Steve reported that it had taken us about an hour and fifteen minutes to get to the summit, placing us between average and "expert." Not bad at all!

We had a great time and we don't need a sign to tell us that we're awesome hikers. Despite the very long drive and short-ish hike, I strongly recommend this trip especially if the weather is clear!

Deer Leap. Plan A

6 September 2008

Leader: Steve Williams

This hike was the successor hike to the rained-out 27 October 2007 hike and the equally rained-out 3 May 2008, hike. Again, the forecast was less than favorable with rain falling early morning and forecast as being intermittent during the day. In spite of expressions of interest from locales as far removed as Killington and Hanover, N.H., only one participant, Tom Copps, turned out to join the leader and his friend Barbara, daughter Nicola and grandson Brian. Sue Thomas was kind enough to arrive at the starting point to advise that she was not coming, but also to advise that the hike had been advertised as being at 10.00 AM rather than 9.00 AM as both Steve and Tom had thought. Sue then left for the Route 4 trailhead, just in case the Killington and Hanover potentials arrived, which they did not, and those waiting looked for useful occupation until 10.00 AM just in case anyone else showed up, which they did not. The leader, having slipped up on the timing, felt that the least he could do was offer breakfast all round, which was duly obtained at the Midway Diner. The good news was that by 10.00 AM the rain had stopped, and in fact held off during the entire hike.

The route was up the AT/LT from Route 4 to Maine Junction, the AT for a few hundred yards, and then the Deer Leap Mountain trail over Deer Leap Mountain to its junction with the Deer Leap overlook trail and thence to the overlook which, surprise, surprise, was dry enough to be sat on for lunch. The return trip was the shorter return to the AT and thence to Maine Junction again and back down to Route 4.

The leader thanks all those willing to join him on such a dubious day.

Hazen's Notch to VT Route 118 and Jay Pass to Hazen's Notch

13/14 Sept. 2008, E2E Legs 26 & 27

By Rich & Lindy Brown

The hiking family is reunited after a few weeks of hiking separately! These two legs were done by Steve Williams, Tom Copps, Cindy Oas-Kirk, Allison (Norton) Henry, and Richard and Lindy Brown. On Friday night we camped at Lakeview Campground on Eden Lake. The next morning we hit the trail at Haven's Notch (VT Route 58) at 7:30 AM. We made it to the Tillotson Camp at 11:40 AM for lunch but circled the place trying to find a way in! Aha- finally found the door and enjoyed our break.

Now on to Belvidere Saddle. We took the Foresters Trail up to the tower. Some of the group braved the tower but not all of us. Some of us were just resting and eating chocolate when we discovered we had company – a snake. So much for relaxing. We ended our very hot day at VT Route 118 at 5:15 PM. We enjoyed a family dinner in Morrisville, then back to the campground.

Sunday morning we were packed, even the tents, by 6:00 AM. After picking up egg breakfast sandwiches and coffee-to-go at the general store we started on the trail at VT Route 242 in the pouring rain at 7:15 AM. We had a good climb at first and then it was minor ups and downs all day. We had a snack at Chet's Lookout, which is a huge rounded boulder with a ladder leading to it. Only the males climbed onto the boulder as it was raining and slippery. Most of the day was a nice walk in the woods. It stopped raining before we got to lunch at Hazen's Notch Camp at noon. We ended the hike at the road under the cliffs at Hazen's Notch at 1:40 PM.

Jay Pass to Vermont Route 105

11 October 2008, E2E Leg 28

By Allison Henry

This leg included Allison Henry, Tom Copps, Steve Williams, Cindy Oas-Kirk, Sue Thomas, Linda Hutchinson, and Gene Nelson. Our levels of alertness varied due to our different accommodations the night before; some had had restful nights at home or in a lovely B&B; the rest of us spent the night at the impressively clean, impressively inexpensive, and impressively noisy Snow Shoe Lodge in Montgomery Center. But, the price was right and the location perfect for our travels. No car spotting was needed for this hike because Steve had made arrangements with his friend Barbara O'Connor to pick us up at 3:30 PM at the northern end of the leg. Was that Steve's bet for our time out contest?

We set out just before 7:30 AM from Jay Pass, and at the start of the hike I couldn't resist starting a discussion about whether or not certain side trails are acceptable alternatives when doing the whole Trail. There really was no conflict—we all agreed (or at least, I think we did) that the blue-blazed "Jay Loop" which circumvents a section of the LT is perfectly allowable. We checked out Jay Camp, which is an enclosed camp being renovated. It was a steep climb from the shelter and up, up, UP Jay Peak. We had been warned (we're always being warned!) that Jay Peak would be very difficult, but I would say it is easier than the Bucklin Trail. We finally came out on a ski run, walked up the rocky slabs on the summit, and walked past the ski area buildings.

We were headed down a ski run in search of the LT north when someone said, "Wait, aren't we going to stop here for a snack and enjoy the view?" In our haste to keep walking we forgot the whole point. We allowed ourselves some time taking pictures and huddling with snacks, and then it was a scavenger hunt north down the mountain to find the next blaze. After some ups and downs we had another lunch at Laura Woodward Shelter, including some delicious raspberry bars (you're welcome!). Sue was excited about the privy decor. Instead of a moon-shaped window, the outhouse door was carved with a horse. Shelter description: lean-to!

After some more ups and downs, including an up over Doll Peak and lots of downs from there, we were at Shooting Star Shelter. Another lean-to! Lindy and Rich had a very interesting moose incident there on their hike a few weeks earlier (you'll have to ask them), but all the wildlife we saw were a backpacker and his unfriendly, barking Labrador. The pooch was well-controlled on a leash, however, unlike Lindy's moose. The privy was one of the highlights of the whole, entire Trail for me. This one had a rabbit-shaped window in the door. We then had one minor bump in our way, Burnt Mountain, and Steve led the way out onto VT 105 at exactly 3:30 to meet Barbara!

After the hike, we returned to our respective accommodations to get cleaned up, and Steve and Barbara hosted us at their B&B for a little champagne in anticipatory celebration. We had dinner in Montgomery Center and retired early. Those of us at the Snow Shoe worried about getting a good night's sleep, as a band, the Funky Crustaceans, would be performing in the bar right below our rooms. A few members of our party did spend some of the night reluctantly listening to the music. "Yours truly" conked out within ten minutes of hitting the pillow and woke up when the alarm went off on Sunday morning.

VT Route 105 to Canadian Line

12 October 2008, E2E Leg 28

By Steve Williams

This final hike brought the "Steady Six" (Rich and Lindy Brown, Tom Copps, Allison Henry, Cindy Oas-Kirk and Steve Williams) together for the final thrust. They were accompanied by Sue Thomas, completing her Long Trail quest started in 1982, Linda Hutchins, also working on the Long Trail in bits and pieces, and Steve's friend Barbara O'Connor, who has been supporting Steve this year in doing "make-ups".

First of all, some car shuffling was required to place two cars at each end of the hike and to accommodate Linda traveling that morning from Essex, the Browns from Orwell, and the remaining six coming from Montgomery Center. This done, the party set off on a bright sunny fall morning at 8:30 AM. In 1.2 miles and 500 feet up we reached Carlton Mountain, a truly modest final peak, and with no objections from those who had traversed Jay Peak the day before, we continued the 1.4 miles to the northern terminus of the Long Trail at the US-Canadian Border Line Post 592.

Journey's End provides a rocky outcrop straddling the international border and, at 2100 feet, a fine view into Quebec, including Owl's Head and some adjacent peaks. Rather to the writer's surprise no Homeland Security personnel were in evidence at the border to check out identities, particularly of those bold enough to stand with one foot in each country, or even with two feet in Canada, though there are stories which indicate that they were not far away. Indeed an excellent place to sit around and contemplate the 272 miles traversed over the previous two and a half years, with a great stretch of Canada and the boundary swath before our eyes to prove it. A sparkling beverage, cookies and chocolate bars were on hand for celebration.

Then a half mile to Jay Camp, a snug starting or ending overnight possibility, where Rich and Lindy Brown suddenly took off on the final eight-tenths of a mile to the trailhead. All became clear when the rest of the party arrived at the trailhead; where they had a portable table set up, with table cloth no less, champagne and glasses, and an extraordinary "Death by Chocolate" dessert, sufficient to satisfy any raging chocoholic and which undoubtedly replaced the calories burnt off on the two days' efforts. Thank you Rich and Lindy; a truly fitting finish!

Skylight Pond, Ripton

25 October 2008

By: Viv Bebee & Larry Walter

The weather reports spawned a couple phone calls the night before. A big rain storm with high winds was swooping in, and every time we checked NOAA, the start-time had been moved up. I stuck with my usual "we're going no matter what" blather in the background while Viv tried to calm nerves over the phone. We were surprised when we ended up with a good turnout (11) at the trail head including a couple of 18-year-old college freshmen (Peter and Sara).

Out guide text was 50 Hikes in Vermont, Fifth Edition, by Bob Lindemann and Mary Deaett. It's a good resource. We did notice a small mistake in the directions from Route 125. After turning north on Forest Road 59, you travel the reported mileage of 3.6 miles to a fork (instead of to the trail head) and continue on said right fork another mile to the parking area.

The trail follows a brook for a good mile along old logging roads. There are very few trail-blazes in this section, but the path is well maintained. There's one stream crossing that wouldn't be too much fun after a hard rain or in the spring. Eventually you ascend more steeply on single track with some switchbacks thrown in to the upper sections. There are some nice views off to the northeast in this section. Peter packed the Griffith's trusty 3-foot Disston (a vintage crosscut saw) all the way up with the anticipation of showing off our sawing prowess, only to find our well scouted obstruction had been sawed off by some glory hog (who did a fine, non-motorized job, by the way).

After cresting over the ridge and crossing the Long Trail, Skyline Lodge is only another five minutes down the east side. A little pumpkin witnessed our passage down the hill. The lodge is in great shape, with well chinked cracks, real windows with screens and a solid door. It must have been really nice to stay there in the colder months when there was still a stove, drying your socks and reading a good novel. The covered front porch overlooks a pleasant pond, just down the hill. Word has it, there's a trail that runs around the shore. We had lunch and tried not to talk politics too much. An interesting feature is what appears to be the mummified remains of a weasel that managed to get his (I'm assuming this was a guy-weasel-inspired, unplanned event) head stuck in the framework along the lower left edge of the north wall. He'll be waiting for you. Don't forget to say hi.

We beat the odds and made it all the way back to the cars before the rain hit, and hit it did. Viv's splinter-party continued over to Dead Creek to watch a couple soggy geese hanging out in the sanctuary. Evidently it was still a little early for the main party of honkers. Peter chauffeured us old folks safely back to Rutland.

Killington Section Directors Meeting

By John Hale, Secretary

A regular meeting of the Killington Section Board of Directors was held on 7 October 2008 at the Midway Diner in Rutland.

Board Members Attending:

Barry Griffith, Pres.
Wayne Krevetski, VP
Sue Thomas
Cynthia Taylor-Miller
Allison Henry
Lynda Hutchins
Andrea McQuade
John Hale, Sec. & Treas.

Absent: Roma Pulling

Guest: Bob Perkins

President Barry G. called the meeting to order at about 6:00 PM.

The Minutes for the 10 June 2008 Board Meeting were approved as presented.

The Treasurer's Report ($23,930.88 assets, no liabilities, net income $1,744.90) for the period 1/1/2008 to 10/7/2008 was approved as presented.

Lynda H. reported on the Main Club's Board meeting of 27 September 2008. (A full report is available on request of the Secretary.)

Sue T. reported on the very successful Four Bears quilt raffle: $750 was raised and donated to the Main Club as a contribution of the Killington Section. Killington Section member Tom Copps held the winning ticket at the drawing on 27 September at the Volunteer Appreciation Picnic in Londonderry.

There was a discussion about whether the $750 donation should be absolutely restricted to the Little Killington Shelter project as originally specified, or whether the funds could be unrestricted and offered to the Main Club for current operating expenses. Ben Rose asked the Section to consider unrestricting the funds since the Little Killington Shelter project will be delayed. A motion was made, seconded and passed unanimously to unrestrict the donation allowing the Main Club to use the funds for general expenses.

Winner Tom C. has offered to donate the quilt back to the Club and Sue T. will speak with him to discover the specifics of his intention. Various ideas were briefly discussed as to how the quilt could be best utilized after a re-donation.

All the quilters who worked on this project and especially Sue T. were thanked for their initiative, dedication, administration, and nimble fingers. It was a huge effort with a wonderful result.

Wayne K. reported that this year's Long Trail Festival (15 to 17 August) enjoyed another successful year with about twenty percent increased attendance, more campers and more vendors. Next year's Festival is already being planned.

The Governor Clement Shelter road gate strategy seems to be successful. While ATV riders cannot be completely deterred, monitoring of attempts to defeat the gate has generated immediate counter-measures and the gate itself has not been vandalized. Miscreants in street vehicles have been kept out.

The gate has been opened for the fall and winter seasons as agreed with the Town of Shrewsbury. The Section is monitoring post-opening activity.

Allison H. spoke about the trail sign at Jungle Junction's being significantly deteriorated and wondered whether it should be removed entirely as the purpose for which it was originally placed is no longer germane. After discussion, Allison agreed to seek Dave Hardy of the Main Club's opinion about whether to refurbish or remove the sign.

The Section will attend the Rutland Regional Medical Center's Wellness Fair on Wednesday 22 October from noon to 4:00 PM. with the Section's sign board, publications, newsletters and membership registration cards. Wayne K. will represent the Club.

Eastern Mountain Sports in Rutland has offered another kayak for the Section to raffle during EMS' Fall Club Days event, subject this time to the Section's taking an advertisement in the Rutland Herald announcing the raffle at the store which will generate more store traffic in addition to larger raffle sales. Wayne K. said that a two inch by two column advertisement run in the Herald for three days would cost $213.

A general discussion ensued about whether the Section should, even in this indirect way, advertise for a private business. The consensus was that since the advertisement would only be an announcement for the Section, incidentally thanking EMS for their donation; and since the advertisement would serve the additional purpose of general public exposure for the Section and the Club, that the advertisement should be placed. The motion to spend $213 for the advertisement was moved, seconded and passed unanimously. Wayne K. will manage raffle ticket sales on Friday night and Saturday, 17 and 18 October and run the drawing on Saturday night.

A suggestion was made to establish an E-List for the dissemination of notices, alerts and other communications on a more immediate basis than the quarterly Newsletter. It is envisioned that a special email address will be set up to which interested parties can direct their request to be enrolled on the Killington Section E-List. The Board thought the suggestion a good one and Bob P. offered to set up and manage this list.

Bob P. also agreed to provide copies of the Newsletters in .pdf file format to Deb Waggett, the Section's webmaster, going forward so that interested persons can retrieve past copies of the Newsletter.

Allison N. reported that the Long Trail End to End in Bits and Pieces campaign will hike its last stage shortly. Seven people have finished the Trail in this way and one person is lacking only one section. All participants were congratulated on their accomplishment.

The Section's Fall Pot Luck Dinner meeting will be held at the Good Shepherd Lutheran Church in Rutland on 22 November from 5:30 to 8:30 PM. The evening's program will be a presentation by Board member Cindy Taylor-Miller of her cross-country bicycle trip.

Barry G. suggested that the Board consider hosting a third pot luck dinner meeting some time during the winter to compliment the spring and fall dinners. He will broach the subject and determine interest at the November dinner.

Sue T. asked the Board to think about how to properly recognize Ray Catozzi for his lifelong involvement with the Club and the Section.

The next Board meeting was set for Tuesday 10 February 2009 at the Midway Diner.

The meeting was adjourned at about 8:20 PM.

Thoughts on a Long Trail End – to – End Hike

By Mad Hatter (Wayne Krevetski)

Where does one start in writing about an End-to-End Hike? Maybe with some basic statistics: Started on 30 August 2008, finished 26 days later (including one zero day) on 24 September. The weather was good; the first week had no rain at all and then only three separate days of rain afterward. Of course one of those days was when I was hiking between Mt. Abraham and Stark's Nest, and another was going over Camel's Hump, but you can't have everything.

Before I started I had heard that "if you can hike the Long Trail you can thru-hike the Appalachian Trail", but I was surprised at how true that statement proved to be. The Long Trail was not only the inspiration for the AT but in the end seems to have served as a model as well. The parallels between the two are amazing. Whether it's boulder filled gulches, rocky ascents, high ridgelines, or soft forest paths, the Long Trail has them all, a real gem of a trail.

As I am at a loss for words to describe my trip, I would like to share with you two entries from my Journal.

*September 17, 2008; Wednesday
Butler Lodge
Miles Today 10.9 Total 202.5*

Over two hundred miles and I am going to sleep under the shadow of Mount Mansfield. Hopefully with good weather, I will be crossing the summits of Mansfield and moving on to Spruce Peak tomorrow.

I caught up with "The Duke" at the lodge and he has his "Duchess" with him, they got engaged to be married today on top of Mansfield (He told me of his plans a week ago. Said that he could later call it the high point of their relationship). The Caretaker here is named Jeff; yes a real caretaker, first of the trip. This is his second day assigned to this site.

The hiking is much more difficult up at this end. Lots of steep ascents and descents, and lots of mud. Reminds me of the Whites in NH. Without so much exposure.

Well, I'm hoping for good weather tomorrow, as there were lots of clouds coming in at sunset. It would be nice to be on a summit and have a view for a change.

*September 18, 2008; Thursday
Sterling Pond Shelter
Miles Today 9 Total 211.5*

60.7 miles left, almost over, Good Thing! Climbing over Mansfield today was the most frightening hiking I have ever done. Between the "Steep and rough climb over rocks and ledges, using ladders in some places" to get up the Forehead, to the "Drop steeply from the Chin on precipitous ledges" to get back down, they fail to mention the Class 4 and 5 rock climbing that you have to do and the nice flight into open air that you would have if you slipped off one of those ledges, and this wearing a backpack

WHAT A RUSH!!!!!!!!!!!!

Tired, time for sleep.

Mad Hatter

In closing it was a wonderful trip and we are lucky to have such a wonderful Trail in our backyards to play on.

Killington Section Treasurer Hunt II

By Herb Ogden

I will give a Long Trail Guide from the 1960s to the first person who sends me the correct answer to this paper treasure hunt – and I will give the Kirk Trails & Shelters Fund $100 in that person's name, too.

1. Start at the top of southern Vermont's highest mountain.
2. Go downhill on the only blue blazed trail until you reach a structure named after a former GMC president.
3. Go south on the Long Trail as it existed when that person was GMC president until you strike a presently blue blazed trail.
4. Turn right on the presently blue blazed trail.
5. Continue on the blue blazed trail until you are at or near a former landmark with a two word name.
6. Hike on the most direct route of the present or former Long Trail to the site of a structure whose name began with the last letter of the second word in the former landmark's name.
7. From that site, go north on a former blue blazed loop trail, now nearly or totally obscure, until you reach a former white blazed trail.
8. Turn left on the former white blazed trail until you reach a presently white blazed trail.
9. Turn left on the white blazed trail.
10. Follow the white blazed trail until you reach a blue blazed trail to the right.
11. Follow the blue blazed trail until you come to a shelter.
12. Not counting the shelter you have just arrived at, name the present lodges, camps and shelters built by the GMC (including our Section) that you have passed.

Hint: At some point, you will pass by or very near the site of a former structure named for a deciduous conifer.

Old Baldy, Bridgewater

4 October 2008

By Sue Thomas, leader

When we saw the bird hunters with their 4-wheel-drive pickup truck parked at the bottom of the hill we should have taken the hint. But intrepid Bob-the-Car soldiered on and, after a few nerve-wracking scraping noises from his nethermost regions, arrived triumphant at the trailhead. (Apparently none of the miscellaneous parts left behind were essential. We made it safely home to Rutland as well.) In fact, old Bob looked a bit smug as the jeep carrying the rest of our party limped in, wheezing and spewing smoke.

Fortunately, the hike to the summit was a good deal less exciting. But it was a nice fall day and a pretty trail, which winds gradually up the mountain on old woodroad, only becoming steep near the top causing some of us to wheeze a bit too. We had our lunch on the summit and, on noticing that the view improved considerably when we stood up, we decided that to rename Old Baldy "Old Rogaine" seemed appropriate. In spite of encroaching bushes, mountains could be seen in all directions – the Greens, the Whites, the Taconics, and close by Mount Ascutney. I hope a full head of hair will not someday obscure the view completely. Sometimes "bald is beautiful".

Smith Peak, Shrewsbury

1 November 2008

By Barry & Barb Griffith, leaders

While we have ascended Shrewsbury Peak countless times, we had never climbed Smith Peak, its 3200-foot neighbor to the east – until this year. It was about time! Smith Peak is in the northeastern corner of the Town of Shrewsbury. When New Hampshire Governor Benning

Outing Reports

Wentworth chartered Shrewsbury in 1761, this corner lot was set aside for the Church of England. In theory, the acreage in such a "glebe lot" would be leased to settlers, with the rents going to the Church. In practice, we doubt this remote mountain lot was ever so settled or used. We don't know who Smith was – more research needed!

The fall outing schedule is assembled in the summer, and we gambled that the CCC Road would still be open and passable on November 1. A late October snowfall had us wondering. Undaunted, ten of us assembled and consolidated into 4-wheel-drive vehicles in Northam. There was snow and ice on the CCC Road, but we made it safely to our trailhead. We packed up and proceeded up the Black Swamp Trail, on the east side of Shrewsbury Peak. Happily, the temperature was (slightly) above freezing. So, while there was snow on the mountain, the footing was good. There were abundant fresh deer and moose tracks to be found.

Just below the Black Swamp trail shelter, we took the side trail to the east. It eventually descends to the Farm & Wilderness Camps. With snow on the ground the trail was not always easy to pick up, but the intermittent blazes kept us on course until we reached the south side of Smith Peak. Here, with a reminder that the hike description included the words "difficult" and "bushwhack", we struck out for the summit. We located the canister and signed in. Over lunch there was discussion of the background noise – was it wind, or a stream? One of our group correctly identified the source – the snow guns on Killington Peak, a few miles to the north. 'Tis the season!

After lunch, we retraced our steps to the Black Swamp Trail.

While two returned to their vehicle, the rest voted for a bonus ascent of Shrewsbury Peak – two summits for the price of one! While Smith Peak affords only obstructed views, on Shrewsbury Peak we were able to enjoy its unobstructed panorama. We then descended, tired but pleased with our day. A good time was had by all.

Fall Work Party

8 November 2008

By Herb Ogden, Trails/Shelters Ch.

Considering that there was no announcement in the Rutland Herald and the weather forecast was for morning showers and afternoon rain, I was pleased that eight of us showed up for this work party.

One group of five went up to Gov. Clement Shelter. First they rearranged the bog-bridging lumber that had been trucked in during the spring so that it can be hauled the rest of the way to where it is needed once the ground freezes. Had it been left as it was, some of it would have frozen into the ground. Then they dug a new hole for the privy, moved the privy onto it, decommissioned the old hole with appropriate ceremony, and were done by early afternoon.

The other group spent the whole day clearing the over fifty waterbars and side ditches on the Sherburne Pass Trail between Sherburne Pass and Pico Camp and building a half dozen or more new waterbars. Lacking an adequate supply of supple young backs, we didn't build them to ideal GMC standards, which call for using rocks so large that it takes two people to move them into place and burying them deeply in the trail. Like many of our other waterbars, these will require a little more maintenance than the Stonehenge variety. But we need to clear debris out of them at least once a year anyway, so it doesn't make a big difference.

The second group had what is a unique experience, at least in my fifty years of hiking the Long Trail. Descending above the Sinkhole, we heard a strange noise down the trail. It sounded like music, but not like a radio. As we got closer, it appeared to be a choir singing gospel music. Larry Walter said he thought he'd gone to heaven. We thought, "A choir in the woods on a rainy afternoon? No way!" But it turned out to be ten Tufts University students, apparently members of an a capella group, singing happily in the drizzly forest. They turned around soon after we passed them, and we could hear them singing behind us all the way back down even though they were also hiking along at a decent pace. Sometimes trail work has unexpected rewards. Join us next time, and who knows what you'll hear or see.

Hot Dog Roast, Cuttingsville

14 February 2009

By Roma Pulling, leader

Over the years, when my husband and I were leading hikes to remote areas for wintertime barbecues, we tried various locations, among them Half Moon and Bomoseen State Parks, Gifford Woods and Minerva Hinchey Shelter on the Long Trail. Gifford and Minerva Hinchey were our favorites. For two years my son Steve has been my helper assisted by our friend, Jerry Parker, and this year our Valentine's Day event was at Minerva Hinchey.

The weather was favorable this time--sunshine and comfortable temperatures. While Steve started the fire and I laid out the food and supplies on the table in the shelter, Jerry led the group of eight hikers south of the shelter on the Long Trail through an area called Patch's Hollow. Barry regaled the group with tales of scandalous happenings in years past. (If you want the details, call Barry.)

President Barry Recounts the Tragedy at Patch Hollow

When the hungry returned, we were ready for them. Each one brought their item for grilling while condiments, chips, cookies and hot drinks awaited them. Two of our good cooks furnished homemade cookies and muffins.

What fun! It made winter seem just a little shorter.

Thank You, Trail Volunteers, For An Hour Each Day Of The Year!

By Herb Ogden,

Trails & Shelters Chair

About twenty Killington Section members and friends spent enough time on trail work in 2008 so that, for each day of the year, there was one hour of volunteer work. Scheduled work parties accounted for 217 hours. Individual work or work parties assembled on short notice accounted for another 149, for a total of 366 hours spent either on trail work or getting to the work site. Actually, that total is low, because I know of others who have put in many hours clearing or repairing trails but did not bother to report them.

Most of the work was done on the Long Trail between Wallingford Gulf and Clarendon Gorge, on the Sherburne Pass Trail south of Sherburne Pass, and at Minerva Hinchey Shelter, but almost all of the over 34 miles of Killington Section trail saw at least minimal maintenance. In the last two years, all blazes have been renewed on the Long Trail from Wallingford Gulf to about a mile north of Gov. Clement Shelter and on the Sherburne Pass Trail south of US 4.

There is plenty left to do. Unfortunately, some of the Long Trail that was moved west of Pico Peak ten years ago is seriously eroding. It needs rock steps and ditches. Elsewhere, some waterbars have not been cleared for a couple years. Brush is growing up in front of our newest shelter, Churchill Scott Shelter. The Killington Spur from Cooper Lodge to Killington summit and the Pico Link from Pico Camp to Pico summit need rock steps. The Long Trail on both sides of the Lottery Road and the Keiffer Road needs bog bridging and ditching to reduce the mud. Rotten bog bridging on the south slope of Killington Peak needs replacing. Pico Camp needs an entry porch. The northern half of our section of the Long Trail needs reblazing. This is a sampling of what needs doing. For a full list, contact me at hogden@vermontel.net.

To keep up our Section's good work, please join us in the two work parties on the schedule in this issue of Smoke & Blazes. Especially if your schedule does not allow that, please tell me if you are available for occasional last-minute work parties or would like to take on a special project.

Killington Section Directors Meeting

By Cynthia Taylor-Miller,
Acting Secretary

A regular meeting of the Killington Section Board of Directors was held on 10 February 2009 at the Midway Diner in Rutland.

Board Members Attending:

Barry Griffith, President
Wayne Krevetski, VP
Allison Henry
Susan Thomas
Roma Pulling
Andrea McQuade
Lynda Hutchins
Cynthia Taylor-Miller

Absent: Guests:

John Hale Bob Perkins
 Herb Ogden

President Barry Griffith called the meeting to order at 6:00 PM

Due to the absence of John Hale, President Griffith asked for a volunteer to record the minutes of this evening's meeting. Cynthia Taylor-Miller volunteered.

The minutes for the 7 October 2008 KS Directors meeting were approved as presented in Volume 61, Number 4 of Smoke and Blazes.

Due to the absence of John Hale, a current Treasurer's Report was not submitted.

Lynda Hutchins reported on the Main Club's Directors meeting of 24 January 2009 held at Vermont Law School. (A full report is available on request of the Secretary). The GMC Annual Meeting will be on 30 May 2009, hosted by the Montpelier section at the new building in Waterbury Center. The GMC has a new Membership and Volunteer Coordinator, Mari Zagarins.

The Killington Section Annual Meeting will be on 28 March 2009 at the Good Shepherd Lutheran Church on Hillside Road in Rutland.

Trails and Shelters Chairperson, Herb Ogden, lead a discussion on recruiting boy scouts, high school and college students, GE volunteers, Rutland Recreation Department, and EMS staff members as KS volunteer trail maintainers. A goal for this year is to double the number of volunteers to assist with the spring and fall trail maintenance work trips.

Herb will obtain a repair quote from a stone mason for the exterior walls and fireplace at Governor Clement Shelter. Shelter adopter Roy Arthur will replace the roof this spring.

The bog bridging delivered to Clement Shelter Road is still there and needs to be moved to the trail work site.

The GMC Trail Management Committee has taken the new Killington Shelter "off the radar" for two reasons: the current financial situation of the club, and the hope that Governor Clement Shelter may be holding its own now that the access road is seasonally gated. However, the new Killington Shelter is in the ATC 5-year plan for 2011.

Dismantling of Cooper Lodge may begin this summer leaving the tent platforms and privy in tact.

Recently, a list of KS property was given to both the current Treasurer and President.

Volunteer hours spent on trail maintenance as well as trail related matters, i.e. Newsletter, recruitment of trip leaders, and section meeting hours should be collected and reported.

Volunteers are needed to build and install the Gould Brook Bridge. Coordination of this project will begin this summer and may become one of the Long Trail Festival Hardcore work trips.

Sometime this spring, the Sherburne Pass Trail will be relocated west of the new sink hole.

President Griffith expressed the club's appreciation to Herb Ogden for his commitment over two decades of dedicated service.

Bob Perkins reported that approximately 190 Smoke and Blazes are mailed each quarter.

Four people have signed up to receive the Killington Section E-mail alert notices. In order to make this work as planned more members need to sign up. Continued sign-up notices will appear in future issues of Smoke and Blazes.

Outing Chair Sue Thomas expressed her concerns regarding a Greenwich, New York newspaper [Greenwich Journal & Salem Press] where a recent outing to Emerald Lake was listed with omissions of critical contact and meeting time/place information. Many unanswered questions remain as to how this paper received the KS outing information. Allison Henry will research this further.

The ATC Biennial Conference, "Vermont Forever Green", 17-24 July 2009 at Castleton State College and hosted by the GMC continues to solicit hike leaders, local residents familiar with the area and services to assist with the hospitality booth, silent auction donations and an Exhibits Chairperson. Contact information will be provided in the next issue of Smoke and Blazes.

Wayne Krevetski made a motion to provide Eastern Mountain Sports of Rutland, upon request, with Killington Section member mailing labels for the semi-annual spring Club Day Sale/Kayak Raffle in April. Motion seconded by Lynda Hutchins. Motion passed.

The new dates for the Long Trail Festival are 7, 8, and 9 August 2009. The focus of activities will on Saturday the eighth with vendors, music, and presentations. Work trips and hikes will take place on Sunday the ninth. There will be more children's entertainment at this year's festival. Camping will be available on the Fairgrounds from Friday evening to Monday morning.

Sue Thomas reported that the Four Bears Quilt received an additional $250 bringing the total donations to the main club of $1,000.

The next KS Directors meeting will be held after the section Annual Meeting on 28 March 2009.

The meeting adjourned at 7:52 PM.

Bluff Point Lighthouse on Valcour Island in Lake Champlain

Elevation Gain: Zero

In each of the last several years outing coordinator Sue Thomas has optimistically scheduled a walk across the ice of Lake Champlain to the historic Bluff Point Lighthouse. Each time, on the appointed day, the ice was dangerously thin (Global warming?) and the outing was cancelled. This year the date was left floating (there's a joke here somewhere) and as we go to press it's reported that on 1 March a persistent group of Killington Section members, joined by Clinton County, NY Historical Society guides successfully made the crossing.

Going Once; -- Going Twice; . . .

The Killington Section, as our contribution to the Green Mountain Club, plans to auction off two baskets at the Appalachian Trail Conservancy gathering at Castleton in June. We will assemble two baskets: one containing Vermont products such as maple syrup, Green Mountain Coffee, pancake mix, and Champlain Chocolates; the other hike-related items such as socks, guidebooks, compasses, flashlights, and trail snacks. Anyone wishing to contribute an item for the baskets should contact Sue Thomas at 773-2185 by the end of June.

Herb Ogden, Wayne Krevetski, and Garry Martin

GMC: Lynda Hutchins reported that the GMC is in good shape financially and that there is much excitement about the Grand Opening of the new facility to occur at the annual meeting on 29-31 May. She reported that publication of books and maps has become a money-making venture; that the Herrick Building disposition will be addressed in the future; that GMC Executive Director Ben Rose has agreed to a pay cut, and all other staff have agreed to a pay freeze; that they look forward to receiving stimulus funds to hire people to work in the field; and that the phonathon is coming up if anyone wants to assist.

Field Program: In the absence of Dave Hardy, Herb Ogden related that Cooper Lodge will be torn down. Sue Thomas suggested that some sort of recognition of the Coopers and Lambs be considered. A new shelter may be built to replace Cooper.

Governor Clement shelter is to receive a new roof by the adopter who is affiliated with the Snowmobile Club, and the Appalachian Trail Conservancy may grant $3,000 for a stone mason to work on the shelter per town ordinance. Herb doubts if it will be that expensive. The

By Herb Ogden

Because no one reported "finding the treasure" from the February issue, I'm repeating the challenge with Hints added for legs 3 and 4. I will give a Long Trail Guide from the 1960s to the first person who sends me the correct answer to this paper treasure hunt – and I will give the Kirk Trails & Shelters Fund $100 in that person's name, too

1. Start at the top of southern Vermont's highest mountain.
2. Go downhill on the only blue blazed trail until you reach a structure named after a former GMC president.
3. Go south on the Long Trail as it existed when that person was GMC president until you strike a presently blue blazed trail.
Hint: This version of the LT was in use till the very late 20th century.
4. Turn right on the presently blue blazed trail.
Hint: The blue blazed trail is the only one in the Coolidge Range connecting with the Long Trail that is NOT maintained by our Section.
5. Continue on the blue blazed trail until you are at or near a former landmark with a two word name.
6. Hike on the most direct route of the present or former Long Trail to the site of a structure whose name began with the last letter of the second word in the former landmark's name.
7. From that site, go north on a former blue blazed loop trail, now nearly or totally obscure, until you reach a former white blazed trail.
8. Turn left on the former white blazed trail until you reach a presently white blazed trail.
9. Turn left on the white blazed trail.
10. Follow the white blazed trail until you reach a blue blazed trail to the right.
11. Follow the blue blazed trail until you come to a shelter.
12. Not counting the shelter you have just arrived at, name the present lodges, camps and shelters built by the GMC (including our Section) that you have passed.

Hint: At some point, you will pass by or very near the site of a former structure named for a deciduous conifer.

gate will be locked on 15 April for the summer. Herb enumerated the upcoming meetings and conferences.

Trails & Shelters: Herb Ogden reported on the areas where assistance will be needed to maintain the 34 miles of trails that we oversee. He said he should be researching other groups who might be able to assist also but lacks the time and hopes Wayne Krevetski can transition into leadership and help with this. Barry thanked Herb for all his work on the Trails.

Smoke & Blazes: Bob Perkins requested that leaders call Sue earlier with dates for their outings and that they send in hike reports at anytime. He also requested that reports or editorials on other trips of interest be sent as well. Barry thanked Bob for his good work.

Barry noted the websites listed on the agenda for those who are interested.

ATC Biennial Conference: Trina Perkins reported on the conference to be held at Castleton State College in July. She passed a sign up sheet for hike leaders and encouraged members particularly to assist with hospitality at the conference. Donations were requested for our silent auction whose proceeds will go to GMC. Sue requested items to fill a basket of Vermont made products as our contribution. Trina noted that the recent Killington Section endeavor inspired her Ottauquechee Section to also hike the Long Trail in "bits and pieces."

Long Trail Festival: This year the festival will have expanded children's activities and entertainment. In addition, it will showcase other forms of outdoor recreation. They are hoping to include caving, climbing, cycling, and kayak/canoeing as well as hiking. They will continue to have camping at the fairgrounds from Friday evening through Sunday with the major fairgrounds program on Saturday. Hikes and a work trip will be on Sunday.

Volunteer Coordination: Forms were passed out for people to record hours worked on trails.

Joan Smith noted a concern regarding the garbage accumulating at the Clarendon Gorge parking area, and it was agreed that the Board would try to determine who has the responsibility for this area before becoming involved.

Election of Board Members: Board members Andrea McQuade and Roma Pulling who have completed two terms of service and Wayne Krevetski whose first term has ended were recognized for their good service. After nominations from the floor, three directors were elected to terms to run from 2009 to 2012: Wayne Krevetski for a second 3-year term, Herb Ogden and Gerry Martin each for a 3-year term.

The Directors adjourned to elect officers and after a brief business meeting reported that officers elected were:

President Barry Griffith;
Vice President..... Wayne Krevetski
Secretary-Treasurer..... John Hale;
GMC Board Rep..... Lynda Hutchins

The Directors also approved an amount up to $2,000 to be used toward repairs on Governor Clement Shelter at the discretion of Herb Ogden. The next Board meeting date was set for June 9, 2009.

The meeting was adjourned at 8:45 PM.

Name That Hill

By Bob Perkins

Among the Outings reported on in this issue of Smoke & Blazes are trips to Bald Mountain in Mendon and to Bald Top in Fairlee. A coincidence? What are the chances?

This led me to one of my favorite references: Ester Munroe Swift's Vermont Place Names. A winter evening browsing this book is almost as good as one perusing my map collection.

Lumping together 8 Bald Hills, 8 Bald Mountains, and 1 Bald Top we have Bald (17). It appears that "Bald" is Vermont's favorite mountain name. (Swift counts our Mendon prominence as a "Hill").

The runners-up include West (14), Round (13) East (11), and Burnt (11). In the next tier we have Prospect (9), Cobble (9), Hogback (8), Pinnacle (8), Cow (7), Haystack (6), Hedgehog (6), and Hurricane (5).

For the record, our 17 Balds are in Bridgewater, Fairlee, Fletcher, Hinesburg, Huntington, Jericho, Leicester, Maidstone, Mendon, Pawlet, Townshend, Waitsfield, West Haven, Westminster, Westmore, and Woodford.

None of the "Balds" are on or near the Long Trail and none are listed in the recent GMC book Place Names on Vermont's Long Trail, but 3 of the "Burnts" are listed there.

I wonder if many of our "Balds" were named in the days of Vermont's sheep craze when perhaps they were indeed as bald as their southern cousins are today.

Outing Reports

Cook Mt., Lake George, NY

13 December 2008

By Allison Henry, leader

Hike canceled due to an ice storm the previous day. Tom and I went to Pine Hill Park and took pictures of ice-coated trees with my new camera.

Emerald Lake, Dorset

10 January 2009

By Allison Henry, leader

My husband Phil and I were married at Emerald Lake State Park in July 2008 and, in the schedule, I promoted this hike by calling it a celebration of our 6-month anniversary. The groom did not appear on this hike, however – he owns no winter gear!

We still had plenty of people for our hike including some new folks from New York State. When the NYers called to plan a rendezvous with me for the trip, a potential problem was revealed—their local paper had picked up the schedule, but it only said the date, the leader's name and number, and "Emerald Lake, 9:00 AM." The schedule did not specify that we were meeting in Rutland at 9.

Luckily this little detail came up in our phone conversation so our guests were able to arrange to meet us a little later than 9. Additionally, my area code was not included. We talked about these issues at a board meeting soon after, and I believe I was assigned the task of contacting the newspaper directly to ask them to include more information. I guess I'd better get on top of that.

All went well with the rendezvous and we had 17 people, which made a nice long line of hikers marching on the trail! There was only a little snow so snowshoes were not really needed, but I advised ice grippers or even snowshoes for traction due to a few steep spots including a slippery sidehill right over a culvert full of water.

The trail around Emerald Lake has some interesting features...those of us who like to be in total wilderness were not impressed, but I like to see things other than trees once in a while! We first went up over the culvert (no one fell in!), then UNDER route 7, and then over a train track. We went up the embankment on the east side of Route 7 to a few overlooks only partially obscured by trees. We then climbed and slid back down to Route 7 on the south end of this part of the trail. Some of us purposely slid right down the trail, which must have been quite a sight to oncoming traffic!

After crossing the highway, the trail goes over the guardrail and along the south shore of Emerald Lake, past a swampy area. This area is also the headwaters of our Otter Creek! We had a nice, rambling hike up to the campground and found ourselves a lunch spot at one of the campground's lean-tos.

We saw lots of animal tracks including foxes, bobcats, deer, and bunnies. We then followed a side trail back down to Emerald Lake, and followed the west shore around the lake to the beach area. I saw a fox with very bright orange fur. No one believed me at first, but we were at least able to confirm that I'd seen a fox, if not the actual color, by checking out his tracks.

At the beach, we fine, cultured, mature hikers spent some time on the swings and slides at the kiddies' playground. It was then a short walk back to the cars where we had a fine post-hike snack of delicious Jones donuts.

Shrewsbury Ramble

17 January 2009

By Barb Griffith, co-leader

One thing we had plenty of last winter was snow! Barry and I had planned on hiking from the "Tin Shanty" in Shrewsbury over to the Governor Clement Shelter. This is a favorite hike for us as it follows the Catamount Trail and a snowmobile trail. The distance is about 4 miles with a slow, uphill climb. We were willing to go but we cancelled due to snow. People didn't want to drive up to Shrewsbury. Perhaps next year.

Long Trail in Shrewsbury

24 January 2009

By Barry Griffith, co-leader

We inherited this hike from Herb Ogden. Since our two scheduled outings this winter had to be cancelled, we were glad we could step in. We convened with old friends and new at the AT/LT parking lot on Route 103. The group climbed up the steep ravine to the north, managing to slip and slide to the top, where snowshoes were adorned. We continued along the trail to the top of the ridge, where all enjoyed the view from the lookout to the south and west. Continuing our journey we kept climbing and stopped at the Clarendon Shelter for lunch. It was cold, so we didn't linger long after we fueled our bodies.

From there we diverged from the Long Trail, and proceeded north up the Gaynor Road. We crossed the Great Roaring Brook at the old bridge site that washed out in 1927 and later was abandoned as a town highway. The foundations of the Bullard family home and barn were observed. Barbara then led us up the rise to the Bullard Cemetery, where we paid our respects to Lucy and John Bullard, who had settled here in 1789.

Continuing our ascent through the overgrown fields, we eventually came out on the Lottery Road, where we inspected the old Town Poor Farm cellar hole. Turning back down hill, we snagged a snowmobile trail, which eventually led us back to the Gaynor Road. We then followed the old town highway down to Route 103 and our vehicles. This was a day to keep moving as it was chilly! However, a good time was had by all.

High Pond, Sudbury

22 February 2009

By Barry Griffith, co-leader

Alas, this hike to a pond in Sudbury was cancelled due to one of those weekend snowstorms. We had been cautioned not to park in the "parking area" when it was snowing because this was also the snow plow turn around area. For those who wish to do this some time you will find the location and description in the Day Hiker's Guide to Vermont.

Bald Mountain, Mendon

28 February 2009

By Viv & Larry Walter, leaders

We broke a long tradition of experiencing perfect weather for the practice hike in trade for something off the set for Scorsese's Cape Fear. We chose to run our loop counterclockwise up the icy skid path from some recent logging. The weather was crisp and clear. That coupled with a pretty stiff wind on the north vista chased us off the top and down to Red Rocks overlook. It was much nicer down there so we broke out lunch and enjoyed a nice view over the airport and south along Route 7.

Pharaoh Lake, Chilson, NY

7 March 2009

By Allison Henry, leader

For this hike in the Pharaoh Lake Wilderness I chose the Tubmill Marsh Trail, which starts on Route 74 about 10 miles west of Ticonderoga, NY. This trailhead is directly on the highway, which was a good choice because last year the road into the Putnam Pond Campground was not plowed and the driving was hairy.

We debated at length about whether or not snowshoes were needed—there was at least two feet of snow but the trail was extremely well packed. We discussed and hemmed and hawed, and then we made the official decision to go without snowshoes with the understanding that we might return to the car for them. One person did carry snowshoes—I am not naming names. Sure enough, after we'd walked for less than ten minutes and at least two people had fallen off the trail into snow up to their thighs, back to the cars we went. The person who was carrying snowshoes said "I told you so"—I am still not naming names but here's a hint, he has a dog who looks like Toto.

Once in snowshoes, we were able to proceed as planned. The trail goes across a nice dam on Eagle Lake, up an old road, and along a valley floor. We stopped at some interesting icicles that made an excellent backdrop for photos. Barb Griffith posed first, and was the first to fall off a log into the snow, to the delight of those of us with cameras ready. I went next, and sure enough, I fell too. One of the photos that was taken looks like Cindy Kirk pushed me!

After the photo fiasco, we did some climbing around what the map calls Ragged Mountain. On the far side as we descended, we encountered a strange weather phenomenon. The snow was melted down to bare earth, a warm breeze was blowing, and the weather felt about 10 degrees warmer. An ADK El Nino? Bear breath? A localized area of global warming?

We took a side trail to the Tubmill Marsh lean-to for a leisurely lunch. After lunch it was still relatively early, and we discussed whether to hike further or return to the cars. We ended up splitting up. A few people chose to proceed at a slow pace back to the cars, and the rest of us went on to Honey Pond. After looking at the pond and saying, "Well, there's Honey Pond," we turned around and went back the way we came, and eventually caught up with our other group members who had been enjoying their stroll. They spent the time investigating interesting things like icicles and ferns. We made it back to the cars safely, of course. The drive home felt very long but I think everyone had a nice day.

I've probably walked or jogged this trail a hundred times, but never seem to tire of it. The remaining section included nice views to the west, though an old grove of plantation red pines. The trail eventually circles around for a nice view of Pico, Killington, Shrewsbury, etc. I'm reasonably sure that all 10 humans and Burdock (Jerry's Cairn terrier) enjoyed the day. I'd highly recommend this path to those who haven't walked it. It's only 10 minutes from Rutland to the trail head. Call us if you want directions, or better yet, a guide.

"Hunt for Spring" on Snake Mt.

29 March 2009

By Sue Thomas, leader

Our hardy band of explorers set out for Snake Mountain in Addison, determined to track down some encouraging early signs of spring. Our findings were as follows:

- 1) frozen mud.
- 2) mud.

But what a view!

Mt Zion, Hubbardton

18 April 2009

By Barbara & Barry Griffith,
Leaders

April is early to hike the Greens, so the Taconics beckoned. Kit and Mickey Davidson's trails are a delight in any season. Our group included many old friends, but also some new folks who had not been to Kit's before. We were happy to introduce them to this wonderful place. The house was closed and driveway gated when we pre-hiked, so we parked at the Battlefield and walked to the trailheads. We found the drive open, and Kit at his house to welcome us! This gave us a chance to personally thank Kit for welcoming hikers to his well-marked trail system.

To get our blood pumping, we elected to ascend Mt. Zion Major via Mickey's Trail. From the summit we enjoyed the view of the Battlefield and beyond to the north, although to the west Adirondacks stayed concealed by distant clouds. We then descended to the Japanese Gardens, for a repast and a moment of Zen.

After lunch we re-ascended Mt. Zion Minor, where we viewed Kit's gardens below and the Taconic Range to our east and south. No hike here would be complete without a trip to Moot Point, so we proceeded to the trail's southern terminus, where we enjoyed the landscape and took a group picture. After returning to Kit's house we strolled through his fields to the north, for one last view south down the Brittain Brook valley.

While this was the first visit to this spot by some in the group, we are assured they will return and share Kit's special place with friends.

Bald Top Hill, Fairlee

02 May 2009

By Viv & Larry Walter, leaders

We had a good turn out for this trip, despite the drive. Ten people joined us for a trip up the gorge, by some nice waterfalls. It was a bit steep in places, but everyone managed to get through OK. Tom and Larry walked right by a cool, outdoor chime built by a third-grade school class.

The bugs weren't out in force yet, so we could enjoy the steady climb to the summit. You have to walk around some to catch most of the view, mainly to the north, east and west. About the final half-mile is along the ridge which is frequented by ATV's, but none went by on our outing.

Someone had cut out some windfalls on the final climb, so I didn't get to drag Barb and Barry's nice little crosscut over anything. There will be other storms. There's a decent view of Lake Morey off the top of the ridge that Viv and I had not noticed before.

Low Elevation Trail Work

16 May 2009

By Allison Henry, worker

I was in leader Herb's group. Here's a quick run down. First we fixed the sign at the Route 140 parking lot. (Well, Herb fixed it; I provided verbal consultation and moral support). Does anyone know why the railroad spikes at the bottom of the sign post are called "deadmen"? We had some theories but no true conclusions. {Note from

Wayne Krevetski: Allison, they're called deadmen because they're buried in the ground.}

Barb and Dave dug waterbars for the trail going up from the lot while I created a wireless internet for the Village of Wallingford. Don't ask.

Then we drove around to Spring Lake Ranch and dug out the ditches and culverts on the trail between Minerva Hinchey and Patch Hollow. I did some very important investigations on the apple tree in Patch Hollow. Then we returned to the Ranch and Barb sweet-talked a vicious wildebeest so he came over for a photo shoot.

Finally, we drove around to the swinging bridge, and dug out the cables so they won't rust as fast. At least, I think that is why we were doing it. Good news – almost no trash in the Clarendon Gorge area! Someone must've cleaned it up on green up day.

Bird Mountain, Castleton

23 May 2009

By Tom Copps, leader

In spite of threatening skies five of us made the trip up Birdseye on Saturday. Although it was drizzling as we started up and I blindly led us into a patch of virtual rainforest bush, we soon broke out onto a recently proscribed burn area. Jeff, Larry's hiking buddy from the Forest Service in Rochester, said that he had read about it in the Rutland Herald a couple of weeks ago. This is the Bird Mountain Wildlife Management Area and they are trying to improve wildlife habitat. The rest of the trip was top-rate under cloudy but dry skies.

A New Lease on Life for Governor Clement Shelter

Historic Governor Clement Shelter in Shrewsbury, believed to be the oldest shelter still in use on the Long Trail, came perilously close to decommissioning and destruction. Located on a public town road, the shelter had become an attraction for too many drive-up groups who chose to party, often with alcohol and sometimes with firearms. It had become unpleasant, if not actually unsafe, for hikers. The Long Trail Guide advised hikers to avoid staying there.

Governor Clement Shelter, built in 1929

For over a decade the club, working with our partners including the Appalachian Trail Conservancy, the Town of Shrewsbury, the Rutland County Sheriff, and Vermont Department of Forests and Parks, tried various strategies to curtail the undesirable use. Last year the Town Select Board agreed to permit a gate on the road to the shelter. The gate is to be locked during the hiking season but unlocked in winter to allow snowmobile access.

Clement Shelter Road gate. Note boulders on right.

So far, the gate has been successful. We have, therefore, tabled plans to abandon and to demolish the shelter and have resumed major maintenance projects, which had been postponed while the future of the shelter was in serious doubt.

The bunks have been removed temporarily and the unique stone walls of the shelter have been repointed. Planning is underway for new interior furnishings and replacement of rotting rafters.

Outing Reports

Cook Mt., Ticonderoga, NY

24 April 2009

By Allison Henry, leader

This hike was a reschedule from December. Cook Mountain is a small peak in Ticonderoga – part of the Lake George Land Conservancy. The first time I was there, five or six years ago, it was summer time and the peak was grown in. It is best to go when the trees are still bare. This particular day was very hot, the hottest it has been so far this year. I was pleased to have a good-sized group and, as a good leader, I warned everyone about staying hydrated and wearing sunscreen.

The hike starts off on an old road but then turns off the road and becomes a steep climb. Climb we did, with no switchbacks. A few of us had forgotten, but then were reminded, how hot it can be in the woods when there are no leaves on the trees for shade! We agreed that these were better conditions than we would have encountered following the ice storm in December.

After the steep climb, we reached a saddle, and then a less strenuous climb to the peak. The trail winds around most of the rocky summit area, with nice views in all directions, before reaching an overlook, from which we were able to see Lake George and part of Lake Champlain, as well as many of our favorite peaks but from a different angle. We took lots of photos at the summit, including some of People Sitting on Big Rocks, People in

Trees, and Man Who Fell from Tree.

The man who fell from tree --

On the way down, we enjoyed the views of the Lakes and of the town of Ticonderoga even more – we hadn't noticed the views behind us on the way up.

The best part of the hike was our side trip to the Wind Chill Factory on Route 9N in Ticonderoga, which was only a little out of the way on our drive home. Very generous serving sizes. I had a small cone and the soft serve was about 10 inches high, I swear! We also admired some motorcycles parked in the lot. As we were leaving, we saw an interesting teal-colored beetle (the insect, not the car). A little kid then walked by with a giant cone covered in rainbow sprinkles. A member of our party quietly commented that the sprinkles are made of beetle eggs. Luckily the kid did not hear him.

Stratton Pond

5 July 2009

By Sue Thomas, leader

Looking back on the summer of '09 it may seem that the sun never shown and hip-waders were more the footgear of choice than hiking boots . . . gallons of water-proofing were purchased, mold grew on our socks while we were still wearing them, and we all wished EMS would have a sale on zip-off pants in a nice mud-brown color.

So eyebrows were raised when I, the hike scheduler, was blessed with a rare sunny day for my trek to Stratton Pond. Hmm . . . most suspicious! However, it happened, (and I'm not talking) we all benefited and enjoyed our lunch on the sunny shore where one intrepid member even took a dip. A mighty quick one, accompanied by squeals and shrieks, but we who remained on shore are unfit to judge.

Intrepid member in Stratton Pond

After lunch we inspected the work of the resident beavers, who have made the north side of the shore trail their own, cutting off access to their housing complex with a very effective moat to discourage undesirables like ourselves. It worked.

All in all a great hike. If anyone is interested in learning my secret for ensuring a sunny day, I accept cash, checks, and most major credit cards.

Mad Tom Notch, Peru

18 July 2009

By Larry Walter, leader

This version of the usual Walter hike up Mad Tom included a more faithful retracement of the old carriage route, including three fords of the brook near the ruins of the old bridges. As usual, Tom Cops (with his trusty GPS unit) and I recon'd this hike the weekend before, with the aim of getting on top of the main ridge to the south of the brook for a return loop back to the trail head.

The day of the hike brought a good turnout including Burdock, our official trail dog. We parked at the town office and hoofed it up to the trail head from there. The route was a retracement of where we had hiked in January of '08, except we now had the welcome option of crossing at the first bridge site, about one-half mile from the trail head.

Tom and I had previously busied ourselves with cutting out some of the more obstructive stems of trail debris in this next section, while completely missing the ruins of an old boiler off the north side of the trail. The boiler site has a pretty impressive complex of old diversion channels and such, all within easy view of

After wading though crossing number two, to the north side of the brook, we walked along the remains of several impressive stone retaining walls, complete with hand-forged iron support cradles. These improvements and the road were purportedly established by the Equinox Hotel for a tourist buggy route up the creek. Our final crossing to the middle branch brought us to the remnants of an old picnic area where we broke for lunch. There's a decomposing Forest Service sign here with mileage (2 miles?) to Mad Tom Notch.

The trail improves at this point, although it hasn't had any vehicular traffic for quite some time – a good thing. We continued northeasterly up the road about another 2000 feet and then bushwhacked southeasterly to Mad Tom Notch Road, the later a well maintained way. From there we walked the road southerly about a mile, crossing the southerly branch of Mad Tom Brook to where we could bushwhack due west to pick up the top of a said ridge that runs west-southwesterly, paralleling the brook. There are some places where old logging roads provided a pretty good path. Again, no sign of vehicles of any kind.

Jerry managed to find a pretty good overlook from the final high spot before we cut northwesterly down an increasingly sharp spur, working our way past some impressive cliffs. There are some very nice stands of hemlock in this area. Thanks to Tom's GPS, it was easy to retrace our steps until I led us astray at the bottom of the hill, blundering into someone's back yard. Some stealthy side steps brought us back to the bridge over the brook and a quick hike back to the car.

Aside from a minor abrasion up on the ridge, everyone came out pretty much unscathed. Mission accomplished. It was nice to have an RN along (Terri) to bandage up our temporarily hobbled GMC'er.

Tom and I have already schemed on extending our hike further south along Mad Tom Notch road, eventually tying in with a "4wd" road/trail that runs parallel with and southerly of Little Mad Tom Brook. The big problem will be how to get across the Brook to the railroad bed. Stay tuned for more madness (and fun).

Thundering Brook Falls, Killington

2 August 2009

By Sue Thomas, leader

We actually considered an alternative hike, seeing as days of rain had turned this steep, mostly downhill section of the Appalachian Trail north from Sherburne Pass to slime. We decided that we were up to the challenge, though I had a few flashbacks along the way – who remembers the "year of the monsoon" Annual Meeting in Bridgewater several years ago?

I led this same hike in the deluge, with the added anxiety of having a very pregnant woman along. We decided that day that if you have a baby on the trail you are obligated to name it after the nearest shelter. Therefore the areas around Caughnawaga and Melville Nauheim are particularly to be avoided.

This year's discussion was equally interesting. Over lunch at Gifford Woods we compared notes on the many colorful terms we'd heard over the years for . . . "a call to nature", "a separation", "see a man about a dog", "communing with nature", "find a pink (or blue, depending on the gender) tree". I wouldn't be surprised to find whole websites devoted to the subject. My favorite came from a friend who went on an organized trip where they each took their turn with "Mr. Trowel".

Raising the tone a bit, we continued on past the beautiful series of waterfalls and Kent Pond, and ended on the new boardwalk at Thundering Brook Falls, reaching the car just in time to escape the inevitable rain.

Lincoln Gap - Appalachian Gap

A Bitts and Pieces Make-up

6 August 2009

By Steve Williams Leader

As readers of these columns may recall, on 12 October 2008 the Gang of Six (Rich and Lindy Brown, Tom Copps, Alison Henry, Cindy Oas-Kirk and Steve Williams) completed the final 2.6 miles of the Long Trail from North Jay Pass to "Journey's End" at the Canadian Border, having started their quest for the Long Trail two years previously. However, the writer had missed one leg, the 11.3 miles from Lincoln Gap to Appalachian Gap and it was not until 6 August that he managed to accomplish this. In company with his friend and fellow Killington Section member Barbara O'Connor, daughters Nicola Culmo and Sara Jones, grandsons Brian Culmo and William Jones and son-in-law Pete Culmo, Steve left the Lincoln Gap trailhead at 7:50 AM, the group having left home in Pawlet at 5.30 that morning.

The 11.3 mile stretch is typical Long Trail, sometimes smooth, sometimes rocky, periodically steep, sometimes muddy, sometimes dry, and frequently "rooty". The section is notable for having seven peaks, Mount Abraham, Little Abe, Lincoln Peak, Nancy Hanks Peak, Cutts Peak, Mount Ellen and General Stark Mountain (a minimal peak which was passed over without recognition). The section is also notable for having five chairlifts come up to the ridge, two ladders on the descent to simplify tricky pitches, great views over Lake Champlain, across to the White Mountains and north and south over much of the Long Trail territory. Even if not generally agreed to be the best of the 29 legs, it certainly has a claim to be so. The weather was great, some clearing fog in the morning, then periodic sunshine all day long with temperatures in the mid sixties. While everyone else enjoyed the views provided by the clearings at the lift sites the two grandsons enjoyed sitting in ski-lift chairs on every possible occasion. They also introduced some new elements to hiking; Brian by tree climbing and later, after descending the two ladders, ascending the pitches via rocks, roots and trees as a challenge. William by transporting a toad for four miles in his pocket and then claiming its new environment to be superior to its starting point.

The $1 per head sweepstake on the completion time was won by Nicola with an estimated arrival time of 6:29 PM. versus our actual arrival at 6:46 PM.

The completion was celebrated at Appalachian Gap with champagne, followed by dinner at the Bobcat Restaurant in Bristol. The dinner was just fine, though conversation did lag somewhat as a result of the day's efforts.

Steve extends his heartfelt thanks to the other five of the Gang of Six and to all those who joined him on this his final leg.

Prospect Mountain (NY)

Deer Leap (NY)

15 August 2009

By Steve Williams, leader.

This proposed attempt at Prospect Mountain (adjacent to Lake George Village) was a replacement for a scheduled hike last December, which was postponed because the planned date was found to be still within the New York hunting season. Accordingly, Barbara O'Connor and Steve Williams arrived at the advertised meeting place (the Fair Haven Welcome Center) at 8:55 AM expecting one or more cars of cheery Killington Section hikers to join us. Not a one; a situation which still prevailed at 9:35 AM. So, what to do? Repeat our trial run by ourselves? (A bit tedious). Go to Aviation Mall for a retail experience? (Hardly in a true hiking spirit). Visit Starbucks? (Hardly sustainable all day long). Eat an ice cream? (Yes). Hike somewhere else? (Yes).

The ice cream was selected as the first order of business, at Bolton Landing on the way to the selected hike: Deer Leap, an overlook towards the northern end of the lake. However, surprise, surprise. Acquiring an ice cream in Bolton Landing at 10:45 on a sunny Saturday morning in August was by no means easy. The first potential source was only serving breakfast, Ben & Jerry's next door was still closed, and the restaurant next to that only opened at noon. But trusty Stewarts came through, even if short on the style one would have hoped for in Bolton Landing.

The Deer Leap trail is a one-mile spur off the Tongue Mountain Range Trail, starting about half a mile in from the trailhead on route 9N. An easy enough trail through open woodlands with an elevation gain of a few hundred feet. The end point was some slabs at about 400 feet above the lake, opposite Hulett's Landing on the Lake George eastern shore, and within sight of some of the lake's northern islands. In other words, an easy Saturday afternoon ramble with some worthwhile views.

The day concluded with a search for kayak launching spots at the northern end of the lake; four were found, two on the east, two on the west.

Killington Section Directors Meeting

By John Hale, Secretary

The Board of Directors of the Killington Section met on at 6:00 PM on Tuesday, 16 June 2009 at the Midway Diner in Rutland, President Barry Griffith presiding.

Board members present were President Barry Griffith, Vice President Wayne Krevetski, Secretary/Treasurer John Hale, Lynda Hutchins, Gerry Martin, Allison Henry, Herb Ogden, Cynthia Taylor-Miller, and Sue Thomas. Also present was guest Bob Perkins.

The Minutes for the 28 March 2009 Annual Meeting as presented in the May 2009 Smoke & Blazes newsletter, were considered. Bob P. and John H. corrected the Treasurer's Report as presented in the newsletter: 2008 Total Income is correctly stated as $4,632.88 but one income item was left out of the presentation, namely $267.00 received from the EMS Kayak Raffle. In all other respects, the Minutes for the 28 March Annual Meeting were correct and it was moved, seconded and passed unanimously to accept the amended Minutes.

John H. presented the Financial Statements for the period 31 December 2008 to 15 June 2009. Total assets were $25,071.97 including $19,292.36 in certificates of deposit and $5,679.61 in checking accounts. Total income for the period was $1,061.01 consisting primarily of membership dues of $935.75; and total expenditure for the period was $666.56 consisting primarily of newsletter printing and postage. The Financial Statements were approved as presented.

Lynda H. presented reports of the Main Club's Annual Meeting and the most recent Club Director's Meeting. The Annual Meeting was held on 30 May at the new headquarters building, one of the "greenest" buildings in Vermont.

Lynda indicated that departing GMC President Richard Windish reported on the new HQ building completion and the fact that the Club ended the year with a $150,000 profit, the first in five years. Senator Leahy was instrumental in our receiving a $270,000 HUD grant.

Lynda's full reports are available from the Secretary by request.

Herb O. presented the Trails and Shelters Report:

- This summer, the Governor Clement Shelter will have a new roof; and the stonework will be re-pointed/repared (see below). In preparation for the re-pointing, the KS will remove the existing old bunks. There was a general discussion of the configuration of any new bunks.

- Herb requested anyone with KS tools to report them to his inventory efforts.

- Herb reported that the trails in our Section are in the best shape we have seen in five or even ten years, owing primarily to the large number of volunteers in action.

- Herb floated the idea that since Wayne K. is also on the Main Club's Trail Management Committee, he (Herb) be allowed to step down. There was a general murmur of discomfort and the idea was dropped.

- Herb suggested that KS research archives and generate a local trail/club history to be placed on the Club web-site and/or to serve as a part of the KS centenary in 2011 (the Killington Section was formed in 1911.)

Bob P. and Sue T. reported solid, good, and unchanged situations from the Smoke & Blazes Editor and the Outings Director positions respectively.

A proposal for stonework repair at Governor Clement Shelter was discussed. Wayne K. has personally used Steve Morris of Sudbury in a number of stone projects and recommends him. Steve's proposal is for $6,760 for 13 day's work ($520 per day) less four donated days for $2,080, for total labor of $4,680 plus estimated material costs of $353. The overall total cost to us could be as much as $5,033, or less if the job takes less than 13 days.

Considering that the Appalachian Trail Conservancy grant of $3,000 for use on the Clement Shelter has been confirmed, the out-of-pocket cost of this project could approach $2,033. Practically, the stonemason's bill would be presented to the Main Club along with KS's check for any balance over $3,000 and Waterbury would pay the mason, sending also an acknowledgment of the donation.

A general discussion ensued: whether to get a second quote, who should sign the proposal document, the terms of any dollar advance, etc.

A motion was made, seconded and passed unanimously to authorize the expenditure of up to $2,033 at Wayne K.'s decision about which contractor to use of those bidding, to repoint and repair the existing stone wall at the Governor Clement Shelter; the choice of contractor to be made within two weeks.

Gerry M. offered Charles Austin of West Rutland as possible contractor and Herb O. offered the name of George Smith. Gerry and Herb will make the original contacts and direct any interest to Wayne K. who will interview and follow through on the estimate process. It was recognized that the "best" contractor might not be the lowest dollar bidder. In any contract, the only money's advanced will be for the invoiced cost of materials.

In order to save the Section money, Wayne K. offered to cut out the existing bunks with a chain saw and he will also be responsible to posting notices on the trail at significant distances from the shelter to alert hikers to its closing for repairs.

Wayne K. also accepted responsibility for contacting Roy Arthur about replacing the Governor Clement Shelter roof, the expected cost for which is $460. The authorization for this expenditure was approved by the Board at the 10 June 2008 meeting.

It was moved, seconded and passed unanimously that Herb O. should have Section member Larry Walter reset the Section's crosscut saw for a cost of up to $100.

Wayne K. reported on this year's Long Trail Festival to be held at the Vermont State Fairgrounds on 7, 8, and 9 August. Plans are progressing well: this year children's programs will be expanded. Wayne seeks hike leaders for the Sunday and both Allison H. and Herb O. offered their services.

Sue T. reminded everyone that she needs donations for the KS raffle basket for the ATC Conference this summer.

Sue also brought the Cooper Lodge's demolition to mind. She would like to arrange a get-together at the Lodge before it is to be demolished, for Section and Club members, Cooper relatives, etc. with donated food and little cost to the Section. She suggested that the Section might contribute funds in support of those who would find the cost of the $15 round-trip gondola ride onerous. We will discuss this further when a demolition date has been set by the Main Club.

Barry G. set Tuesday 29 September as the next Board meeting date and adjourned the meeting at about 8:30 PM.

Section Workers Put Trail to Bed for Winter and Address the "Foot Bath in the Wilderness" Syndrome

by Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters Chair

On 31 October and 7 November, ten and eleven people respectively turned out to get our trails ready for winter. Waterbars and side ditches were cleared between Patch Hollow and Minerva Hinchey Shelter and between Jungle Junction and Tucker-Johnson Shelter on the Long Trail, between Jungle Junction and the Sinkholes on the Sherburne Pass Trail, and on the entire Bucklin Trail.

With another dozen people or so, we could have completed the job by clearing the waterbars and side ditches between Governor Clement Shelter and Cooper Lodge on the Long Trail, on the lower mile of the Sherburne Pass Trail, and on the Cauty Trail up Blue Ridge Mountain. Even so, this is a better cleanup job than we usually manage.

The crew of Larry Walter, Dave Coppock, and Wayne Flewellig cleared some 70 waterbars and ditches on the Long Trail and the upper Sherburne Pass Trail, besides crosscut sawing out several blowdowns. We also crosscut sawed blowdowns on the Long Trail north of Jungle Junction and on the Bucklin Trail, and we brushed the Bucklin Trail and the Long Trail from Keiffer Rd. to Gould Brook and from US Route 4 to Tucker-Johnson Shelter.

Many bog bridges (sometimes called puncheon) were added. Cindy Miller, Steve Williams, Dave Coppock, and Tom Coppock installed 28 feet of puncheon south of Minerva Hinchey Shelter; Sue Thomas, Tom Copps, Ruth Hare, and Barb Griffith installed 40 feet north of Keiffer Road; and Larry Walter, Ted Molnar and Herb Ogden installed 24 feet north of Cold River Road. That represents twenty green hemlock planks each two and a half inches thick by eight inches wide and between eight and ten feet long and twenty sills to hold them up, each six inches square and three feet long. Thanks to Barb Griffith and Dave Coppock for transporting the lumber and to Spring Lake Ranch for letting us use their road! Except for one plank south of Jungle Junction and two bog bridges not far north of US Route 4, this completes our plan for bog bridging.

Killington Section members installing puncheon

As recently as 2003, there was no bog bridging that was installed by the Section except a few rotten puncheons in the Coolidge Range. Since then, the Section's work parties have installed about 140 feet on the Long Trail, 60 feet on the Cauty Trail, 30 feet on the Sherburne Pass Trail, and 20 feet on the Bucklin Trail. Add to that a substantial length added by the Long Trail Patrol during relocations on Bear Mountain and in the Coolidge Range in 1998, plus later work, and the result is a lot less mud and happier feet.

Thanks to all who made this possible.

OK, folks, you couldn't solve the last one, so I'll make this one easier by referring only to present trails and shelters. Begin at the structure named for a long-time secretary of the Club. Hike in the direction of the only aircraft beacon that is right on our section of the Long Trail. After passing the first old foundation that lies just right of the trail, turn left on the next highway. Take your next left, on an abandoned highway. Cross the Appalachian Trail and continue on the abandoned highway until you reach a paved road. Where the Long Trail crosses the paved road, go south to the next shelter. What river have you crossed?

Green Mountain Trail to Little Rock Pond

9 August 2009

by Allison Henry, leader

A week before the hike, two hiking buddies and I scoped out this trail and had a lovely time. Gorgeous weather, only a little mud, and a nice swim. For some reason I thought this would also lead to a lovely time on the actual date. Not so much. The weather was grey and threatening rain, but a small group still showed up, raring to go. A rendezvous with a newcomer/nonmember in the Mt. Tabor area went as planned, so our little group was rounded out to five.

The Green Mountain Trail going up from Forest Service Road 10 is muddy and overgrown, but still a pleasant climb with a few views here and there. A few miles into the hike, one member of our party, our newcomer, twisted an ankle. He indicated little pain and wanted to go on, so on we went.

The sky was getting darker so we opted to lunch on top of Green Mountain in the trees for some cover, rather than at an overlook. Right as we sat down for a chilly lunch, down came the cold drizzle. To add insult to injury, your leader brought no baked goods due to a very busy week. So we snacked on some Starbursts for dessert. Not even chocolate!

On we went to check out a few of the overlooks above the pond. As we descended the trail down to the pond, over ledges of increasing steepness, our guest's ankle pain worsened. The good news is that despite the drizzle, the trail was still pretty dry and thus not too slippery. We went around the north end of the pond and along the eastern shore, passing few hikers other than a group of arguing, screaming children jumping off the rocks. Even though it was raining I envied them—this Landshark always loves a swim!

Our guest's ankle continued to get worse. He borrowed some hiking poles for support and we also took several rest stops. It was still a long, difficult walk for our injured guy. He kept a good attitude and kept apologizing for holding up our hike, even though we told him apologies were unnecessary. That evening I talked to our guest who was feeling better thanks to some painkillers and help from family in the area.

Silver Lake, Leicester

19 September 2009

by Allison Henry, leader

This hike was originally planned as an overnight with the instruction "contact the leader for details." A few days before the hike, several folks signed on for a day trip only. As for the overnight part, I got a few vague expressions of interest and a few definite responses of "NO" but no serious commitments. So, the pile of backpacking gear in our spare room remained untouched. Finally, the evening before the hike, I learned that several people were in fact interested in spending the night. I looked at the tangle of backpacking gear and said, "Argh." So the hike was renamed a day hike due to the leader's lack of interest in last-minute packing. Lesson learned: if planning a hike requiring an RSVP, give a contact deadline! All went well with the rendezvous and drive to the trailhead, and we had absolutely gorgeous weather. On the way up the trail, we checked out the Falls of Lana, and also took some time to straighten out some rumors regarding several of our members' personal lives (you had to be there). We had a happy, sunny lunch on the beach of Silver Lake. Following lunch, we played an important and much-anticipated game, "Wheeee!" No, that is not a misspelling of a video game console. If you have been to Silver Lake, you have probably seen the channel from Sucker Brook that feeds into the lake—it has concrete walls and fast moving water, with a bridge over it. I take great delight in throwing things over the bridge (sticks, branches, fellow hikers) and saying, "Wheel!" as they shoot the rapids. After this mature and dignified pastime, we followed the trail around the lake. Our forester was able to cut a few small blow downs with his saw collection. Near the end of the lake loop, we stopped for a long break on one of the rock slabs on the lakeshore. While sitting there, we spotted a crayfish sitting on the lake bottom. A very brave hiker picked it up, and found that it was actually two crayfish embracing, one much more lively than the other. What was the explanation for this scenario? Death match? Resuscitation? Or the most obvious, a mating ritual? The crayfish weren't talking. For a finale to our hike, we descended behind the dam and climbed to a view looking west toward Lake Dunmore and the Adirondacks. A few years ago the caretaker at Silver Lake had told us this is one of the best views of Vermont, and I don't think any of us were disappointed on this trip.

Lost Pond Shelter, Mt. Tabor

3 October 2009

by Allison Henry, leader

I chose this hike not only to see the newly rebuilt Lost Pond Shelter, but also to visit Big Branch, which is a great brook. The weather for this trip was a little grey, but the cloudy skies made the oranges and reds in our vibrant foliage even brighter! Our large, friendly group also made the day seem bright. This hike began with an easy climb to Big Branch Shelter, where a few of us had pictures taken in front of a carving on the shelter wall reading, "I Am Here Now." Very confusing, since even though I have a picture of me in front of "I Am Here," now I am here, and not there.

We proceeded one at a time across the Big Branch suspension bridge, carefully heading the sign that says, "Bridge Weight Limit: One person." We reached Lost Pond Shelter and found it still standing. As we ate lunch, it began to pour, and we noted that the shelter would probably last at least a few days because it was so "moist." The shelter is very well built with a high platform and plenty of hooks for hanging gear, as well as a large overhang. Thank you to the Manchester section for their hard work!

As we finished our lunch a southbound section hiker appeared. He happily accepted an offer of fruit, but seemed just as happy to see us go so he could have a little piece and quiet. After lunch, Barb led us on a side trip to find the start of the trail to Lost Pond Bog. We ultimately opted to stick to our original itinerary, but, now we know how to get there! Our return trip to the trailhead was much like our trip in: silly conversations, photos of foliage, and tiptoeing across Big Branch Bridge. Another successful trip!

Saratoga Battlefield, NY

10 October 2009

by Sue Thomas, leader

The Killington Section has always enjoyed combing a good hike with a little history, so we headed down to the Saratoga Battlefield for a little of both. On the way we made a stop at the site where settler Jane McCrea was murdered by Indians and was relieved of her long black/red hair (contemporary accounts differ as to the color, but 4 out of 5 settlers surveyed agreed that she was exceptionally beautiful)

Our next stop was the Phillip Schuyler house in Stillwater where a park ranger gave us an excellent tour. General Burgoyne commandeered Schuyler's country estate and used it as his headquarters during his less than happy battle vacation. They say that fish and houseguests start to stink after 5 days, and he proved to be the worst kind—on leaving, rather than write a nice thank-you note he burned the place to the ground. Kind of puts obnoxious Uncle Ralph who merely spits and hogs the remote into perspective. General Schuyler sent workers up from Albany to salvage the hardware from the rubble and had the house rebuilt in no time. Anyone who has experienced endless delays while renovating the bathroom can't help but be impressed.

We also checked out a small roped-off area on the lawn where a snapping turtle had laid her eggs several months before, and no action had been seen. The rangers had decided they wouldn't hatch at all, but I have since learned from that scholarly source, the Mark Trail comic strip in the Sunday paper, that if laid late in the year they will sometimes go dormant and resume development in the spring. Hopeful news, a blessed event may still occur.

On to the battlefield, where we ate our lunch on the deck enjoying a sweeping view of the valley. The Wilkinson National Recreation Trail took us through the fields and woods where in September of 1777 this pivotal battle of the Revolution took place, with significant sites marked along its four and a half mile length. A highlight is the monument honoring Benedict Arnold's leg, surely one of the world's most bizarre tributes. Arnold was the big hero of the battle, but by the time the monument was erected had landed in the doghouse so his name does not appear anywhere on it—just a depiction of his leg, which was injured in the fighting.

We ourselves unexpectedly came under fire when we emerged from the woods to find an encampment of Redcoats! They fired their muskets and as they charged at us with bayonets drawn, I foolishly expected our brave menfolks to throw themselves in front of us ladies...but alas, chivalry is indeed dead

We got a tour of the camp though and a whiff of some delicious-looking stew cooking over the fire. We were able to make our escape when a troop of boy scouts distracted the soldiers' attention so that we could scurry back to the neutral territory of the parking lot.

On the way home we made one more stop at the graves of Jane McCrea and of Duncan Campbell, a member of the Black Watch killed at Ticonderoga during the French and Indian War and whose ghost is said to walk the ramparts on dark and misty nights.

Cardigan Mountain, NH

17 October 2009

by Sue Thomas, leader

The morning was gloomy and it had snowed in the higher elevations, so enthusiasm for the long drive to New Hampshire to climb Cardigan lagged a bit. Its rocky summit can be treacherous when icy and the cloud cover promised no views as a reward.

Exhibiting more optimism than sense, we decided to go anyway – we had to, I'd made treats. Lo and behold, we passed thru a magic portal at the top of Sherburne Pass; it was a completely different day on the other side. Blue sky and sunshine made the snow-covered mountains beautiful and the climb more appealing.

We took the longer route to the summit (we'd also taken the longer route to New Hampshire, but enough said about that!). This route takes you along the ridge top with gorgeous views and makes the summit, a massive dome of rock topped by a fire tower, look very dramatic and a bit daunting. We hiked thru our first snow of the season, but fortunately the rocks were clear, as it's straight up from the ranger's cabin. Very straight up! But what a view from the summit – we could see the Presidentials, snowy white, and to the west our "home" mountains.

I was glad I'd packed hot chocolate. Even in the sun we got a reminder that winter would be along soon, so haul out your wooly underwear.

Path of Life Garden, Windsor

15 November 2009

by Sue Thomas, leader

Hurricane Ida was not in a very "zen" mood on Saturday, and exuded almost two inches of bad Karma throughout the state. Regarding it as merely another speed bump in the path of life, we rescheduled our annual hunting season trip to Sunday instead.

Nine of us made the trek to Windsor to explore the Path of Life Sculpture Garden on the shores of the Connecticut River. Originally built by a Buddhist colony now gone from the area, it is now being maintained as a public trail.

We picked up a map and explanatory guide and entered the garden by passing thru a tunnel beneath the railroad tracks. From there the trail led us thru many stations, each symbolic of an aspect of life creatively represented by sculpture and constructions made of natural materials.

The path of life of course is never without challenges— our first being a complicated maze constructed of bushes which proved to be surprisingly difficult. We took many wrong turns leading to dead ends, dispatched scouting parties and retraced steps only to find we'd forgotten which routes we'd already tried— it gave us a new appreciation for blazes and made us wish we hadn't left our lunches in the cars! This way and that, we went, completely fuddling Tom's poor GPS unit— I'm sure I heard it whimper.

Finally one of our advance party reached the center and rang the bell! Success! But how fleeting, now we had to find our way back out. Reread previous paragraph.

We continued on to the Tree of Wisdom, spun prayer wheels, and a few took a side trip to explore one of the Connecticut River Canoe Trail campsites.

Huge Easter Island-like faces carved out of charred wood were especially intriguing and I was excited to find Elegant Stinkhorn mushrooms growing around another station. There were bee hives nearby and a sign praising the bees for working for the good of the community without complaint. Hmm I'm not sure all that buzzing doesn't include a grumble or two.

By now we were reaching our later years in the path of life and a much-deserved "respite", consisting of a hammock set in the woods by a burbling brook and a small waterfall. Yes! That's my idea of a reward!

A winding spiral path led us to enlightenment, followed by death and rebirth, then back out thru the tunnel for lunch at the Harpoon Brewery – from the spiritual to the spirits.

After lunch we took a quick hike around Lake Runnemede, and admired the beautiful old houses of Windsor.

Killington Section Directors Meeting

by: John Hale, Secretary

The Killington Section directors met at 6:00 PM on 29 September 2009 at the Midway Diner in Rutland with President Barry Griffith presiding.

Board Members present were: President Barry Griffith, Vice President Wayne Krevetski, Secretary/Treasurer John Hale, Lynda Hutchins, Gerry Martin, Herb Ogden, and Sue Thomas.

Also present were guests Bob and Thelma Perkins

The Minutes for the 16 June 2009, Board Meeting were reviewed. It was moved, seconded and passed unanimously to accept the Minutes as presented.

John H. presented the Financial Statements for the period 12/31/2008 to 9/29/2009: Total Assets $25,346.81 including $19,539.70 in certificates of deposit and $5,807.11 in checking accounts. Total income for the period was $1,628.85 consisting primarily of membership dues of $1,357.25; and total expenditure for the period was $960.56 consisting primarily of newsletter printing and postage. The Financial Statements were approved as presented.

Lynda H. presented reports of the Main Club's recent Director's Meeting:

- Current income for the Main Club is down from last year and the endowment value has been reduced by about $1,000,000. It's the economy.
- Ben Rose announced that the Federal stimulus funds have been received; the amount, $65,000, was processed through the National Forrest Service and is considered sufficient to pay for about two years of Club construction projects.

- The Club Centennial Book is now available for purchase.
- Centennial celebrations are being planned. The actual date on which the Club was formed was March 11, 1910. Separate celebrations are being planned by the Main Club and some of the Sections.
- Six shelters were rebuilt during this 2009 year.
- The Appalachian Trail Conference sponsored by the Club was a success with 910 attendees (and more than 300 volunteers), generating a $17,000 profit for the Club.
- The Club long range financial plan has been completed; the range is from 2011 to 2015.
- The Jay Peak legal action against two felons, who cut trees on Club property, is headed back to court: one perpetrator is contrite and paying his fine; the other is neither and will likely be taken back to court and faces actual time in the penitentiary.

Lynda's full report is available by request of the Secretary.

Herb O. presented the Trails and Shelters Report:

- The Governor Clement Shelter masonry repairs have been completed to everyone's full satisfaction. When the Main Club presents an invoice, Killington Section will pay in the $2,033 previously approved as our share. The locking gate mechanism has proved effective; there has been no vandalism. As to the new roof, it appears that roofing material may be provided by the State of Vermont (according to adopter Roy Arthur) and the snowmobile club is still set to do the roof work yet this fall. The installation of additional bunks in the shelter is under discussion, and, once the design is agreed upon, President Barry G. will poll the Board for approval to buy any extra materials.

- Cooper Lodge is still scheduled for demolition but will not in fact be demolished without significant prior notice.
- The Churchill Scott Shelter. In an arrangement with the City of Rutland, the Killington Section agreed to provide signage about the use of the privy. Herb O. proposed sign wording two years ago to comply with our agreement but the City has yet to respond. Herb will write again to the City to get approval so we can post the appropriate signs.

Herb's full report is available by request of the Secretary.

Sue T. spoke as Outings Director, about the continuing need for hike leaders coming forward earlier in the scheduling process.

Allison H. brought up the question of injuries on Club hikes (by proxy). The subject was discussed at some length. The Main Club carries insurance which extends to each of the Sections. Lynda H. will seek clarification of the insurance policy, its effects, coverage, reporting responsibilities, etc., and also inquire about any "injury policy."

Sue T. and Barry G. mentioned that there is a Leaders Handbook available from the Main Club. Bob P. will write and publish an announcement about the availability of the Leaders Handbook in the next newsletter. Lynda H. will question the Main Club about on-line availability of the Handbook. N.B. Ben Rose, on being contacted about this question, agreed to add this query to the agenda for the next meeting of the Legal, Insurance and Risk Management Committee of the Main Club, which is chaired by Rick Windish; we will be informed of the outcome. This year's Long Trail Festival was a success with about 1,000 people attending. Especially rewarding was the fact that more families and families with children attended this year. Next year's Festival will be held on August 7, 2010.

The EMS Kayak Raffle is to be held this coming weekend, October 2nd, 3rd and 4th. We still need volunteers to host the raffle table. It was suggested and agreed that before next year's raffle, a special "KS Alert!" will be placed in the newsletter, requesting volunteers.

The fall potluck dinner will be held on November 21st this year.

Wayne K. proposed that the Killington Section centennial celebration might be a fund-raiser dinner at the New Long Trail Inn, say on 5 or 6 June, possibly with a silent auction. There was general support from the Board and Wayne agreed to pursue the details to be presented to the Board for final approval. N.B. Ben Rose, in conversation with Kathy Krevetski, gave a positive response to our proposal.

The next Board meeting will be held on Tuesday, 2 February 2010 at the Midway Diner.

President Barry G. closed the meeting at about 8:00 PM.

Remember Herb's poser (rated difficult) from the May S&B wherein he asked for the number of shelters a hiker would pass on his convoluted route? Well, Sue Thomas finally saw through Herb's deviousness and came up with the answer: "None". Was that fair, Herb?

Dale Christie was the first to solve the treasure hunt from the November S&B. The river to be crossed was "Mill River", (also being crossed in the photo above).

Sue and Dale received antique Guide Books and the Kirk Fund received donations in their names.

Outing Reports

The U.H. & D.S.R.R., Mt. Tabor

5 December 2009

by Herb Ogden, Leader

This was probably the only Killington Section hike that followed most of an abandoned railroad. To be sure, we've hiked parts of the Delaware & Hudson Rail Trail in Poultnery, Pawlet and Rupert, and we've followed a little of the lumber railroad on the way to Lye Brook Falls, but those were only small parts of the entire Rutland & Washington Railroad or the Lye Brook lumber railroad respectively. In contrast, this hike took in about 80 per cent of the Emporium Forestry Company's railroad that ran for about 2.5 miles north from a mill in the South End part of Mt. Tabor. It operated from about 1906 to 1916. Locals called it the U.H. & D.S., short for Up Hill and Damned Steep. It used four switchbacks to climb from Otter Creek to the fairly level shelf that skirts the base of the Green Mountains south of Mt. Tabor Village. According to William Gove's chapter in Rails in the North Woods (North Country Books 2nd ed. 1999), it had only one locomotive, a homemade geared machine called the Clyde, and several logging cars. He says only two were used at a time on account of the grade.

We began at South End Road about a tenth of a mile north of where the logging railroad used to cross it, heading due east on a road to a deer camp. We had permission from its owner, William Gaiotti. After several hundred feet, we struck the former railroad at a clearing and headed pretty much north on it. It went through a cut and curved around the edge of the Otter Creek marshes. It was pretty soggy in places until it climbed away from the marsh. Crossing two small brooks, it switched back and headed south, recrossing the same brooks.

At the second switchback, down over the edge of the railbed, I pointed out the frog of an old switch. We pondered why it was left when no ordinary rails remained. We then headed back north, crossing the same two brooks again. We looked for hardware at the third switchback, which ended at another brook, but found none. There was considerable rockwork at the fourth switchback and in a little causeway north of it. We also began to pass stone walls, probably part of what the 1869 Beers Atlas of Rutland County shows as the Foley farm.

A couple hundred feet north of a log landing, we turned west from the old railroad to visit the Baker-Foley Cemetery, where the last burials were from the 1850s. It lies about a hundred feet south of a road that continues on to the public Norse Lodge Road off US 7. We also visited a big cellarhole a couple hundred feet east of the cemetery before returning to the railroad.

The railroad soon diverged from the woodroad that we had followed since the log landing, heading north across a slightly swampy area on a little causeway with side ditches. It crossed yet another brook, followed the woodroad for a little, then headed northeast and apparently ended at a stone loading platform at the base of the mountain. We backtracked the woodroad and followed it north along the east edge of a big swamp and beaver pond. Possibly a logging railroad could have run here, but the railroad aficionados among us opined that it just didn't feel like a former railroad. After crossing another brook, we emerged onto a drivable road that led us down to the village of Mt. Tabor (Brooklyn to us locals). On the way, we passed a small square structure with thick cement walls, a thick cement roof, and an iron door with a lock. I joked that it was an unusually sturdy outhouse.

Actually, according to folks who know Mt. Tabor history, it was built to store blasting powder the CCC used to build Forest Road 10 east to Landgrove. A little farther along was a "two-holer" made of similarly sturdy construction, and soon after that we reached the U. S. Forest Service work camp. By then, what had begun as a snow flurry at the cemetery had turned into a real snowstorm that began to cover the bare ground. Consequently, we decided to use the car I had spotted rather than hike back along a different route.

Merck Forest, Rupert

9 January 2010

by Steve Williams, leader

A recent snowfall, sunshine, and a moderate temperature, (15 to 20 degrees) made the day ideal for a snowshoe ramble. In spite of this, participation was limited. Sue Thomas and Tom Copps from Rutland and Barbara O'Connor and the leader from Pawlet. The route followed Old Town Road and Lodge Road to the track up to the Spruce Peak viewpoint, and then Lodge Road and Gallup Road back to the barns. Snow scenery was great, many snow clusters on shrubs and trees and, for much of the route, virgin snow on the track.

Criteria for a lunch spot were defined as a place with a view, but also out of the wind, not necessarily compatible objectives. The matter was resolved by selecting an open equipment barn on the side of one of the area's large meadows. However, the barn's rafters were home to a large number of doves, most of whom vacated as the group arrived; the remainder then periodically disturbed the peace as they decided that the time had come to move out. For aesthetic reasons the barn floor being covered with snow was definitely a plus.

Bomoseen before the Thaw

23 January 2010

by Sue Thomas, leader

We just squeaked in a last low-elevation snowshoe trip before the January thaw took away all of our beautiful snow. No doubt a different adjective will come to mind after our annual April blizzard, but in January the snow is still welcome, and it provided a canvas for a variety of tracks that day. My, but the little woodland creatures had been busy! Foxes, squirrels, rabbits, deer, fishers, turkeys, grouse, and a variety of little scurrying things kept us busy trying to figure out what they'd been up to.

In some places there were regular varmint highways; in others the tracks ominously stopped a short distance from their hidey-holes. Imagine: you start down the driveway, cup of coffee in paw, to get your morning paper, and ZAP!! Mr. Owl has breakfast. It seems that the paper boy tossing your Rutland Herald in a puddle is not actually the worst way to start your day.

The best find of the day was a number of otter slides, including what was easily the longest one I've ever seen. I think we stumbled on the training track for the Olympic luge.

After lunch al fresco at the "Park Avenue Café" we continued on to pretty Lily Pond and boldly ventured across the ice to inspect some over-ambitious beaver chews. We returned to the cars along the shore of Lake Bomoseen, passing several historic buildings made of native slate, and remnants of quarries and mill operations on the site.

Note: As of this writing the Vancouver Olympics are still in progress. No word yet on the results of the otter luge, but we're rooting for our local athletes.

Gifford Woods, Killington Annual Hot Dog Roast

7 February 2010

by Roma Pulling, leader

On a mostly cloudy and cold [I mean GLACIAL] winter morning we met at the park bundled like Eskimos. After some good-natured banter about the level of intelligence required to start on a morning like that, we headed for Gifford Woods State Park on the mountain, only to encounter another problem. From about Wheelerville Road to Noel's Restaurant, the road was icy and Steve's truck tried to take matters into its own hands and travel from side to side instead of forward. Steve was able to persuade it to stay on the traveled portion of the road, but we saw instances where vehicles had ended up in the ditch.

In order to give the other drivers some input in deciding whether to continue up the mountain or return to Rutland, Steve stopped beside the road. Both other drivers expressed their willingness to continue, and after a short distance road conditions improved. Eight people had left Rutland and five others joined our group for a total 13 at the state park.

Steve loaded all the supplies on his toboggan, secured them with his bungee cords, and with Jerry's help to keep it upright, pulled it to a lean-to named "Cherry." First, the snow had to be shoveled from the outdoor fireplace in order for Steve to start a fire while I set food stuff on the table and Jerry Parker led a group on a short hike on the Appalachian Trail.

The hikers returned about noon for the cookout. Each person had brought hot dogs or sausages and cooked them over the open fire on twigs which Sue had provided for that purpose. Steve boiled water in the club pot so that all those who so desired could have a hot drink courtesy of the Killington Section. The menu was fleshed out with cookies and potato chips donated by the hikers.

When everyone had eaten all they could, it was time to pack up for our return trip. Hooray! The road conditions had improved during our time on the mountain, and we arrived home without further incident.

Senior Shuffle

The Killington Section would like to thank Roma Pulling for her many years of leading the "Senior Shuffle" hikes, along with husband Al. Roma has now retired from the job, but we'd love to keep the tradition going. If anyone is interested in taking over leadership of the "senior Shuffle" (one easy, non-threatening, or slow-paced hike per schedule) please contact hike co-coordinator Sue Thomas at 773-2185. Thanks, again Roma!

The meeting was adjourned at 7:40 PM.

Another Source for Long Trail News and Networking

by Allison Henry

There are several options for those who prefer to get their Long Trail information online. The Green Mountain Club's website is the obvious start. You can also become a "Fan" of the GMC on Facebook or join several other LT-related groups on Facebook. Whiteblaze.net, an internet forum geared primarily toward Appalachian Trail thru-hikers, also has lots of user-provided information about the Long Trail and other trails.

Last spring, a new website, www.longtrailhiking.info was started by a friend of the LT, Joe Figura (trail name Rolling Stone), a self-described "displaced New Englander" who currently resides in Montana). Rolling Stone graciously agreed to an "e-interview" last November. He explained that he started the website to provide a "one stop resource for basic information about thru-hiking the LT and to offer a user-generated online thru hiking companion. In addition we wanted to bring awareness to younger folks about the GMC's mission." The site manager's focus on encouraging us to support the GMC is clear throughout the website. There are links to the official GMC website as well as strategically placed gentle reminders to donate directly to the GMC. Other sections of the website include links to GMC and LT-related events, community members' trail stories, and a whole section describing camping opportunities in Vermont.

When you visit the website, you are greeted by a banner linking to the latest Green Mountain Club news. There is also a description of the Long Trail, its basic history, and the mission of the GMC. The opening page of the site also explains the site's goals as such: "...in conjunction with the Green Mountain Club, we present to you Long Trail Hiking and we hope that this special place on the web will be a stopping point for you as you plan your journey on the Long Trail. And when you're done with your journey, come back, log into the hiker network and post a blog and photos of your trip to share with others."

Longtrailhiking.info is a mix of general trail information as well as interactive forum sections where the reader can access current information and add additional news and updates to help others. First, the "Trail Info" section starts with links to an online version of the GMC's End-to-End Guide. The page linked to the guide once again reminds us that if we find the information helpful, we should donate directly to the GMC or consider buying a copy of the End to End Guide or the waterproof LT map. An individual reading the site, whether a hiker, a local business owner, a trail angel, or simply an interested member of the community, can add comments about changes or updates to Trail-related services and Trail conditions. A subsection of the E2E page is the "Shelter Guide" where recent comments have been posted about shelter repairs, animal activity, and so on. Another feature of the website is the "Web Boards" portion which is a traditional discussion forum, with topics such as "Gear", "End to End Planning", and "Flora and Fauna." Still another section of Longtrailhiking.info is the LT Hiker network. This is a social networking site where the user can create a profile, make "friends" with other users, post pictures, etc. Rolling Stone has indicated that hikers can also create their own trail journals on the site, and trail-related businesses can create a group on the Hiker Network much like has been done on Facebook.

Rolling Stone has not yet completed the whole Long Trail, but has "ambled up and down the Trail," mostly in the southern sections. Both of his two attempts at an End to End of the LT with his teenage daughter were cut short. He has hopes of finishing an End to End trip this summer. He has been doing parts of the AT since 1986 and is planning an AT thru-hike in the near future. Rolling Stone has had some interesting, yet rather familiar experiences while hiking on the LT. On he and his daughter's first day on their first attempt at thru-hiking the Long Trail, right at the Pine Cobble Trailhead, two women staggered out of the woods in front of them and demanded directions to the nearest Dunkin Donuts. They have also been denied a good night's sleep by a woodpecker and a raccoon (on separate nights).

The Longtrailhiking.info site is indeed a "one stop resource" for members of the LT community. Visitors to the site can access current information about LT conditions, link up with other LT hikers, and find details about services in nearby towns, while still being reminded of the importance of supporting the Long Trail ourselves.

Long Trail Festival at Rutland Fair Grounds

By Wayne Krevetski

The Rutland Long Trail Festival, a celebratory gathering to inspire individuals to participate in the outdoors will take place on Saturday, 7 August 2010 at the Vermont State Fair Grounds in Rutland. Admission is free and camping on site is available for $5 per person for the weekend.

The summer 2009 issue of AT Journeys highlighting Rutland City as a trail town and referring to our festival as "an awesome day of festivities, education activities and relaxation geared toward the whole family". Last year Backpacking magazine also cited Rutland as "the best place to raise children as thru-hikers."

Another "Hard Core" volunteer workday is scheduled for Sunday 8 August. In previous years the "Hard Core" crew worked on the Appalachian Trail (AT) Thundering Brook Falls relocation, helped to repair the suspension bridge over Clarendon Gorge, and replaced the roof on Tucker-Johnson Shelter...

Headed up by local musician Phil Henry, the superb talent of Vermont musicians is putting this festival on the map and making it a must stop for hikers and their families as they come through Vermont this summer.

GMC Club Days at the Mall

By Wayne Krevetski

"Mad Hatter" Krevetski at Diamond Run

Again this spring the Killington Section was represented at the EMS Club Days Event at the Diamond Run Mall. Thanks to Tom Copps, Allison Henry, Wayne Krevetski, and Cindy Taylor-Miller, the section was able to get the word out about the Long Trail and the Green Mountain Club. Though traffic at the Mall was low do to the great spring weather outside, a good number of people stopped at our table to look at the display and get information on the club and membership.

As a side issue the section also received $84.00 in donations from people shopping at EMS during the event. Thanks again to those that could help out and keep an eye out for future information about the Fall Club Day event.

Gov. Clement Shelter Restoration

By Herb Ogden

Early in May, Wayne "Mad Hatter" Krevetski, his sons Sean and Devin, and Cindy Taylor-Miller (Ms. Gorp) built a beautiful new sleeping platform at Gov. Clement Shelter. It is level, its height is just right for sitting on the edge, and it lightens up the space greatly.

The old double deck bunks had been removed so the mason could restore the stonework last fall. The bottom bunks, at least, dated back to around 1965. They were hardware cloth, installed by my father. When the hardware cloth developed holes, they were boarded over. The upper bunk was at an uncomfortable slant and had little headroom. Good riddance! We will add upper bunks only if the demand is present. The restoration of this historic shelter will be finished once Shelter Adopter Roy Arthur and his snowmobile club crew replace the roof shingles.

Thanks again to the Town of Shrewsbury for turning the road into a legal trail so a locked gate could prevent the rowdy parties and vandalism that had made staying at Gov. Clement a chancy business and had put the shelter on the path to demolition. Now it's a real gem.

Photos from the Past

One day in 1972 the late Robert West, prominent Rutland lawyer and legislator, was cleaning out his basement at 65 Center Street in Rutland preparatory to selling the building. He ran across two wooden boxes, which he donated to the Rutland Historical Society.

The boxes contained nearly one hundred 3-by-4-inch glass slides with photographs from the early days of the Green Mountain Club and the Long Trail. We don't know who originally collected these pictures, but it can be no coincidence that prior to 1977 the office of the Green Mountain Club was in Rutland and, for a time, next door at 63 Center Street. The slides remained at the Rutland Historical Society, unknown to many, until recently when they were converted into a half-hour program on a modern digital medium for more convenient viewing.

The premier showing is scheduled for the Killington Section Centennial Celebration at the Inn at Long Trail on 5 June with future showings on Historically Speaking, the Historical Society's program on PEG Channel 15, on Wednesdays at 4:00 PM, Thursdays at 1:30 PM, and Fridays at 7:30 PM through most of June..

Killington Section Directors Meet

By Allison Henry, Secretary

The Killington Section Annual Meeting was held on 27 March 2010 at the First Lutheran Church following our potluck dinner, led by President Barry Griffith. Board members in attendance were: Barry Griffith, President; Lynda Hutchins, Delegate to Main Club; and directors Gerry Martin, Cindy Taylor-Miller, Sue Thomas, and Allison Henry; also about 20 members of the Section. Absent Board members were: John Hale, Wayne Krevetski, and Herb Ogden.

Barry reminded us that the Green Mountain Club was formed in 1910 and the Killington Section was likely formed in 1911. Barry also reviewed the section by-laws, noting that later in the meeting we'd be electing three new directors, as three current board members would not be eligible for re-election having served two consecutive 3-year terms.

On behalf of Secretary/Treasurer John Hale, Barry referred to minutes from the 2009 Annual meeting, and it was passed to accept the minutes as presented. Reference was made to the Treasurer's report for 2009, as published in the most recent Smoke & Blazes. Upon motion, these were also accepted as presented.

Lynda Hutchins reviewed her Main Club report from the last General Meeting taking place on 21 March 2010, with the following highlights. See Lynda for more details.

- The Main Club is in the "black." Merchandise sales are under budget, but ahead of last year. The 2009 Appalachian Trail Conservancy annual meeting at Castleton brought in some income. The cost for salaries has gone up six to seven percent due to an "active field season," but much of this comes from federal stimulus money. -At GMC's 100th birthday party celebration in Burlington on 11 March, a skit was presented showing the history of the club. Steve Williams was in the skit as Ambassador Bryce, having been recruited for his fine British accent! You can visit YouTube to view the performance.

- The club is continuously working on improving its online presence to connect with members and potential members who prefer the Internet to paper communications. A new software program is in progress.

- Congratulations to us—resolutions were passed at both the State and Federal level praising GMC's stewardship of the Trail. Dick Krompegal and Tom Simmons were recognized by the Main Club for service.

- The Main Club's new budget is 1.5 million dollars, up from the past two years. Stimulus money is still available, and they are anticipating another "active field season."

- Publications updates: A new waterproof map of the Camel's Hump area is now available. This is smaller than the official Waterproof Long Trail Map but similar in design. The Day Hiker's Guide to Vermont is being revamped. They are taking out the "Rambles" section, as short walks will now be addressed in an upcoming Walker's Guide. The new edition of the Day Hiker's Guide will also include more loop hikes that connect with part of the Long Trail. The Section Leader's Handbook is also being revised.

- The club now has a new insurance policy which has better coverage.

- A relay hike of the Long Trail is being planned for July and August as part of the Centennial. Lynda emphasizes that we must contact Ben Rose directly if we wish to participate. More information is available on the Club's website.

Minutes from the 23 February 2010 Directors' Meeting were presented briefly by President Griffith on behalf of Secretary/Treasurer John Hale.

Highlights from Trails and Shelters, also presented by Barry Griffith.

- There will be a Trail relocation in the Shrewsbury area to avoid a bog. This was even in the "Legal Notices" section of the Rutland Herald.

- We still need a bridge for the Gould Brook crossing between the Cold River Roads. There is still a possibility of this project getting taken on by volunteers from General Electric.

- The stonework at Governor Clement Shelter is completed. Bunks will be added on 1 May. The shelter adopter is doing roof repairs; shingles provided by the state.

- We are considering possible improvements near the Cold River Road and on the Bucklin Trail to reduce erosion.

- Barb Griffith gave compliments to Tom Shanahan for putting big rocks in Gould Brook, making the crossing much easier.

Smoke & Blazes update from Bob Perkins: Always looking for contributions, hike write-ups, and articles.

Outings report from Sue Thomas: Will be working on next schedule in May. Leaders are always welcome. Please call me!

Volunteer opportunities this spring: EMS Club Days 23/24 April (sit at a table at the mall and try to convince people to become a member in order to receive the Club Days discount); Booth at the Sunshine Daydream Festival at Killington on 17 April.

A question was raised about getting our outing schedule onto the online calendar at the Main Club's website. While our schedule printings do not coincide with the printings of the Long Trail News, the online calendar might be updated more frequently. Barry or Bob will investigate.

Upcoming Centennial celebration events were reviewed by President Griffith; refer to the front page of the February 2010 S&B or to the main club's website for details. The Killington Section will be hosting a party at the Inn at Long Trail on June 5th, National Trails Day. Ben Rose will be the guest speaker, and Killington Section Friend and Spouse Phil Henry will be the musical guest. It will be a buffet-style dinner, and the tagline for the event is "closer, cheaper, better entertainment." Other upcoming events were noted: the Main Club Annual Meeting on 22 May and the Long Trail Festival on 7 August.

Election of New Directors

Barry expressed the Section's thanks to the three outgoing directors: to John Hale for his service as Secretary/Treasurer, (as well as another thank you to Al and Roma Pulling for their past service), to Cindy Taylor-Miller for contributing experience and wisdom, and to Lynda Hutchens, our liaison to the Main Club. Lynda is not eligible for re-election as a director but the bylaws do not state the liaison must be a director.

Four members were nominated for the three directorships to be filled: Viv Bebee by Sue Thomas; Steve Williams by Chryl Martin; Tom Copps by Steve Williams; Chryl Martin by Allison Henry. Chryl respectfully declined the nomination, and moved that the nominations cease and that we elect the slate of three candidates. Barb Griffith seconded Chryl's motions, making Viv, Tom, and Steve our new Directors to join continuing directors Barry, Wayne, Sue, Allison, Herb, and Gerry.

A brief Director's meeting was held to appoint officers. Barry Griffith and Wayne Krevetski will remain as President and Vice President, Allison Henry was appointed Secretary; Gerry Martin was appointed Treasurer, and Lynda Hutchins will continue as our Delegate to the Main Club with Allison Henry as alternate.

The-meeting adjourned at about 7:40 PM.

Also early in May, Sector Checkers Cindy Taylor-Miller, Steve Williams and Barbara O'Connell, Connie Youngstrom, Barbara and Barry Griffith, and Viv Beebe were out checking their sectors of the Long Trail and reporting what work was needed where. As a result, the 14 May Lowland Work Parties were successful. On a beautiful spring day, a dozen people cleared brush, dug out waterbars and side ditches, and sawed branches and blowdowns from Wallingford Gulf to about a mile north of Gov. Clement Shelter. Except for a few wet spots, this entire trail is now in good to excellent condition.

Some of the wet spots north and south of the Lottery Road in Shrewsbury probably will be avoided by relocations soon. GMC Director of Field Programs and a small Killington Section contingent walked my proposed relocations early in May. Depending on U. S. Forest Service approval, the trail south of Lottery Rd. will head north along the road, cross a small brook, and cross a small wet area on bog bridging before heading south through pleasant, dry woods to join the present route before it heads up Beacon Hill. This will avoid the perennial mud wallow along the edge of the cow pasture. To the north of the Lottery Road, roughly between Hermit Spring and the height of land, the trail would run slightly west of the present route and use a switchback to moderate the grade. This would avoid the wet area south of and along the brook that flows into the swamp.

Trails & Shelters Co-Chair Wayne Krevetski and I have heard of considerable winter damage to the trail in the Coolidge Range, so we hope for a good number of volunteers on National Trails Day, 5 June, to put that piece of the trail back in good condition.

Outing Reports

Boiling Springs, Chittenden

20 June 2009

By Barb Griffith

For years Barry and I have been looking for Boiling Springs in Chittenden. People would casually say, "Oh, So and So used to know how to find the springs." We made several forays in with topo maps, compass, and GPS unit. We wandered hither and yonder (more yonder than I wanted to do). We could see it on the map, but it remained elusive trip after trip after trip in. Then one day we were chatting with friend Jim Moore, who said he had just hiked up Carmel and had stopped in at Boiling Springs to refresh himself. So once again, Barry and I went in search – this time with "perfect" directions from one who had just been there. But, alas, it was not to be. Upon our return home that day, we called Jim. He promised to help us out on hike day, to help us finally find what was lost to us.

It was a perfect day to be out hiking, not too buggy, not too warm. Parking cars at the Mountain Top Inn lot, we began our adventure. One walks in on old roads, past cellar holes of an old village. We paused at the cemetery in "Old Boston". There is not much climbing at all on this route, and the road is easy to walk. There are a series of intersecting roads, but we managed to head along with maps. (After all Barry and I had almost been here lots of times!)

As we neared our destination, a series of "Burma Shave" signs started to show up, encouraging the group. The last sign said, "Give a hoot after the bridge". We passed a tree with "BS" carved into it – the same tree that Barry and I had passed several times before. I thought it was someone's initials, but what do you know? It was a marker for Boiling Springs!! Well, we all gave a "hoot," and a "hoot" was returned from down in the woods. Climbing down we arrived at our destination, with the springs indeed boiling and roiling. Barb decided she had to feel the effects of the swirling water and bubbling sand, so she carefully (?) waded in. It felt like quicksand. Soon after, as we settled down to lunch, Jim told stories of his decades of trips in to the site. According to Jim, the springs are the headwaters of the Proctor water supply. (Now he tells the wader!)

Barb Griffith Testing the Waters

After our spring-side feast, the return trip was uneventful. Tom and Allison did discover a mouse nest in a Mountain Top Inn XC Trail sign-in register and were enraptured with all the wee little ones. They were so cute – the mice, that is.

Poultney River, West Haven

25 July 2009

Barb & Barry Griffith, leaders

As summer 2010 fast approaches and we contemplate putting this paddle on the schedule again, I want to remember to let everyone know about the POISON IVY! In 2009 it was thick and everywhere at the parking area where we put the kayaks in. I ended up with poison ivy on my legs and fingers, and am sure that others must have as well. Therefore, if we do the paddle again, everyone should wear tall socks and gloves until we are waterborne! If someone has another idea, let me know, as I am up for more input!

This is a nice gentle paddle. Even with all the rain and the water being high, this river is still navigable. The put-in is a bit of a steep pitch down a muddy bank (after dragging through poison ivy!) When we did this paddle in 2008, it took us forever to paddle down the river. The water was low, and thunderstorms threatened later in the day. We learned from the Nature Conservancy (they own the land along most of this paddle) that when the water is low there is back flow from Lake Champlain and indeed the current becomes more stagnant as one approaches the mouth of the river. So one's waterway downstream becomes another's upstream. (Does this make sense?)

On this day, the trip was fast. We managed to drag out for a muddy lunch spot. A cemetery was pointed out on a knoll. This being rattlesnake country, no one wanted to venture into the overgrown field. There were numerous water birds along the way. The riverbanks were lined with cottonwood and silver maples. As one paddles along downstream New York is on your left and Vermont on your right. You put in on the New York State side and take out in Vermont, near the Galick Farm. This section of the Poultney River is a pleasant paddle, and we recommend it.

Otter Creek Paddle, Wallingford

30 August 2009

By Barbara Griffith, leader

High waters of the summer 2009 made this a quick trip (or quicker than in past years). The "stringers" that one usually has to portage around or climb over in Otter Creek were virtually nonexistent – or at least underwater or washed away. For this trip we convened in the Diamond Run Mall parking lot, and proceeded to the "put in" site on the Creek Road in Wallingford. The site I like to start at is about 2 miles south of the intersection of Walker Mountain Road and Creek Road. The kayaks were unloaded, and most of the vehicles were spotted at our journey's end by the bridge that spans Otter Creek on the Alfrecha Road in Clarendon.

This peaceful trip meanders through farm country. At one point, the river almost bends back on itself. One mostly had only to steer, as the current carried us steadily along. There came a time when we kept looking for favorite "sand banks" to lunch upon. However, none showed up. We then realized that they were all under water! Hunger finally drove us to find a respite area to dine. It was buggy, and the stinging nettles kept us locked in to a small area.

Reloading, we continued on. We enjoyed watching the cows, the herons, and the various other water fowl, until the bridge loomed into site. To be truthful, my arms were tired and I was ready to disembark. Every time I have done this trip, it has been different. 2010? We will see.

End Note: I was concerned when a Mom showed up with her 4-year-old child for this trip. I tried to discourage them from coming, as the water was high and swift. Nevertheless, they persevered, came, and appeared to enjoy the long trip. Always remember, however, that as an outing leader you have the right – and the obligation – to question anyone about having the proper gear and ability for an excursion.

Shrewsbury Peak Loop

12 September 2009

By Barb Griffith, co-leader

This group of seven started out early in the morning, spotting cars on the Gilman Road, which is off the Upper Cold River Road, and then driving to the Black Swamp trailhead on the CCC Road in Plymouth. We enjoyed a nice stroll up the gated old logging road (gated due to the black bear habitat) to the base of Shrewsbury Peak, where we started our climb. The weather was wet, as it had been all summer. However, this crew was prepared with appropriate rain gear and plenty of enthusiasm. The rain may have dampened the trail, but our spirits were high and dry! This is an easy trail to access the 3737-foot Peak of Shrewsbury. At the junction of the Black Swamp and Shrewsbury Peak Trails there was some debate about whether to climb the last few hundred feet to the top, as there would be no view in all the cloud cover. However, since it was there and we were there, to the top we climbed. The clouds were thick and cold (at 2 miles from the trail head).

We returned to the junction, and headed north toward Little Killington. This part of the trail was like walking through the forest primeval with thick undergrowth, slippery underfooting, and evergreens stunted by the altitude. One follows the trail down into a saddle between Shrewsbury and Little Killington. Part way down we decided to pause and have lunch (one thing this group does well) amongst the dense vegetation. Fortified with food, we forged ahead. It was great to have a blazed trail, as visibility was not the best. In fact, it was difficult to keep the entire group in sight. Reaching the saddle (at 3.2 miles) we began the climb up to the junction with the Long Trail on Little Killington.

We reached the junction a bit wet and tiring (at about 4.2 miles). Now it was all downhill to Governor Clement Shelter. We had the pleasure of walking across the new bog-bridging that had been put in last spring, and marveled at the construction. We could see how necessary it had been – especially with such a wet summer. Arriving at the Gov, we appreciated all the new masonry work that had been done to the shelter (at 6.8 miles). Finally arriving at the spotted vehicles, we acknowledged a great day outside with friends.

Spring Lake Loop, Shrewsbury

20 December 2009

By Barb & Barry Griffith, leaders

The snow did not deter folks for this snowshoe, ski, and walk. Several enthusiastic souls met at "The Olde Barn" in Cuttingsville. We drove from there to the Spring Lake Road, ascending past Spring Lake Ranch to the nicely maintained parking area. On the way we passed a motorist deeply mired in a ditch by the Sugar House – and discovered it was one of our crew! We all stopped to assist, but despite our efforts, we were unable to push or pull the vehicle out of the ditch. We decided to leave the vehicle, and tackle its extraction after the hike. Loading passengers back in, everyone proceeded to the trailhead.

This trail is well maintained, and circles around Spring Lake. New snowshoes had to be readjusted along the way. Some decided to snowshoe, others skied, and some walked a bit (although for the walkers, post holing occurred further along when the snow became deeper and the trail less packed). It was COLD.

When we arrived at the outlet of Spring Lake, it was so pretty to look out across the frozen pond. Onwards around to the west side and heading south we came upon a "kill site," where Jerry tried to determine and inform us what had eaten what. There was much speculation as to what had taken place. It was an interesting lesson in survival of the fittest. Continuing on, we snagged the Long Trail in a bit. We followed it to Minerva Hinchey Shelter, and then took the farm road back to our vehicles. We agreed that being in the protection of the woods had prevented us from exposure to extreme cold of the day. All returned home to warm up.

Addendum: The vehicle was successfully extricated from the ditch before the end of the day.

The Ball, Arlington

20 February 2010

By Larry Walter, leader

I'm at fault for originally advertising this little jaunt as a difficult 8 miler up the side of the Little Mad Tom drainage. Operating on an assumption that blazed trails actually go somewhere, Jeff Harvey and I recon'd the hike in November and found that the blazes disappeared about 15 minutes out of the drainage and that the terrain was a little scary on the return trip (we took a short cut – bad idea.). That's when I thought "Hey! I'll drag, (or lead) everyone up onto a really cool section of the Taconic Range, just south of Arlington". This 800-acre parcel (currently owned by Mettawee Timber and Plastics) is under consideration for purchase by the USFS and basically encompasses the eastern flank of Spruce Peak and most of the drainage of Dry Brook.

Tom Copps, Jeff Harvey and I scouted the trail a week early, which was a good thing, because we missed a turn and ended up hiking straight up the south side of Grass Mountain (3100 feet). The view was OK, but not spectacular. On the return trip, we thought, Gee, that ridge over to The Ball (aka, Ball Mountain) looks like an easy hike from a saddle we were going through anyway. I had heard from some folks at the Arlington Town Office that the views were great from The Ball, as well as from the ridge leading up. So it was settled.

A handful of hard-core GMC'ers showed up (Linda H., Gene, Peter G. and Tom C.), expecting a grueling trek up the eastern flank of the Greens. In contrast, the trip up to The Ball is entirely on old logging roads and ATV trails, most of moderate grade. I expected to see some snowmobiles up there, but we were breaking trail the whole way. This would be a great ski run, but you'd have to get permission from the abutting owners. I can help with contacts, if you're interested.

After reaching a main saddle between Grass Mountain and The Ball, the remainder of the hike is along a nice ridge line to the east that gets increasingly sharp, eventually yielding nice views to the north past Equinox and northwesterly down onto Route 30. A short distance from the summit, there's a very nice lunch spot with a 180-degree view to the south. We decided to bushwhack southeasterly back down to Dry Brook Road, but would not recommend the same for future trips. It's steep and rocky. A return trip on the ridge and logging roads would probably yield about a 6-mile hike with roughly 1700 feet of elevation gain. Sans the bushwhack, I'd rate it as a moderate to difficult, depending on how much snow's on the ground. I will definitely lead another hike or snowshoe to this peak, perhaps with a car spot to the northeast of the summit.

Silver Lake, Leicester

3 April 2010

By Sue Thomas, leader

Mother Nature turned the heat up on 3 April and gave us a preview of the summer to come. We gazed longingly at the patch of ice still visible in the middle of the lake as we sat perched on the rock retaining wall, all that was left of the old Silver Lake Hotel. At least that was what I'd always thought. Fortunately on this trip we were in the hands of historian Bill Powers, author of Silver Lake, Beyond the Myths, who showed us many things I'd never noticed on countless visits to the area.

For instance, the stone footprint of the hotel can still be found, if you know where to look, as well as the spring that supplied drinking water. Perhaps the most curious relic is a large mound on the property where, we were delighted to learn, the faithful who had taken "the pledge" buried all alcohol and tobacco products and marked the spot with a stone obelisk. As we enjoyed our lunch on the lake shore, Bill shared several scrapbooks of wonderful old photos and postcards he has collected of the hotel in its heyday.

After lunch he led us along the penstock to an open view of Lake Dunmore, then surprised us all with an added walk out to the surge tank, a tall, thin tower that none of us had noticed before.

On the way back down we stopped to read the names and wedding dates of early settlers in the area carved into a rock beneath the penstock where they were easily overlooked. But Bill was saving the best for last. On a boulder near the parking lot, unnoticed many times before, is a long inscription dedicated to "Aunt Jenny", who ran a tea room at the site. "Everything I am I owe to my mother" her son had carved unto the stone.

Many thanks to Bill for spending the day with us and sharing his wealth of information about beautiful Silver Lake.

Centennial Relay Visits Killington Section

Perhaps the most appropriate of the several events commemorating the 100th anniversary of the 1910 founding of the Green Mountain Club was the Centennial Relay. In relay style, groups of enthusiasts day-hiked the Long Trail from end to end. Starting at the Massachusetts line, each group spent a day hiking its assigned section of the Trail. Then, in lieu of a baton, Prickles the porcupine was passed on to the next group to the north for its day hike. All the way to Canada.

Prickles was joined by several of our members as she passed through the Killington Section on 26 July on the way to earning her End-to-End patch. (See story, page 4.)

The Pitch at Pitch Pine Point

[A few Vermont places were named for significant or interesting events. Mt. Independence and Runaway Pond come to mind – and maybe Ticklenaked Pond. Today we report on the reverse situation. The place name triggered the event.]

The people in our party plodded up the primitive path to the peak where we paused to enjoy the pristine panorama and to partake of the provisions from our packs. The pinnacle's name, Pitch Pine Point, prompted playful President Barry to propose and promote a postprandial pastime in which he would play the part of pitcher. Perkins was pleased to proffer his prized possession, a primitive pedestrian pole. Larry presumed to participate and promptly positioned himself at the plate.

Prexy picked up a pine cone and prepared for his primary pitch. A perfectly placed pitch. A powerful swing. And POW! The projectile, in its parabolic path, passed over the precipice. But Perk's pole parted and was now in a pair of pieces.

P.S. Presently Larry, as penance for his performance, professionally produced, and presented to Perk, a proprietary, personalized, pedestrian pole. Please peruse picture to port.

Outing Reports

Brooklyn Bridge, New York, NY

21 March, 2010

By Barbara O'Connor &

Steve Williams, co-leaders

The Killington Section spring expedition to the Big Apple elected to include at least an easy hike amongst its activities and selected the Brooklyn Bridge as being ideal for the occasion. Once the rabbit warren beneath Grand Central had been mastered, the trip to the trailhead adjacent to the City Hall MTA stop, via the Lexington Avenue Train 6, was uneventful. After crossing just one street, there stretched the bridge walkway/cycle path, centrally located between and above the two roadways, some 1.13 miles long.

A few other statistics on the bridge:

- Original designer, appointed 1867, John Roebling, died 1869 from a bridge related injury.
- Successor, son Washington Roebling, incapacitated by "bends", communicated via wife Emily.
- Construction 1870-1883.
- Height above high water: towers 276 feet, roadway 135 feet.
- At time of construction: 50 percent longer than any previous suspension bridge.

(For more details than you ever wished to know, Google "Brooklyn Bridge Facts and Information").

While on land the pathway is blacktop, once over water it becomes easily walked planking. Views of both uptown and downtown immediately appear, the latter being particularly spectacular because of the proximity of the Financial District. The Statue of Liberty and the Verrazano Narrows Bridge then come into view. There is a pedestrian traffic circle at each tower, one of which contains raised copper sketches of the means of construction and other historic data. Just two events stand out from the very refreshing one hour walk and its aftermath: having our picture taken with some Korean tourists who seemed to want to demonstrate their contacts in the USA, and, at the end of the bridge, finding the highly commended Brooklyn Ice Cream Factory, located almost directly beneath the bridge.

In conclusion, a word of warning for those attempting to return from the Borough Hall MTA Station on a Sunday, as we did. Read the fine print on notices scattered around the Station, otherwise you may just find, after walking for some ten minutes amongst the seven lines that intersect there, that "Trains 4 & 5 will today be replaced by a J Train to be found on the platforms normally used by X & Y trains at the far end of the green concourse etc." And good luck!

[Smoke & Blazes is always glad to receive and publish "Outing Reports" that go beyond trips listed in the official schedule. Obviously Barbara and Steve have grasped the essence of our customary report formats. Ed.]

Natural Bridge, Dorset

24 April 2010

By Sue Thomas, leader

I'd warned everyone that this was a trail that wasted no time in the ascent. Nearly vertical is a rude awakening to the hiking season, but hey, with such a wonder as a natural bridge for a reward it would be worth it, right?

As we paused at the top of the ridge to catch our breath and place our hearts back in our chests, I felt it was time for the disclaimer. As natural bridges go, our humble Vermont version would not take the breath away – in any case the climb had already accomplished that. In fact, anyone who has visited the Southwest would likely find this one a bit of a yawn, so I cautioned everyone to keep disparaging comments to themselves so as not to hurt its feelings, and we proceeded on for lunch beside the natural wonder. Brownies were administered to help make up for the lack of grandeur.

If the bridge itself does not inspire awe, the bushwhack back along the streambed absolutely does. The stream follows a vein of marble all the way down to where we were treated to spectacular waterfalls, mini-gorges and places marble in white, pink, and green was smoothed and swirled by the water.

We enjoyed a second round of brownies by the shore of Emerald Lake, a great end to the day. And the less said about the Great Peep Race of 2010, the better.

Crown Point Road, Wethersfield

19 June 2010

By Barb & Barry Griffith, leaders

The Crown Point Road was originally marked and cut in 1759, to get people and provisions from the Connecticut River to Lake Champlain. In the years that followed, the Road served untold travelers and settlers. When we learned that folks from Weathersfield had blazed a hiking trail on the old Road in these parts, we decided to bring the Killington Section to check it out. We had originally scheduled this lower elevation hike for April, to keep us off the wet higher trails. We had to postpone that outing due to inclement weather, and rescheduled it for June.

Vehicle spotting was the first order of business. We placed Jerry's vehicle in the middle to rescue Burdock, if the day proved too hot for him. He was glad we did. Then we all gathered on the Greenbush

Road in Cavendish, near the old Paine Tavern. We crossed the remains of an old stone bridge, and headed south into the woods. Yellow blazes guided our way as we crossed a stone wall marking the Weathersfield town line, finding the remains of an old cellar hole on our left. After stopping for lunch, we descended the trail to another CPR marker on Route 131.

The next part of our walk was along present day highways through Amsden. Of historical interest along the way was an original (?) stone Road marker engraved "CP 1760 MILE XI" to indicate that it was 11 miles from Fort No. 4 in Charlestown, N.H. More interesting to some was a yard sale we walked past on Route 106. This is the first time we can recall hiking past one of these on a Killington Section outing. A number of items were purchased. Perhaps we should look for potential yard sale locations when scheduling future outings!

We continued south on Branch Brook Road – now a dead end road. About fifty years ago, a flood control dam was built on Branch Brook south of here. That dam created Stoughton Pond, and altered the terrain above it. We again entered the woods, following the yellow blazes. We passed another old stone road marker, this one crudely lettered "1759 10 M CAMP." The blazes soon brought us to the bank of Branch Brook. We located the yellow marks on the other side, took off our boots, and waded in. This would have been a challenge in April, when the stream was swollen and the water frigid. Today, it was a pleasant way to cool our feet.

A steep but short scramble up the slope on the east side of the Brook brought us to an abandoned roadway. After walking on this road for a time, we followed the blazes across a small rivulet and up a slope.

Here we found the abutting Plain and Grout Cemeteries, and our awaiting vehicles. We inspected old stones marking patriot graves, and returned home.

Tinmouth Gulf

26 June 2010

By Herb Ogden, leader

A rising chance of showers was forecast for the afternoon, but the morning dawned sunny, and nine of us decided to explore the wilds of southwest Tinmouth. We began at the south junction of the Upper and Lower Gulf Roads. South of that point, the Gulf Road becomes Class 4 and is chancy for normal vehicles. Making a less than obvious turn to the southeast, we hiked through the corner of a hayfield and entered the woods. After passing through a mossy stone wall, we climbed over a blowdown with really interesting funguses that had a sort of leg attaching them to the trunk. This fairly level stretch of old woodroad ended at a turn to the east, where a short bushwhack to the west led to a view over Tinmouth Gulf.

At this point we discussed the difference between Gulfs, Notches, Passes, Gaps, Tunnels, and Dungeons. Without consulting Webster's, I think we concluded that a gulf in northern New England is a narrow valley leading from one more open area to another, usually if not always with considerably different elevations. In contrast, a pass or gap is a low place on a ridge that allows traffic to pass from one side of the mountains to the other. A notch is like a pass or gap except deeper. A tunnel is a narrow valley with steep sides that gives the feeling of being enclosed when the leaves are out. A dungeon seems to be more or less the same thing, but perhaps the feeling of being enclosed comes more from the denseness of the forest and less from the steepness of the valley's sides. Now, please write in and disagree! And tell us if you know of other mountain terms used in Vermont.

Hiking up a side valley from the gulf, we crossed its brook at a pretty waterfall. Farther up, the road became a mudhole and then a pond for several hundred feet. It's hard to believe local folks say normal cars could drive this far in the 1920s or 30s. Respite came when we struck a continuation of Tinmouth Town Highway 16, a north-south road that some say used to be a highway all the way down to Danby. This is now both a snowmobile trail and a Tinmouth Town Recreation Trail through an area owned by the town and subject to conservation easements. Following this road south, we passed some sort of man-made stone structure just east of the road. Aside from the road itself, this was the last manmade thing we saw till we passed a modern cabin on the slope down toward Purchase Brook. Meanwhile, before the final climb over an unnamed mountain between The Purchase and Tinmouth Peak, we had lunch at a log landing where the Tinmouth trail went east at a less than obvious turn. Rain began then and continued for most of the rest of the hike. So much for "chance of showers"! Navigating several more less than obvious turns with the help of my GPS, we eventually crossed Purchase Brook at another less than obvious turn and, by a couple more less than obvious turns, descended through a sugarbush and wound up where the abandoned Little Village Road crossed the ridge, coming up from Danby. We followed it most of the way down to the abandoned part Ricketts Road, avoiding the badly eroded and overgrown lower quarter mile or so by taking a less than obvious turn into a recently logged area. (By now, are you getting the idea that less than obvious turns were a hallmark of this outing? Steve Williams said it was a wonder we actually came out where we meant to.) We ended with a pleasant three quarter mile walk south along the old Ricketts Road, passing a former marble quarry and a large house foundation lying just west of the road.

According to Tom's GPS, total distance was 7.7 mi., total time: 5 hr 9 min, total climb was 1890 feet, and total descent was 24 feet more than that. Some of the climb and mileage wasn't originally planned. I added it in hopes of finally getting a view from the south end of Tinmouth Mountain. We were rewarded – sort of. It was easy to see the next ridge in the rain, but the Green Mountains were barely visible.

Bromley Mountain, Peru

17 July, 2010

By Sue Thomas, leader

The breezes were cool and refreshing on the summit of Bromley, a welcome change from the blast furnace down below.

Six of us had gathered at the trailhead, including a very patient college student, who diplomatically hid his dismay at finding himself hiking with the geriatric set. Being six feet five inches tall he had eyed little Bob-the-car with even more dismay, and offered to drive us down to Manchester in his roomier vehicle.

This should have made us nervous – he carried no pack, wore running shoes, and looked as if he could jog to the summit and back in the time it took the rest of us to zip up our packs and adjust our canes ... er ... hiking poles. Fortunately he had no pockets so I confiscated his keys, thereby ensuring that he couldn't drive off without us.

On the way up we took a break at Bromley Shelter, where we encountered the first of several sawed-off sign posts. It seems some aren't satisfied with the usual souvenirs – why buy key chains if you can lug a 30-pound sign out of the woods for free?

From the summit tower we could see a storm blowing in across the Taconics, so we enjoyed lunch and the view and headed back down for ice cream.

Long Trail Relay, Shrewsbury

26 July 2010

By Barry Griffith, leader

We had perfect weather for Leg 10 of the GMC Centennial Relay. Sunshine, temperatures starting in the 50s, ending in the 70s. A nice breeze on the ridges to keep the bugs away. Thank you, hiking gods!

We assembled at 8 AM at the Town Office in downtown North Shrewsbury. Prickles was the first to arrive, looking forward to a great day. After dropping off participant vehicles at the Cold River Road crossing where we would end the day, Killington Section volunteers Bob Perkins, Gerry Martin and Barbara Griffith shuttled hikers to the Route 140 parking lot in Wallingford via back roads. There we were joined by two Wallingford residents, completing our contingent. In addition to Prickles, eleven hikers participated: Molly Griffith (Colorado), Bill Johns and George Jackson (Connecticut Section), Mary Keenan (Burlington Section), Marge Fish and Bob Whitney (Manchester Section), Adrian Eisler and Julia Huessy (Wallingford), Barbara Griffith, Barry Griffith and Allison Henry (Killington Section).

After Prickles was welcomed to the Killington Section of the Long Trail and obligatory group photos were taken, the group set off northward at about 9 AM. One mile in we were able to look south to the White Rocks, over which yesterday's leg had passed. We ascended, then descended, Bear Mountain to Patch Hollow. Thousands pass this spot annually not knowing of the bloody tragedy which occurred here in 1831. Leader Barry Griffith related the story to Prickles and the other hikers. Rumor has it that Allison Henry may post the narration on YouTube.

From there it was on to Minerva Hinchey Shelter, where adopters Gerry & Chryl Martin had left a fresh roll of toilet paper for Prickles and her entourage. Rather than eat lunch there, the group voted to press on to the airport lookout with its open view to the west. We then descended to Clarendon Gorge, where Prickles admired the suspension bridge. Suggestions of bungee jumping were suppressed. At the Route 103 parking lot circa 2 PM three hikers left for other obligations, but another joined in. Then began the steep ascent to the Clarendon lookout, where the hikers could again look back south to survey their progress. Next stop: Clarendon Shelter, again in wonderful shape. Alison and Barry shared jokes to get us up the incline to the summit of Beacon Hill. We then traversed an area where the Youth Conservation Corps has been working this year to keep hikers' boots dry in a naturally wet area. A highlight of Prickles' day was meeting a new YCC group just beginning a three week stint. The future is in good hands!

After a final climb, Prickles and her companions descended to Lottery Road and finally to their waiting vehicles on the Cold River Road. The day's outing was projected to end at 5 PM, and we were pretty much on schedule. Great weather, no untoward incidents or injuries, lots of smiles and great memories. A good time was had by all.

Killington Section Directors Meet

By Allison Henry, Secretary

The Killington Section directors met at 6:10 PM on 15 June 2010 at Seward's Restaurant in Rutland, led by Section President Barry Griffith. Other directors present were Vice President Wayne Krevetski, Treasurer Gerry Martin, Secretary Allison Henry, Sue Thomas, Vivian Bebee, Steve Williams, Herb Ogden, and Tom Copps. Also present were Lynda Hutchins, liaison to the Main Club, and friends Bob and Thelma Perkins.

A motion to approve the minutes from the Annual Meeting on March 27, 2010, as already published in the May 2010 issue of Smoke & Blazes, was made by Lynda, seconded by Gerry, and passed. Allison posed a question about the format of minutes via email. We determined that sending documents both in the body of the email as well as an Open Office document attachment would be acceptable to all.

The Treasurer's Report was presented by Gerry. A motion to accept the report was made by Wayne, seconded by Allison, and passed. Garry explained that $2010.85 for the Governor Clement renovations was taken from our general fund rather than from the Kirk Fund, which is in a CD, in order to avoid a $6.00 early CD withdrawal penalty. Barry moved, Herb seconded, and the board agreed, that we leave the accounts as they are for now and that, when the Kirk Fund CD rolls over, we move $2010.85 from the Kirk Fund to the general fund as an internal reconciliation. We also discussed whether our funds should be moved into longer term CDs with better interest rates. Steve suggested that our treasurer look into options for us to address at our next meeting.

A Trails and Shelters report was given by Herb and Wayne, co-chairs of Trails and Shelters.

- Herb reported that when the Churchill Scott shelter was built, an agreement had been made between the GMC and the City of Rutland/Public Works regarding the public water supply. A sign was supposed to have been posted stating that the area around the shelter is the watershed for the City of Rutland, therefore no camping allowed other than at the shelter, and no human waste is to be deposited other than at the privy at the shelter. When the original agreement was reached, it said that the Club and City should "work together to post appropriate signs." Herb passed around a sample sign for us to review. We discussed how many signs are expected to be posted, and where, such as at the north and south line of the watershed area along the Trail or only at the shelter? Herb will contact the City and/or Public Works for more information before we make a final determination regarding the sign language and placement.

- The Forest Service wants us to log our volunteer hours. There is a spot to log your time on the top of the Sector Checker form.

- Wayne reported that the bunks at Governor Clement are complete! It is a lower-level sleeping platform and the shelter is really "brightened up." According to Barry there have been no reports of vandalism or mischief at the shelter this summer. Barry also noted that even snowmobilers were commenting in the shelter's logbook over the winter.

- Adoptions: Minerva Hinchey needs an Adopter. Former adopter Cindy Taylor-Miller has given up her post as she is once again on a long-distance expedition and is not available to take care of the shelter. Cooper has not been maintained by the GMC for some time. Herb reviewed the list of the shelter adoptions for the rest of our section of Trail.

- Shelter and structure damage by porcupines was also discussed. Suggestions were posed such as metal sheathing on sleeping platforms, which works until it starts to pull up and then it has sharp edges. We also discussed building "porky salt licks" away from shelters and leashing fishers to the sleeping platforms. Attaching an extra, easily replaceable board to the front of each chewed area also is being considered as a viable option.

- Clarendon Shelter will eventually be moved as it is not on federal land. In the very long term, a replacement for Clarendon will be built near Hermit Spring.

- Relocations/Adjustments: Dave Hardy has approved a relocation of the Trail south of Lottery Road. This still needs approval by the Forest Service. The relo is flagged with pink flags if you want to check it out. Dave Hardy has also approved a relocation north of Lottery Road, also still to be approved by the Forest Service. This is flagged yellow. There is an "old" suggestion (from 1995!) in the list of projects to move a section of Trail near the Kieffer Road; it was decided to remove this from the list.

- Other Projects: There will be a visit to Gould Brook in July with GE volunteers, as they will possibly be building a bridge across the brook. Also, a stretch of the trail south of Upper Cold River road will be moved as there is a new muddy stretch. Eventually we will build up a section near Little Killington that is steep, rocky, and disintegrating. This project will need to be done by people with rock work experience. There is a major blowdown on the Cauty Trail which has been there for some time. It might not be removed, as this is a good excuse for a switchback through that section.

- Tom, Gerry, Herb, and Sue completed an "adjustment" around the expanding Sinkhole on the Sherburne Pass Trail. The trail now passes west of the hole.

- Some of our tools are missing – please check your garage, shed, and station wagon!

- Herb emailed out a list of small projects since the major work parties were rained out. If you complete a job, let Herb know so he can cross it off the list. And don't forget to log your hours!

Highlights from the Main Club report were presented by liaison Lynda noting that most meeting attendees had already heard the information at the Main Club Annual Meeting in May. Copies will be provided by Lynda on request. Some points to note:

- The Main Club is still in the black!

- There is a wind project pending for Lowell Mountain. This is not on "our" land but near it, and the Main Club is monitoring the situation.

- A new Section Leader's Handbook is available on the Montpelier Section's website.

- There was a good turnout from the Killington Section at the Main Club's annual meeting!

President Barry once again offered thanks to Bob for the Smoke & Blazes. Bob reminded us to keep the trip reports coming, and get them in sooner please! Outings coordinator Sue mentioned that there are several bike trips on this summer's schedule.

Wayne reported that the 5 June dinner at the Inn at Long Trail to raise money for the GMC was a success! Sixty-two people were in attendance. The proceeds were $600 which will be donated to the Main Club. Thanks to Bob Perkins and Jim Davidson of the Rutland Historical Society for the design and presentation of the slide show. David Wright also gave a presentation on 6 June about the original Long Trail Lodge. Thank yous were issued to Patty and Murray McGrath of the Inn for the delicious dinner, and to folks who donated items for the raffle: McGraths, Eastern Mountain Sports, John Hale, Cindy Taylor Miller, and Gerry Martin. $213 was raised from the raffle, also to be sent to the Main Club. It is possible this could become an annual event.

David Wright will be working with Killington Resort to place a historic marker at the site of the old clubhouse. Herb moved, Sue seconded, and the board concurred in asking Barry to send an appropriate letter of support to the State Historic Commission.

Wayne reported that the fourth annual Rutland Long Trail Festival is coming up on Saturday 7 August. There will be music, new movies from the Department of the Interior, and a Leave No Trace presentation. The "hardcore project" for following day will be carrying materials and building tent platforms at the Little Rock Pond area. Speak to Wayne if you are interested in leading an easy-to-moderate, local hike as part of the Festival.

Barry reminded us that the Long Trail relay hike starts on 17 July and will be coming through our section in late July. Barry will be leading a section of the relay on 26 July. All of the information about the relay hikes is in the Long Trail News. Be sure to sign up in advance if interested.

Barry reminded us that next year will be the 100th anniversary of the Killington Section! What should we do for our anniversary? There is nothing in the archives regarding what was done for our Section's 50th. Herb is looking for old information about what was known as the "Board of Trustees" at the start of the Killington Section. Some information could be at the Vermont Historical Society in Barre or at UVM. Marcellus Wheeler of Rutland made the original donation to the GMC, and he was a manure salesman! We are hoping to track the changes to the Trail and changes to the Killington Section borders. When written up we can publish a history of the Section.

The next meeting was set for Tuesday, 5 October 2010. The meeting adjourned at 7:59 PM.

New Shelter at Little Rock Pond

Trail Ready for Winter

By Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters Co-Chair

I was going to call this article "Trail Tucked in for Winter," but then I reflected that actually the last thing we want is a tucked-in trail. That would mean all the waterbars and side ditches were tucked in under a mat of leaves and silt and weren't doing their job of keeping the water from running down the trails. Between the nine folks who showed up for the 6 November work party and several more who couldn't come then but agreed to do full fall maintenance on various stretches of trail, we have worked on most everything under about the 3,000 foot level except for the Cauty Trail up Blue Ridge Mountain, which is reported in good shape except for a few blowdowns. It would have been nice to clear the waterbars and side ditches for about a mile either side of Cooper Lodge, but there was already too much snow. We'll have to give that top priority in the spring work parties, along with replacing rotten bog bridging south of the Keiffer Road, north of Gov. Clement Shelter, and north of US 4.

It's time to highlight the contributions by our trail volunteers rather than leave them anonymous like most of those who go on our strictly pleasure outings. So here is the fall work party: Dick Carey, Dave Coppock, Tom Copps, Jim Dorman, Wayne Flewellig, Allison Henry, Joe Minard, and Sue Thomas. (I was recovering from pneumonia and couldn't work, and co-chair Wayne Krevetski had to attend a Killington Ski Area meeting.) In addition, Larry Walter and Dave and Clare Coppock spent a day readying the Bucklin Trail for winter, and the following others have worked on the trails this fall: Barb and Barry Griffith, Chryl and Gerry Martin, Cindy Taylor-Miller, Viv Beebe, and Connie Youngstrom. If you did, too, and I failed to list you, I apologize. Please do tell me or Wayne Krevetski when you work on the trails and how long you were at it. Not only does it keep us from sending others out to do what you already did, but it also gives us the volunteer hour statistics that the Green Mt. Club has to report to the Forest Service and others.

A Photo from the Past

The new shelter at Little Rock Pond has quite a genealogy. According to Long Trail System Shelter History by Paul Woodward there was a private camp in a fine spot on the west shore in 1928. The shelter that I remember was built on the island in 1935 and was reached by a bridge from the mainland (see photo).

The 1935 shelter was replaced in 1962 but the 1962 shelter was moved, in 1972, to its present location north of the pond. Also in 1962 the East Shore Shelter was built but it too was relocated, in 1972, to the south and renamed for Lulu Tye.

Outing Reports

Bald Mountain, Mendon

28 March 2010

By Allison Henry, leader

A ten o'clock start on this fine, crisp day let us sleep in a little after the big feast at the potluck the night before. Being unsure of the conditions, I had advised participants to bring ice grippers or even snowshoes in case of leftover snow. It turns out that the ground was mostly bare, with only a little crusty old snow in a few sheltered spots. A pleasant trip was had by all, with a long but chilly lunch break on one of the overlooks and several peeps-themed photos.

About the only remarkable thing that happened was after lunch, when the gang of saw-wielding gentlemen went ahead to neaten up the trail for the rest of us. Toward the end of the loop, we caught up to them and found them standing around and scratching their heads. A large saw was immobilized in a blowdown. Fortunately someone was carrying the equipment needed to free said saw from the tree trunk; otherwise the saw, and probably Larry, would still be there.

Folded Rock, Cambridge, NY

10 April 2010

By Allison Henry, leader

This trail is located on Route 313 in the Battenkill State Forest between Arlington, VT and Cambridge, NY, a few miles west of the state line. There is a public trailhead on the south side of the road, but the trail is also accessible from the property of Battenkill Valley Outdoors (BVO), a private shop offering canoe and bike rentals, guided trips, maps, et cetera. Their shop has a very distinguished looking sign with a kayak stuck through it. When my spouse and I went for a recon hike the week before, the folks at the store told us they would be out of town for the weekend but that we were welcome to park on their property. They warned us that a bicycle race was to take place the same weekend as our hike, but it turns out the traffic stop was west of our turnoff for the trail, so our plans were safe.

This trail has two different names, either Folded Rock or Peaked Rock. The trailhead and a trip write-up on the Adirondack Mountain Club (ADK) website say "Peaked Rock," and signs along the trail and in the vicinity mostly refer to "Folded Rock." We also saw a sign on which "Peaked Rock" was crossed out and corrected to read "Folded Rock." It is unclear who is responsible for the trail, but according to the above-mentioned ADK trip report from last year, the trail was "created" and "improved" by ADK members in the past. The trail is an out-and-back, about two and a half miles each way.

After a rendezvous at Main Street Park and another at Stewarts in Arlington, with our numbers swelled to ten persons, we made our way to the Battenkill Valley Outdoors center. The drive itself was quite nice, following the Battenkill River.

At the BVO property the trail starts near a carved creature – either a monster or a very rough-cut black bear. It was another gorgeous day for a hike, warmish with no leaves to block our views. After a walk through a field, the trail goes up, up, and straight up for almost two miles, mostly along an old gravel road. There was a lot of huffing and puffing and I took a lot of breaks. Once we reached the ridgeline, we had occasional views of the valley below. We also found some vernal pools complete with frog spawn. Luckily, no one tried to hand me some this year. We even found a really big newt. After a ridge walk, the trail headed downward (resulting in some grumbling that we'd have to go back up again on our return before we could go down).

The trail ended with a great lookout (lookout!) north over the valley. Sure enough, right at the end of the trail there was an outcropping of rock that looked like it had been folded. It didn't exactly look peaked though. We took some photos of the views along with a few close-ups of the Folded and/or Peaked Rock formation. We had a leisurely lunch sheltered behind the ridge, grumbled our way back up the ridge, and stumbled our way down the steep gravel road to our cars. With the sun and wind I ended up with a very pink face that evening!

Appalachian Trail, Pomfret

28 August 2010

By Sue Thomas, leader

There was a bit of a mix-up about the meeting time for this hike, so I administered molasses cookies in the parking lot and all was forgiven.

The day turned out to be an oasis in the middle of an unusually hot summer – one of those perfectly blue-sky days without the humid haze that had clouded the views for so long. This made the short but steep climb to The Lookout more than worthwhile, and the ascent of the alarmingly rickety-looking ladder to the rooftop viewing platform a must. We did the smart thing though and sent up a scout. Naturally I was judged to be the most expendable. When I did not fall thru the roof the others joined me for spectacular views in all directions.

The Lookout at The Lookout on the AT, Pomfret

Back on terra firma we celebrated with caramels and then backtracked to the trail. This achievement called for chocolate cookies. A pleasant walk thru the woods led us at lunchtime to Wintturi Shelter, named for a Killington Section member who, though gone by the time I joined the Club in 1982, was still legendary for his habit of carrying a warm beer on all hikes. We toasted him with more molasses cookies, and awarded several to a grateful young backpacker.

After lunch there was a bit of up and down, but we had more chocolate cookies to keep up our strength, and the trail is just so darn pretty that a few more caramels were in order as we passed scenic stone walls and open clearings overlooking Mt. Ascutney.

Crossing lovely fields and stiles, our thoughts began to turn to ice cream, which so enflamed us that we kidnapped two thru-hikers at the trailhead and took them to a country store up the road, before depositing them at Gifford Woods on our way home. A delicious day!

Mother Myrick Mt., Dorset

18 September 2010

By Sue Thomas, leader

Not long ago a resident of Dorset was mowing the field adjacent to his home when the tractor hit a hard object below the surface. Investigating, he discovered a large marble slab with the name "Newton Myrick" beautifully inscribed in flowing script. This prompted some research by the local historical society, and helped to satisfy my longtime curiosity about the unusually named peak.

It turned out that Isaac Newton Myrick was a stone carver whose home and shop had stood at the site where the inscribed marble, now on display at the historical society, was found. "Mother" Myrick is thought to have been Isaac's mother, who was a local midwife.

At the base of the peak we visited the marker where the Kent Tavern had stood – one of several sites around the state where constitutional conventions were held.

Knowing that The Nature Conservancy has been acquiring land on the mountain, I invited Dave McDevitt, the conservancy's Southern Vermont Steward, to come along on our hike. At the trailhead he gave each of us a copy of the conservancy's new book Places to Walk, Paddle, and Explore and then guided us up the correct and most direct route to the ridge top, rather than the longer and more convoluted route I had mistakenly taken when I scouted out the hike. Thank you Dave! Along the way Dave stopped to post new signs and gave us an overview of the conservancy's projects and goals in the area.

At the summit a view of the surrounding valley and mountains made a nice backdrop for lunch, and we all signed in at the summit canister. A large number of hawks passed by on their way south for the winter – a thrilling sight.

On the way back down Dave discovered what a bunch of trouble makers we really are when we gleefully helped him pull blowdowns and brush into the trail to at least slow down ATV access – a "reverse work party" that somehow seemed much more fun than clearing the trail. We all agreed that it was the best time we'd ever had doing trail work.

Rattlesnake Ridge, Salisbury

26 September 2010

By Larry Walter, leader

This hike in the Moosalamoo National Recreation Area east of Lake Dunmore is one of our personal favorites for its hike-to-view ratio. Viv and I had reconnoitered the loop in a counterclockwise direction a couple of weekends before and figured the best direction would be the opposite.

Most of the traffic in this region comes from the west side at the Keewaydin Camp or from the south via the Falls of Lana trail (if the brook is fordable). Striving to avoid some of the hubbub, we parked at the Voter Brook Overlook, under escort of a local constable (not sure what that was about). This is a nice little spot with picnic tables and a good view to the southwest. It's accessed by way of Forest Road 32 (Blueberry Hill route), off of Vermont Route 73 (Brandon Gap). You can just make out a small portion of Rattlesnake Cliff if you slide off to the southerly end of the clearing.

A recently reopened trail drops off the hill southeasterly from the overlook for a 5-minute hike to the North Branch Trail. I counted twelve people at the start – not a bad turnout. The members were getting restless after we'd descended southwesterly for about 45 minutes along the brook to where the Rattlesnake Cliff trail takes off to the right and ascends steeply to the northeast.

Tom, Barry, and Diane helped me remove some windfalls with the Griffith's antique 3-foot crosscut saw and some good teamwork. Meanwhile the rest of the group clattered on up the trail. I was sure they'd pause at the first junction to wait for one of their hike leaders. Righttttt!

We banked a left at the first, brand-spanking new sign and worked our way down to another fork (still no souls present), the left of which took us to the most southerly overview where about half of the group was hanging out. The rest of the delinquent hikers had migrated (or as they'd say out west, "quailed") to parts unknown.

Taking Viv's concerns in mind and with a strong commitment to group cohesiveness, I followed leader protocol by sitting down for lunch. There's a fantastic view of the Greens, the most impressive height of land being Gillespie Peak. You can see most of the surface of Silver Lake, the southern end of Lake Dunmore, and way down the Route 53 drainage to the south. If you slide just a little further to the west along the cliff, there's another spot where you can see more of Lake Dunmore. That's where the missing hikers showed up.

View of Lake Dunmore from Rattlesnake Cliffs

After finishing lunch, we worked our way back up to the first "Cliffs" sign (badly in need of repair) and checked out the western overlook. This one gives you a nice view of the Adirondacks and most of Lake Dunmore and Fern Lake. Gordon's house is somewhere along the later. I think this view point is more heavily visited, but I prefer the more southerly of the three. At least some of these cliff overviews are closed by the Forest Service in the peregrine falcons' spring nesting season. Fall is a great time to go.

We headed north up the Oak Ridge Trail towards Mt. Moosalamoo. This is a nifty hike unto itself, with partial views through the trees to the west. A lot of the surface is along a sharp ledge which could be pretty slippery if wet – another good reason for hiking clockwise. We noticed that a bunch of trash that previously had been thrown off the ledge by hikers unknown had subsequently been picked up by hikers unknown. Well done to the later.

About a quarter-mile short of the top of Moosalamoo the Keewaydin Trail takes off to the southeast. Taking direction from those more influential and, frankly, intimidating than I, the decision was made to skip the peak and head down hill. The National Forest crews have been busy on this section, with lots of new water bar work and impressive stone paving and culverts.

After taking out a couple more windfalls, Barry wisely confiscated all implements of destruction from me so as to catch up with the others who had heartlessly waltzed on down the hill. After dumping out on Forest Road 24B, it's a quick, 5-minute jaunt down the hill to the overlook. All were accounted for and we squeezed into our automobiles for the carpool back home. I'd estimate this trip to be about 4 or 5 miles, round trip and moderate in difficulty. We'll do this one again.

Mount Cardigan, NH

2 October 2010

By Terri Wilson, leader

Not only was the weather great, but the company was exceptional. There were ten of us hiking up "Old Baldy." I can't think of a better way to spend a day than with my "Green Mountain" family. After a moderate climb up the mountain we were rewarded with a view I never tire of. The colors were bursting with yellows and oranges that accented all the surrounding hills. There was more agreement than debate on what we were looking at in the distance. That doesn't happen all the time!

We enjoyed our lunch and company. Then it was off to hike "Firescrew". There was no debate. Everyone seemed in agreement. Our family was united in decision. That doesn't happen all the time! We scrambled down the rock and over to the ridge of Firescrew. Looking back at "Old Baldy" gave one a new appreciation for the climb.

After some time taking in the views, taking pictures and fellowship we headed back. On the way down we passed a young couple with a small child. She was heard saying "Look at the world mommy" while pointing down at the landscape. You couldn't help but catch the child's appreciation for the beauty outstretched before us.

Everyone agreed that it was a good day for a hike and we needed to stop for ice cream on the way back. Now that is my kind of kin!

On Mt. Cardigan. "We enjoyed our lunch and company....I can't think of a better way to spend the day"

The Killington Section of the Long Trail

Killington Section Directors Meet

By Allison Henry, Secretary

The Killington Section Board of Directors met at Swards Family Restaurant at 6:00 P.M. on 5 October 2010. Present were President Barry Griffith, Vice President Wayne Krevetski, Treasurer Gerry Martin, Secretary Allison Henry; and directors Sue Thomas, Tom Copps, and Herb Ogden. Also present were friends Bob and Thelma Perkins, Barb Griffith, and Lynda Hutchins.

Minutes from the 15 June meeting were approved on a motion by Herb, seconded by Gerry.

Treasurer's report by treasurer Gerry:

- Finances remain excellent; there has been limited activity since the last report.
- Our CDs mature in late October. CD interest rates are extremely low but there are few other options with higher interest rates, and nothing as secure as a CD. Even if we extended the CDs to 5 years we would not earn much interest.
- Internal reconciliation between the Kirk Fund and the General Fund still is needed in the amount of about two thousand dollars. We discussed whether or not this reconciliation should be made now. We believe that we can only use the interest from the Kirk fund, not the principal, but there is limited information available as to the original amount of the Kirk principal. Allison moved, and Lynda seconded, that we do the internal reconciliation so everything is in order. Further discussion indicated that if we transfer the amount now, the Kirk checking account will be very low. Allison amended her motion to defer the transfer of money until we find out the actual amount of the Kirk Fund principal. We then discussed ways to research this information. Gerry has gone through old treasurer's logs but cannot find the actual number. We can possibly consult other members of the Killington Section. Allison has a briefcase full of meeting minutes to turn over to Gerry for more research.

The Treasurer's report was accepted on a motion by Allison, seconded by Herb.

Special Shrewsbury Trip Report by guest Barb Griffith: Dave Hardy, GMC Director of Field Programs, and representatives from the US Forest Service went out in the Shrewsbury Peak area, including the Black Swamp Trail and around to the chimney. Dave will be reporting to the Trails and Shelters Committee of the Main Club. One of the Forest Service representatives has requested help with maintenance of trails in this area. It could eventually fall under our Section. Upon discussion, we feel that we could come up with a sector checker but not be responsible for the actual maintenance, as we already have a lot of miles of trail to maintain.

Report from Wayne:

- Thank you to Tom for helping to represent the Killington Section at the Diamond Run Mall for the Eastern Mountain Sports (EMS) "Club Days" sale. EMS gave customers the twenty percent Club Days discount as long as they purchased at least $50 worth of merchandise and gave $10 to the Club. During the two-day sale Tom and Wayne together raised $155 in donations for the Killington Section.
- We received a letter from Ruth Cooper Lamb who wants a copy of Bob Perkins' slide show. The slide show will also be shown at the ALDHA gathering. Copies of the DVD show can be purchased from PEG TV Channel 15.
- The 2011 Long Trail Festival will be held on Saturday, 6 August with a trail work day Sunday, 7 August.

Trails and Shelters report by co-chairs Herb and Wayne:

- Governor Clement Shelter is completely renovated with a new roof and new shingles. The site crew made a new bench out of saplings as well.
- The Governor's Gate is open for the hunting and snowmobile seasons.
- Herb will send a thank-you note to shelter adopter Roy Arthur.
- Bill Gwozdz, representing the GE Volunteers; Dave Hardy, GMC Director of Field Programs; and Doug Reeves of the U. S. Forest Service visited the Gould Brook crossing site between the Lower and Upper Cold River Roads in Shrewsbury. The cost for a bridge for this sometimes dangerous ford is astonishingly high for a Forest Service-designed bridge. Dave Hardy and the Forest Service representatives are skeptical of the suggested design to build a bridge just to the island; however a full span will be very long. We will keep in touch with the Main Club about this issue as a bridge is definitely needed. We discussed whether the ford should be mentioned in the guidebook or if a sign should be posted. A detour via a roadwalk is possible but it adds mileage.
- Wayne suggested that we add signage for the Governor Clement road – it is not in the ATC guidebook nor on their map, and AT hikers, especially South-Bounders, get confused because they think it is Upper Cold River road. Should we post a sign or map?
- Pico Camp needs substantial carpentry including a new door, steps, and maybe new bunks, as well as some work underneath such as chicken wire to keep out the porkies. Do we have enough people for such a project on an upcoming Trail Work Day? Can we recruit a volunteer group, such as EMS or the carpentry students at Stafford?

- We do not know the time frame but Clarendon Shelter will eventually be removed or relocated because it is not on GMC or government property. We pointed out that it is still in good shape and it would be a shame to lose it.

Main Club Directors 25 September Meeting report by Allison, our alternate representative. [See Allison for more specific details.]

- Highlights: The GMC had a great Centennial year with many celebrations and projects by the Main Club and by the individual Sections. We got lots of publicity including the End-to-End Relay and Prickles the Porcupine on Facebook! It was a great field season as well with supersized efforts in many locations. Our book, A Century in the Mountains, received the Hathaway Award. The GMC community was saddened by loss of friend and Board member Dave Blumenthal. The Board appointed Lexi Shear to fill his post.
- The Main Club is working with an auditor. There are no major concerns with financial procedures or record-keeping.
- Lowell Wind Project: This was a major discussion at the Main Club meeting. Green Mountain Power has proposed a large-scale wind project on the Lowell Range. Turbines will be clearly visible from Belvidere Mountain and Tillotson Camp; as well as in view from much of the northern/central section of the Long Trail.
 - The Green Mountain Cub is NOT officially opposing the project. We are working to set a precedent and we are focusing on three points. (1) We want to consider the cumulative impact of multiple wind power projects; this is only one of what could eventually be many projects in view of the Long Trail. There is no statewide long-term energy plan. As individuals, we should be speaking with our legislators about a long-term energy plan for Vermont. (2) What are the plans for decommissioning the project? (3) How can the impact of the towers on the views from the Trail be minimized? At least nine of the towers are tall enough to require red blinking lights as per FAA regulations. Technology is available for lights that only turn on when a plane is detected.
 - We need to communicate these three points to the community for public relations purposes.

Additionally, the GMC is not focusing on the environmental impact of such a project as there are other groups already addressing this.

- A motion was passed to spend $30,000 (including what has been spent so far) in addressing the Lowell Range project. This includes lawyer fees and an expert witness.
- Development Committee: The new Dave Blumenthal Education Endowment will provide long term funds for Trail-related educational projects.
- Other changes: There are some changes to committee appointments; job titles, and policy wording.

Outings report by Sue, Outing Coordinator:

- Outings have been very successful. As always, contact Sue if you wish to lead a hike or trip!

Other Business:

- General discussion of safety for group outings. What health information, if any, should we ask participants to provide? Some might be uncomfortable sharing personal information, but it is clearly a safety issue in some cases, such as asthma, diabetes, or an insect allergy. To our knowledge the Main Club has no specific policy and we do not require written sign-ups or waivers. We suggested that a group leader casually remind the group to mention any health problems to the leader in private at the start of the trip. We discussed that some leaders might be uncomfortable making this announcement, and that some participants might not wish to share. As always, we reminded ourselves that the group leader has the right to ask someone not to participate if they appear unable or ill equipped.
- Quilt Raffle tickets are still available and are still being sold at the Main Club headquarters.
- Our annual Fall Pot Luck will be on 20 November with a slid show on Archeology on the Long Trail.
- Our Section's Centennial will be on 4 October 2011. What can we do to celebrate? Suggestions: Exhibit in a vacant store front downtown. Old slides/photos. Killington Section Dinner. Find some of the original trail in our area. Allison is considering a backpacking trip of our section of the Long Trail.
- Will we have an event to commemorate Cooper Lodge before it is removed? We still have no tear-down date.
- The next board meeting is set for Tuesday, 1 February 2011 at Swards.

The meeting adjourned at 8:08 pm

THANK YOU, EDITOR BOB PERKINS!
WELCOME, EDITOR VIV BEBEE!

One of the perks of being a Section President is that GMC provides you with courtesy copies of newsletters from the other Sections. I have presided over the Annual Meetings of the Killington Section since 2007. I have stated every year that our own Smoke & Blazes is the best GMC Section newsletter, bar none.

Praise for the quality of this publication over the past decade is properly bestowed upon our fine newsletter Editor, Bob Perkins. For ten years, every quarter Bob has solicited articles and reviewed photographs of Killington Section outings, new and old. Bob has gently reminded and patiently cajoled our hike and other leaders into submitting reports and articles in a (more or less) timely fashion. Smoke & Blazes has memorialized outings and provided our members with information about our Killington Section. More often than not, over the past decade the best articles were written by Bob himself.

Earlier this year, Bob advised our Board of Directors that it was time for him to back away from the time commitment required to serve as our newsletter Editor. We received this news with sadness, but also with extreme gratitude for the fine service Bob has provided in this post for ten years. Bob, thank you from the bottom of our hearts!

Vivian Bebee has stepped forward, and has agreed to serve as our new Smoke & Blazes Editor. Larry Walter will serve as her Assistant Editor and Tom Copps will serve as Photo Editor. Thank you, Viv – Larry and Tom. We are grateful to all of you!

Outing Reports

DEER LEAP, KILLINGTON, December 11, 2010, by Tom Copps, leader

This was to be our last trip to Deer Leap for the year. Our crew was myself, Larry Walter and the pair from Pawlet Steve Williams and Barbara O'Connor. We arrived at the LT-AT trailhead on US Route 4 at about 9:45 in the morning on a cold and overcast day. The snow cover was light so we settled for grippers instead of snowshoes and started out. Climbing steadily we arrived at Maine Junction in Willard Gap in due time. Continuing up the trail we had a short discussion as to whether we should proceed over the top of Deer Mountain. Short because none of us had any intention of doing any such fool thing! Having re-established our goals for the day we continued on around the north side of the mountain until we arrived at the Deer Leap Spur. Up we went, though not nearly as fast as we had been traveling of course. Slippery!

As everybody knows, when we finally achieved the rocks of Deer Leap Lookout the views were beautiful. We saw some snowmaking on Pico but the mountain also appeared to be covered with a good deal of natural snow. I seem to remember that eighteen inches had been reported on the backside the previous week by Larry and Dave. When we were satisfied with the view, we turned back, still not yet having eaten lunch. Larry went on ahead and picked out a large rock in the woods that served nicely as a table.

After lunch we descended via the spur, turned right, and quickly made our way to the Inn at the Long Trail. Here we spent an enjoyable hour conversing and sampling the beer, wine and snacks. Finally we walked back down the highway to the car, stowed our gear and returned to Rutland.

THE BALL, ARLINGTON, January 9, 2011, by Larry Walter, leader

I always tend to underestimate the time it takes to get a group of people up to a peak and back. We had a great turnout of 10 hikers, including myself. Dave and Nancy Hagelburg let us park in their woodlot where the trail takes off up Dry (never been known to) Brook. The temperature was just right given the grade. The hike is all on old logging roads, most of which could be walked without snowshoes, but once on top, post holing was not pleasant. I neglected to make sure that everyone had snowshoes when we left. That, coupled with our time growing short, prompted a 2:00 PM lunch on the ridge for five of us with the other five making it to the summit about fifteen minutes later. As luck would have it, the view was pretty much obscured by a pretty fair little snow squall, but it cleared up a bit when we were descending, affording a nice view back down through the drainage.

We walked through the southern portion of a 775-acre proposed acquisition by the Forest Service that I'd been working on for about 2 years. Looks like it might actually happen. I hope it does, because this drainage plus the three peaks in the area (including Spruce Peak and Grass Mountain) are just stunning. Word has it that the approach from the north is equally impressive, so that'll be one to recon in the spring. Hope to see you there for the official summer trip.

WALLINGFORD POND, January 15, 2011, by Tom Copps, leader

Early Saturday morning was cold and quiet. When I called Sue, she exclaimed "my God, do you know that it's four below!" However we met at the park as usual. By we I mean myself and Bob Perkins. The two of us made our way to East Wallingford where we met up with Steve and Barbara, for our final group of four. The drive up to the Wallingford Pond parking space was uneventful on a well-maintained plowed road and we set out at about 10 AM.

The conditions were beautiful. We quickly made our way to the junction at the pond area. A quick reconnoiter to the left brought us to the north half of what used to be called Spectacle Pond, where there is a small lunch area with a dilapidated homemade table. The pond was beautiful so we tested the ice a little bit. Everything seemed just fine.

We retraced our steps back to the junction and proceeded up the South side of the right "spectacle". The ice seemed fine under two feet of snow so we set out counterclockwise around the shore looking for the channel to the other "spectacle". At least that's what I was doing. The channel appeared in front of us as we rounded the east end of the pond. As Johnny Carson used to say, when you come to a fork in the trail take it. So we did. As I made my way around a tree that had tipped over into the channel I heard a small crack in the ice. When Barbara, our tail gunner, made the turn she said some water was coming up. The northern pond is much larger and more appealing. After a little confusion about where we should make landfall we made our way around the left shore back to the dilapidated picnic table for lunch.

As we were packing up, four snow machines arrived. We had a pleasant conversation with them although they were quite smelly. Barbara warned them about the slush anyway. Again we made our way back to the pond junction. As we regrouped we could hear what sounded like beagles running in the woods.

On our way back down the trail we met four more snow machines, so they are pretty active on these trails. No skiers. When we explored the area just after Christmas, we met a hunter with three beagles, another hunter with an old time single shot and a cross-country skier who had come up from the Belmont side. Certainly a more interesting group to meet on the trail I would say.

Although I was a little nervous in the morning about how it would all work out it was a great day and I am indebted to Bob, Steve and Barbara for making my "leadership" no work at all.

NOT BAMFORTH RIDGE, January 22, 2011, by Allison Henry, leader

I had scheduled a hike to Duxbury Window and Bamforth Ridge Shelter on the Long Trail north of Camel's Hump, but I watched the weather forecasts during the week prior to the trip with shivers of foreboding. With the highs expected to be in the single digits for the upcoming weekend, by mid-week I began walking the Long Trail in my brain, searching for a closer, more southerly and more sheltered destination for the expedition. (It would have been a very long drive for what could have been a miserable trip.) I even went so far as to actually look at the Long Trail map and suddenly, There It Was, shining like a beacon....Spruce Peak Shelter. Shorter drive to be home to a warm house sooner? Check. Less northerly? Check. Sheltered? Check check! Less-exposed trail AND an enclosed shelter. Even with the potential for sub-zero temperatures we had five participants, including yours truly, two more crazy diehards, a Herb, and a new guy (plus his well-mannered terrier mix). An added bonus: the trailhead on Rt 11 and 30 was already plowed from the previous night's snowfall, due to snowmobiler use in the winter. After a treacherous crossing of the highway (Flatlanders in SUVs!), the snowy woods welcomed us with open limbs. Hilarity ensued soon after entering the woods... as I spoke proudly of the convenient ratcheting feature on my snowshoe bindings, I fell over backwards, covering myself from head to toe in fluffy snow. Luckily (?????), it was too cold for the snow to melt on me. Other than the landshark-shaped hole marring the flawless snow, the scenery was perfect. The best winter conditions I've ever seen. Every single branch and twig was covered with a light layer of fluffy snow. There was new snow cover on the Trail itself, a foot deep or so, but clearly people had been there two or three snowfalls ago. Larry broke trail most of the way in his MSR Denalis (without the tails!). We only had a few instances of "losing" the white blazes but we knew the general direction of the Trail anyhow. I believe the temperature ended up in the low teens, warmer than expected, but lunch was still a bit chilly even in the enclosed shelter. The wood stove was tempting but we resisted—otherwise by the time we got it going, we would've had to leave. After lunch, it was a quick walk out on our packed trail.

By the way, has anyone seen Tom? He insisted on going to Bamforth Ridge despite the cold. When we got to the trailhead, he headed north instead of south. He is probably nearly to Camel's Hump by now....

HOT DOG ROAST, February 6, 2011, by Roma Pulling, leader

"Seems like old times..."

And it was very much like old times except when your leader, in a "senior moment," filled the Section's pack basket with ingredients for hot beverages and other goodies and left it sitting in her dinette at home. For that I am extremely sorry. Of course that backfired, didn't it? I was one of those who endured the winter outing with no hot beverage. Strangely, following a day of unpleasant surprises, we had good weather. We experienced mostly cloudy weather with a few glimpses of blue sky and acceptable driving conditions. The road from Route 103 to Spring Lake Ranch, which can be tricky at times, had been well-plowed and sanded.

Eight of us met at the park that morning and were met by two more at the parking area at the ranch. Three joined us later at our meeting spot, Minerva Hinchey Shelter. While Steve and I stayed at the shelter to get things set up and a fire going over which we would soon cook our hot dogs and sausages, the rest of the group went for a short snowshoe hike in the area. What really added a festive touch to the occasion was when three old-timers who, like myself, who don't hike as much as they used to, were able to join us: Rob and Sue Carey and Jerry Parker. And I was grateful that everyone was so gracious when I fell down on the job. Thank you.

WEST RUPERT (BUSHWACK/RAIL TRAIL), February 12, 2011, by Viv Bebee/Larry Walter, leaders

Our little group consisted of stalwarts, Tom Copps and Sue Thomas. (Larry was included in case we needed any trail breaking, ditch digging or tree maiming). The day was overcast and cold with a bit of wind, adding up to a nice mix of winter elements. The sun tried to peak though a couple times. We parked our car at Georgia Bebee's house (Viv's mom) and walked from there north on Mill Road to the rail trail. We crossed the brook on the rail trail bridge, put on our snowshoes, left the rail trail, shoed across a small meadow to begin climbing a steep little woods road that wound up the east side of the hill. Several turkeys had used the same route. After we reached a point where the road swung more to the northeast, we turned northwest instead and made our own trail, passing several deer beds. A narrow window in a pucker brush patch brought us out onto the top of the hill. Viv pointed out a large bird's nest on the way up. The summit afforded a nice opening from where we could see the West Rupert valley south/southeast, including Mother Myrick, Antone Mountain, Masters Mountain and west to Salem, NY. While standing on top of the hill enjoying the view, we noticed a large bird floating across the valley. It was close enough to see a white tail and head with a dark body. Looked like a bald eagle to us!

From the summit, another woods road dropped steeply off the southwest flank of the hill and then wound around to the west, crossing open fields, coming down to Cross Road (not maintained in the winter). On the side of the road, we noticed feather remains of a grouse. When we left Cross Road a short distance further up the road, Sue happened to cross over the fence near a stump-dump and noticed the entrance to a fox den. Perhaps the likely predator.

We snowshoed across a few more open fields and rolling hills, having lunch near the top of a wooded ridge. Then we headed southerly across the ridge and spotted a rather large, quarried stone marker about four feet tall with a pointed top but no markings, unless they were under the snow by the base. Continuing on to another open hill-top, we had a great view of West Rupert Village. For such an easy (Larry says) hike, there are several excellent views along the way. A quick 10 minutes down the other side of this last hill and across a meadow brought us out to the Cross Road Bridge over the brook. We picked up the rail trail again just off the bridge and worked our way back to the Bebee residence, where Viv's mom had some freshly-baked brownies to share. Good company, beautiful snow, great views . . . all adding up to a very nice day.

Killington Section Directors' Meeting

Minutes of Directors' Meeting

February 1, 2011

By Allison Henry, Secretary

Present: President Barry Griffith, VP Wayne Krevetski, Secretary Allison Henry, Treasurer Gerry Martin; Directors Sue Thomas, Herb Ogden, Tom Copps, Viv Bebee; friend Bob Perkins.

Meeting convened at 6:20 pm at Swards Restaurant, Rutland.

Minutes approved from 10/5/2010 (motion by Herb; seconded by Wayne).

Treasurer's report was presented by Treasurer Gerry. Contact Gerry for a copy and/or for more details. Highlights:

- Funds received from the quilt raffle (which will then be donated to the Main Club) and from donations from Club Days held at Eastern Mountain Sports last fall
- We had an increase in membership funds after the first of this year

•No changes in issues brought up at our last few meetings: we have not yet decided to do an internal reconciliation between our checking account and the Kirk fund. Also, our cds still have very little yield but no one is offering a decent rate so we'll continue to roll them over where they are for now.

The Treasurer's report was accepted by the Board (motion by Herb, seconded by Wayne).

Lynda Hutchins, our liaison to the Main Club, was not present due to weather but she submitted a written report to Barry. Barry gave us a brief summary of Lynda's report from the last Main Club meeting which was held on January 22, 2011. Contact Lynda for a written copy. Highlights:

•Our intervenor status in the proposed Lowell Range wind project has been keeping the Main Club very busy with public meetings, hearings, and research; legal and consulting fees are also contributing to financial challenges of Club. $20,400 has already been used of the $30K sum already approved by the Board •Concerns about what funding sources will be like this year—stimulus money, statue funds, etc.

•The new Marketing Committee is addressing topics such as: overuse of the Trail in some areas; brand awareness ("GMC" vs. "LT"); technology use in the woods.

•Lynda was appointed as a Main Club director at large to fill a vacancy (another director had resigned)

[Motions made, seconded and approved to appoint Allison Henry as the Killington Section director to the Main Club and Steve Williams as the alternate. -Ed.]

Bob Perkins announced that he will be retiring from his position as Smoke & Blazes editor sooner than anticipated (he had previously shared this news in an email to the Directors several weeks ago). [Discussion regarding transition to a new editor. -Ed.] The Board thanked Bob for his ten (ten!) years of service.

The Killington Section's own 100-year anniversary will be this October. [Discussion regarding events to commemorate this occasion. -Ed.]

A Trails and Shelters report was presented by co-chairs Wayne and Herb. Highlights:

•the Appalachian Trail Conservancy (ATC) is trying to get the entire Appalachian Trail recognized as a National Historic Site. This is something that would be done "section by section." The Vermont section of the AT had been suggested as a possible "test case" but the GMC is not sure that this would be ideal. We are still working on easements with some landowners. However, being on the Historic registry would give the Trail better legal standing in the face of development such as wind towers or ski areas. Any cost associated with this transition would be covered by the ATC.

•The Main Club is working on a 5-year plan for improvements and renovations to shelters

•Pico Camp could be the Rutland Long Trail Festival's Hard Core project for Sunday of the festival, if the Festival's board approves the project. A question then arose as to whether Pico and Killington still plan to build a connector trail between the two ski areas. When this was proposed years ago, it was slated to go right past the front door of Pico Camp. No one on the Board has heard anything for sure, especially recently, about the resort areas' plans. We discussed what improvements to Pico Camp were necessary, and it was suggested that we attempt to find out what the ski areas plan to do in the near future.

•There are still no official plans for a bridge at Gould Brook

Other Business:

•[Discussion regarding possible new location for our pot lucks and Annual Meeting. -Ed.]

•Allison asked what constitutes true volunteer hours for reporting purposes to the Main Club: only actual trail work, or also leading hikes, etc. Barry said that volunteer hours would include everything: trail work, leading hikes, and even board meetings.

•We have a new Sector Checker for the Canty Trail

•Does anyone have photos of the original Long Trail Lodge?

Meeting adjourned at 7:51 (motion by Allison, seconded by Herb)

(For complete transcript of the above Minutes, contact Allison Henry.)

This n' That

--GMC Board News: The Board of Directors of the Killington Section appoints one of our members as our representative to the Green Mountain Club Board of Directors. Each of the other Sections similarly designates a GMC Director. General or at-large Directors elected by GMC members round out the main Club Board. I am happy to report that two Killington Section members are now serving on the GMC Board of Directors. Last month the GMC Board appointed LYNDA HUTCHINS, who has ably served as our Killington Section representative, to fill its vacant at-large Director position. The Killington Section Board thereafter promptly appointed our Board member (and Secretary) ALLISON HENRY to serve as our Killington Section delegate to the GMC Board. I believe that all concerned are pleased with this development -- I know I am! Allison has much to offer at the GMC Board level. The GMC will now have the benefit of Allison's talents and energy, while at the same time retaining Lynda's skills and expertise. Come to our Killington Section Annual Meeting and congratulate them both!

Barry Griffith, Killington Section President

--Celebrate Our Killington Section Centennial!!! The meeting in Burlington that established the Green Mountain Club on March 11, 1910 is well memorialized. We properly celebrated the centennial of GMC's founding throughout 2010. Sections were established in the months and years that followed GMC's founding, to pursue work on the Long Trail at a local level. Our Section was organized in Rutland on October 4, 1911. Thus, this year the Killington Section turns 100 -- good cause for further celebration!

We discussed events to recognize this anniversary at our recent Section Board meeting. Wayne and Kathy Krevetski have volunteered to organize a celebratory dinner at the Long Trail Inn on June 4 -- National Trails Day. Allison Henry plans to organize a summer hike through the part of the Long Trail maintained by our Section -- perhaps Prickles can be persuaded to join us! A celebration around an autumn potluck also seems in order -- either on Tuesday, October 4, or as part of the annual deer hunting season get-together.

The Killington Section's 100th Annual Meeting will be held at the Godnick Center on March 26. Come join us, hear what we have in mind, and tell us how you would like to celebrate Killington's centennial year.

THANK YOU

This, my first newsletter note as President, will be a note of thanks. The first thank you goes to the Killington Board of Directors for their trust in me to appoint me as your president for the coming year. I will not let you down.

My second thank you goes out to the folks who stepped up to represent the Section at the EMS Club Days event in April. Allison, Henry, Tom Copps and Herb Ogden gave there time to put a face on the Green Mountain Club, Killington Section, and Long Trail. Their efforts earned the Section $140.00 in donations and a new member. Aside from the monetary gain, the importance of sharing our love for and commitment to the trail with others and, hopefully, igniting the same fire and commitment in them cannot be overstated. The future of the Trail and the other wild places we currently enjoy depends on developing an understanding and respect for those places with the youth who will be responsible for their care in the years to come.

The weather is changing and the black flies will soon be gone. Lets go for a hike and take a friend with you.

Wayne Krevetski, Killington Section President

IN MEMORIAM

We sadly note the passing of our friend, John Little. John was an avid hiker and along with his dog/hiking partner, Sammi, was an active participant in Killington Section outings. John's quiet good humor will be greatly missed, and we extend our sincere condolences to Betty and all the family.

GMC Annual Meeting: June 10-12, hosted by Ottauquechee Section at Camp Plymouth State Park, with activities, meals and hikes planned in addition to the meeting itself. For details and registration information, see the Spring LTN or check www.greenmountainclub.org.

Killington Section Board Meeting: June 21st, 6:00 p.m. at Seward's Restaurant, North Main Street.

PLEASE!!!!!! Viv Bebee and Larry Walter will be on vacation the end of August through first week of September. The next issue of Smoke & Blazes must be ready for the printer no later than August 19th. It would be so helpful if, when you lead a hike, you could send us your hike report shortly thereafter, as well as any other items you want included in the next issue. Sue Thomas will also need new hikes for the hike schedule sooner. If not, the September issue will not be going out until the end of September. Thanks for your help.

GMC Trail Committee Meeting: April 14, PM at Waterbury Headquarters.

Attendees: Larry Walter, Jen Wright (USFS employees), Herb Ogden, Wayne Krevetski, Dave Coppock. Several topics were discussed, but our primary reason for attending this meeting was to reaffirm the GMC policy of blazing trails to achieve "inter-visibility" between the same. The use of the trail has progressed steadily towards a 4-season form of recreation. This has made it very difficult to find a snow covered path in certain sections, one being the popular stretch running south from Route 73. Dave Coppock and I will probably plan a general maintenance day for this segment (along with others) when we'll bring the blazing up to standard. Any volunteer painters? LW

Outing Reports

TAMARACK NOTCH, BREWERS CORNERS, February 26, 2011, by Sue Thomas, leader

One of this snowy season's big dumps having occurred overnight, we decided not to assume any parking would be available at the Notch so early and opted for a snowshoe up the Bucklin Trail to the bridge instead. This had the added benefit of no snowmobiles, making for a much more peaceful hike, and the new snow sparkling in the sun was a treat.

When we had almost reached the bridge, we looked back to see a late arrival – our shortest Killington Section member, Burdock Parker, was barreling gamely through the powder. No easy feat when the snow is deeper than you are tall. He was pleased to find that he had arrived just in time for lunch, probably his goal all along.

After lunch, we decided it was too pretty to go home, so continued on up the trail for a bit before turning back, making way now and then for back-country skiers coming down from Killington. Alas, no one seemed lost, which was a bit of a disappointment. We had looked forward to pointing them toward the long walk out to Route 4. Yes, we are evil!

THE DOME, POWNAL, March 13, 2011, by Larry Walter, leader

The weather report was awful, but two other fools, er GMC'ers showed up at the park. It's a long drive to Pownal, so we decided to come up with something closer and relatively wimpy. Seeing as how Sue was the only one with a car, Tom and I piled into the venerable "Bob" and took a quick run over to Pine Hill Park. The hike/shoe up through the park was nice and quiet, with just a couple others out on the trails. Gas saved: check. Hiked some winter fat off: check. Put a couple more miles on Bob: check. It's nice hiking with good people, just about in any weather.

COY HILL RD AND BUXTON RD., MIDDLETOWN SPRINGS, April 17, 2011, by Diane Bargiel, leader

Mud and rainy season had arrived, so come Sunday morning of our scheduled hike, there was a real concern about the weather and the temperature. Storms north of Route 4 had been predicted, and as I walked out on my back deck, I could literally see the dividing line above my own yard (the north side of which had nasty clouds and the south had more puffy clouds with some visible sky).

I called folks to see if they were going to take a chance. Barry, Barb, Sue, Tom, and Larry were the hearty souls that morning who listened to me as I said something about there being no rain at all above East Poultney, and the word from Middletown Springs shared the same news. On top of that, the temperature was comfortable.

So, everyone got in their cars to meet me, even though it had been pouring in Rutland and Shrewsbury all morning long. Imagine how I felt then, when I drove out of my garage about 15 minutes prior to the meeting time and was hit with sprinkling raindrops that turned into a steady rain. I was sweating it out that I'd have a bunch of folks a little annoyed with me, but luckily, everyone was in good humor and by the time we hit the trail-head, so-to-speak, the rain had stopped and I didn't get strung up for mucking up people's day. Phew!

The six-mile loop on dirt roads was lovely and included an alpaca farm (which is the site of the original Coy homestead), streams, signs of a dog-sled trail, beautiful views, a mix of conifers and budding hardwoods that were in the beginning stages of their spring awakenings, and an uphill and a downhill that gave us a nice balanced workout. By the way, the uphill climb on the west side of Coy Hill is more gradual than the east side.

We finished with a meal at Sissy's Kitchen on her front porch on Route 140 just past the intersection with Route 133 where we had originally gathered. Then we checked out the cemetery across the street where we read some very dark and ominous grave stones from the 18th and 19th centuries. I don't know about the rest of the gang, but I'm glad that I didn't live around those folks!

It ended up being a fun and nourishing walk without any rain. Many thanks to the gang for being such good sports and good company.

BOTANY AND BIRDING AT SHAW MOUNTAIN, BENSON, May 14, 2011, by Connie Youngstrom, leader

Our group of seven was just the perfect size for a slow-paced ramble on the footpath at Shaw Mountain. This Nature Conservancy preserve is host to a wide array of spring wildflowers and many rare plants. We could comfortably gather in close to observe the plants growing at our feet or crane our necks while searching for an elusive songbird in the greening treetops. Thankfully, the forecasted rain held off until we returned to our cars at the trailhead, even though the skies remained dark and brooding and the air cool. Highlights for plants included Purple Virgin's Bower, a rare little Wild Clematis that is at its northern most reach at Shaw Mountain. Ironically, one of the rambling vines draped lavishly over an invasive honeysuckle shrub. Not far away, an interesting double form of White Trillium was spotted. It sported six sepals and six leaves rather than the usual three. Barb aptly renamed it "sexillium" and took some excellent photos of the plant. The usual list of spring flowers – Dutchman's Breeches, Squirrel Corn, many Violet species, Barren Strawberry, and more. A partial list of the birds heard or seen included Ovenbird, American Redstart, Black-Throated, Green, Black, White and Yellow Warblers, Common Yellowthroat, Swamp Sparrow, Ruffed Grouse, Tufted Titmouse, Red-Bellied Woodpecker, Baltimore Oriole, Wood Thrush, Hermit Thrush, Eastern Wood Pewee, Red-Eyed Vireo, Cardinal, Rose-Breasted Grosbeak, Yellow-Throated Vireo, Scarlet Tanager and Great-Crested Flycatcher, just to name a few! A nice look at a Garter Snake, several Red Efts, an America Toad and an unseen Northern Grey Tree Frog that screamed from a treetop.

LYE BROOK FALLS, MANCHESTER, May 30, 2011, by Sue Thomas, leader

Our appointed day dawned stormy
The rain date, it was worse,
We settled then on Monday,
And woke to rain, of course.

As dark clouds loomed above the ridge
With forecast grim and wet,
We slathered on the bug spray,
And to the falls we set.

And there we found a wondrous sight-
Not of the falls I speak,
But lo, the sun, that yellow thing,
Gone AWOL all last week!

The blue sky went right to our heads,
The hike out, oh so merry,
We just had to share our joy,
With Messrs. Ben and Jerry.

NEW MEMBER

Hi to all fellow members of the GMC. My name is Paul Norton and I am the proud father of Allison Norton. I recently became a GMC member this past March. Unfortunately, my hikes are limited to 2-mile walks through my South Buffalo neighborhood two or three times a week. I do look forward to hiking the woods of upstate NY every Fall during deer season. I am proud of Allison and her husband, Phil, and all of their accomplishments. The pictures they send me make me want to be there with you guys. This is just a little note to say "Hi" from a proud new member of the GMC.

This n' That

100-Year Celebration

Will Wiquist, new CEO of the Green Mountain Club, was the guest speaker at the 100th year anniversary celebration of the Killington Section, held on June 4, 2011 at the Inn at Long Trail. Over 30 club members attended the GMC benefit dinner, hosted by Patty and Murray McGrath of the Inn at Long Trail.

With help from research done by past president, Barry Griffith, of Shrewsbury, Will reviewed the early days of the Killington Section and how the Killington Section came to be.

The following is a synopsis prepared by Killington Section member, Kathleen Krevetski, of Will's presentation that evening:

In 1911, the Vermont Magazine noted a meeting on October 4th of that year that was organized by Margaret Clement where Green Mountain Club President, James P. Taylor, talked about the work and projects of the Green Mountain Club, with the result that the 25 people in attendance that night organized the Killington section, just one year after the founding of the Club. By 1913, with the Killington section on board, the Long trail stretched from Killington Peak to Smugglers Notch. From 25 members in 1911 to 245 Killington Section members 100 years later, the Green Mountain Club today has grown to over 10,000 members worldwide.

For over one hundred years, the Green Mountain Club has been working to build and then maintain and promote the Long Trail and other hiking trails in Vermont. Will acknowledged the Killington Section has been an essential part of this organization. When the Green Mountain Club was first established at a meeting in Burlington in 1910, the first donation to the club was $100 from Mr. M.E. Wheeler of Rutland. Rutland County was the home of the Club from 1917 through 1978. Right there at the top of Sherburne Pass, Killington, Mortimer Proctor took the lead in paying for the famous Long Trail Lodge, which served as the Club's central meeting place and home since 1923. The Lodge incorporated mossy rocks and used birch wood throughout, which eventually became such a popular tourist attraction that it was transferred to private management and unfortunately burned down in 1968.

It was in that Lodge that the Club celebrated completion of the Long Trail in 1931. The Club later moved its offices first to downtown Rutland, then to Montpelier and eventually to Waterbury where we make our home today.

There is something special about the Long Trail that has inspired dedication and sacrifice from Vermonters and non-Vermonters for more than 100 years. Will said for him it is the quiet breeze on the mountain tops, the exhilaration of seeing a splendid view, the sense of accomplishment one gets from besting a tough trail and working with others on a common mission. Like so many, Will admitted that when he first started hiking, it never occurred to him to ask who made the trails possible as they were part of the landscape. Despite its age, the Long Trail never fails to inspire hikers to commit so much time and energy into making the trails accessible and promoting the role of mountains in people's lives. Now more than ever, Will knows it takes hard work and planning, with so many people making a difference and working together today to make the hikes of tomorrow possible.

It is the members of the Green Mountain Club that do so much of that heavy lifting -literally and figuratively- that makes for the hiking experience we treasure. He told us two things he knows for sure since being with the Green Mountain Club for a little over a month: the Club is a great organization powered by great volunteers, and his boots are not waterproof enough for trail work during mud season.

It is the volunteers that make this organization tick and all are welcome, because for every white blaze you paint on every red spruce on Dear Leap, there is a white blaze fading on a maple in Jay. Along with our partners in the Forest Service, the State government and the organizations such as the Appalachian Trail Conservancy and ALDHA, we all come together and work hard to keep the trails open, safe, and beautiful today and for generations to come. We volunteer because we love the trails, we love the woods, we love Vermont and we love the Green Mountain Club. I (Will) ask that you continue to remind people of the role that the Green Mountain Club plays in making the Vermont Mountains play a larger part in the life of the people while maintaining and promoting the outdoor experience we all cherish. Thanks you all for your commitment to the Green Mountain Club.

Volunteers Spend Over 200 Hours Getting Trails Ready for Summer

By Herb Ogden, Section Trails & Shelters Co-Chair

Since late November of 2010, at least 20 Killington Section volunteers have spent at least 200+ hours working on our trails and many more hours getting to and from work sites. I write "at least" because some folks do not keep track of their time. Co-Chair, Wayne Krevetski, and I do appreciate those who keep time records. The Appalachian Trail Conservancy and the U.S. Forest Service have an appetite for statistics. Also, being able to cite worker hours can come in handy when the GMC is lobbying for something in Montpelier.

Here, in alphabetical order, is the Honor Roll of those who have checked sectors, cut brush, sawed and moved blowdowns, dug out ditches, painted blazes, carried or built bog bridging and repaired shelters: Dave Coppock, Tom Copps, Scott Erickson, Anne Gallivan, Barbara Griffith, Barry Griffith, Allison Henry, Lynda Hutchins, Wayne Krevetski, Joe Minard, Cindy Oas-Kirk, Herb Ogden, Debbie Schoch, Tom Shanahan, Cindy Taylor-Miller, Sue Thomas, Steve Walsh, Larry Walter, Steve Williams and Connie Youngstrom. There may well be others who have helped keep the trails in shape, but just have not told us. Many thanks to all!

Our Lowland Work Party on May 7, 2011 saw nine people fix the worst problems between Wallingford Gulf and the Gov. Clement Road. On June 4, 2011, National Trails Day, fourteen of us did the same between the Gov. Clement Road and the site of Tucker-Johnson Shelter on the LT and the Sherburne Pass Trail. Smaller groups or one-person work parties had already done the Bucklin Trail, the Killington Spur and the Cauty Trail up Blue Ridge Mountain. In general, our trails are in good to excellent shape.

This is not to say there is nothing left for folks to do. Bog bridging needs to be added or replaced in several areas, including south of the Keiffer Road, north of Gov. Clement Shelter, and near Jungle Junction on the ridge between Pico and Killington. We have purchased the materials, but people are needed to carry it in and spike it down. Various trails need brush lopped on the sides. Some stretches need to have blazes repainted. Signs need to be made for the Bear Mountain vista spur, Hermit Spring, the Gov. Clement Road crossing, the Cauty Trail trailhead and various features around Gov. Clement Shelter, Pico Camp and Churchill Scott Shelter. We are scheduling a Fall work party, but individuals or small groups could do a lot in the meantime. For a full list, please see the Section Website or contact me or Co-Chair, Wayne Krevetski.

Outing Reports

THE HISTORY HIKE THAT BECAME A WORK PARTY, June 25, 2011, by Herb Ogden, leader

This was supposed to be a loop hike: north on the LT from VT 103 to above the Lottery Road and then return via old roads and the Bullard Cemetery. But when the official forecast included an over 60% chance of thunderstorms, I decided it was not appropriate to have an official hike where we probably could not reach safety in time if the storms came our way. Instead, I invited volunteers to saw up and remove a small but intense area of new blowdowns just south of Clarendon Gorge. At least there, we had a good chance of reaching cover before a storm reached us. Barry Griffith and Sarah Beard joined in the effort. With the one man crosscut saw and a couple of bow saws, we reopened the trail. There were some pretty spectacular uprooted evergreens to deal with. The planned hike will be rescheduled for October.

OLD JOB TRAIL, MOUNT TABOR, July 2, 2011, by Sue Thomas, leader

Luckily, we had Barry along on our hike through the Old Job site to keep the ghost of Silas Griffith at bay. From all I have read about him, he likely would have charged us a toll and made us buy our lunches at the company store! Barry's ancestor, and Vermont's first millionaire, owned a logging and charcoal operation along Ten Kilns Brook. All that is left now of the village of Griffith is a huge pile of sawdust, but a notebook at the Old Job shelter has old photos, maps and newspaper clippings.

We had lunch by the very impressive new bridge at the shelter and then skedaddled before Old Silas could charge us a fee for use of the picnic table. Thank goodness he had not yet thought of a coin-operated outhouse!

OTTER CREEK PADDLE, July 10, 2011, by Barry and Barbara Griffith, leaders

Paddlers: Barry, Mary, Jerry, Barbara, Barb, Steve, Lynda, Linda, Ted, Martha, Jen, Diane, Burdock (last names withheld to protect the perpetrators...)

It rained Friday night. It rained hard. It rained a lot. I heard it. Wondering how high the Creek would be Saturday morning. Knew there would be much more water chugging along the Otter. By the time we got everyone assembled at the "put in spot," there were 12 people, 1 dog, 9 cars. You all know how the drill goes-everyone out, kayaks off vehicles, paddles, life vests and other paraphernalia. The drivers then back in their vehicles and off to where we would "take out" later at the bridge on Alfrecha Road. Reassemble the drivers in 2 vehicles and back to the "Trail Head." (So far so good?)

"The water was murky.
The people were perky"

The water was moving right along. This is usually a fairly easy, but muddy spot to launch from. Now paraphernalia into kayaks, paddles, life vests and one by one, two by two we encounter very tippy conditions. Almost all in the Creek and we hear, "Where's my paddle"? Oh no! A paddle has been left in a vehicle and that vehicle was back at the "take out!" Rats! Barry tosses his keys and away speeds Linda to retrieve her paddle.

So we are a flotilla of 11 and 1 Burdock moving right along...trying to slow down a bit. 13 minutes later, we hear a Beep Beep! Before we know it, we are once again a complete group. As I said, the old river was moving right along. There were eddies, currents, small whirlpools and muddy water abounding. Then along came the stringers, debris across the waterway. When doing this trip with two people it is pretty quick. With 12 people to get around, over or through, it takes awhile. We were able to get around most sites. Branches were moved. Barry brought his trusty handsaw so we cut through other debris. Who would have thought we would have to do trail maintenance? Over logs, over branches, under this and that. The conditions were very tippy for some kayaks as currents caught one unawares and up against logs and such just under the surface. We were pushed sideways, backwards, every which way (even over, but I get ahead of myself!)

"Over logs, over branches
We hit the muddy trail
As our Kayaks kept floating along (mostly)"

The first one to capsize was Martha. Over she went. Now, if you have paddled Otter Creek you know that the riverbanks are steep and muddy. Places to get out are rare and today even rarer! We were glad she had her PFD on! She clung to her kayak as we floated along locating an appropriate place to get her ashore. It was about 10 minutes before we found a suitable place. Jerry luckily had his nifty hand pump. Others had dry clothes to warm her up. The "crew" all worked together to solve the problems.

Once again, we were Off! More stringers and such. Cheering squads emerged to help everyone handle the stream issues. Then, my gosh, over goes Steve!! Again, I am grateful that he had his life vest on. His kayak takes in much water and once again the "Team" takes on the role of finding a landing strip, tugging the kayak to a tiny patch of land (almost capsizing another vessel in the process) and Jerry and his trusty pump are once again to the rescue. (His arms were growing weary, no room for anyone else to help out.) They get launched again and we are underway.

The group was growing weary. Luckily, we were nearing the end. We keep hearing, "How will we know where to take out?" We alleviated fears by indicating the bridge where the cars were waiting for us. Then, low and behold we were there!! Yea! One and all keep thanking us for a great trip. I certainly won't forget this one!! 12 in and 12 out (and 1 dog). What an adventure we had!! Thank you all for "stepping up to the plate".

(and I did not have my camera!!)

BUCK MOUNTAIN, FORT ANN, NY, July 24, 2011, by Sue Thomas, leader

Hot, muggy and AWFUL was the consensus by the small group brave enough to assemble at the park on Saturday. Even having a "new" car with AC for the first time in years* did not make the prospect of slogging up the mountain appealing. So the decision was unanimous to reconvene the following day, when the weatherman had promised cooler temps and air that did not feel like a cotton-batting overcoat.

Good choice! Sunday was a beautiful clear day and we were rewarded at the summit with spectacular views of Lake George and the Adirondack High Peaks, which we enjoyed while munching wild blueberries. Amazingly, we had it all to ourselves for quite a while. We watched the paddle wheel tourist boat chug up the Lake, reminisced about Barb's rattlesnake encounter at Tongue Mountain across the Lake, and I, for one, would not have traded places with the "beautiful people" at the ritzy island resort down below.

*A note to the many friends of Bob the Car - Bob is enjoying a well-earned retirement in the country on a nice farm where he can run with all the other Neons.

SHAFTSBURY STATE PARK, July 31, 2011, by Larry Walter and Viv Bebee, leaders

Five of us made the trip over to this wonderful little 80 acre pond. There's a full picnic and swimming area on the east shore, complete with showers, boat rentals, toilets, grills and a little short-order establishment. The weather was very warm, but a nice breeze kept us comfortable. Just perfect for a quick trip around the pond on the nature trail (about a mile does the circuit). The trail runs along a pretty good stretch of wooden walkways elevated over the swampy portions of the shore. We were impressed with how well-maintained the paths and walkways were. We brought a collection of boats along, so we toured some of the wetlands on the far western side of the pond (a brief portage was necessary) where we encountered geese, cedar waxwings, a heron, woodpeckers, and several other, unidentified critters. The water temp was heaven and the swimming area had a nice, sandy bottom. Walking, paddling, reading, swimming and, of course, eating made for a relaxing day. Shaftsbury Lake is definitely worth a return trip next summer. Thanks for the company.

RATTLESNAKE POINT, SALISBURY, August 14, 2011, by Larry Walter, leader

The weather didn't look that promising for the day's hike, but the big thunder cells held off long enough for us to reach the point and get back off without getting sprinkled on. The new bridge at the Falls of Lana was impressive. It looks like it'll be there for a while. The falls are always beautiful.

It was muggy, but our deliberate pace up the Aunt Jenny Trail put us at the south-facing vista just before lunch. From there we took in a very nice view of the Greens along with a good portion of Silver Lake. We worked our way around to the west-facing lookout just in time to watch a sailboat race on Lake Dunmore.

Our return followed the same route until we reached the penstock where we bailed off westerly to the highway and a quick trip south along the same to our cars. If you know where to look, there are inscriptions left by the settling family close to the penstock and another very nicely chiseled homage to Aunt Jenny by her son, down by the northerly parking lot. Seven in and seven out. A good day.

This n' That

100th Anniversary Event, by Vivian Bebee

For those of you who were not at our Fall potluck this year, you missed a special treat indeed. Cindy Miller and Barry Griffith gave us a wonderful, historical slideshow and commentary presentation. There were seven (past and present) Presidents of the Killington Section in attendance: Wayne Krevetski, Barry Griffith, Herb Ogden, Rob Carey, Sue Carey, John Martin and Janet Martin. Also, Bob Perkins, Rob Carey and Herb Ogden shared with us most interesting reminiscences of their "collective" years as members of the Club. Last, but very not least, Allison Henry created an imaginative and edible "Prickles Porcupine," which included a cheese ball with pretzel sticks for quills and black olives for eyes, and Sue Thomas created a chocolate cake of the Killington Section of the Long Trail (miniature, of course) with white chocolate chips for the LT, blue M&M's for side trails and many artistically-detailed signs, depicting a Patch Hollow miniature Barry Griffith in grass skirt, Sink Hole, "commodious commode" outhouse, Churchill Scott shelter and Pico Camp, to name just a few, and a bridge of toothpicks and string over Clarendon Gorge. Many thanks to all those mentioned above, as well as to the "cooks," for their hard work, time and effort so graciously given.

Outing Reports

SNAKE MOUNTAIN, April 2, 2011, by Allison Henry, leader

When I put this hike on the schedule in January 2011, I was dreaming of sunny, 70 degree weather. You never know, it could happen. We woke up to a grey, damp day with questions of "should we even go?" Since there was no voracious downpour or freezing rain, the answer was, of course, "yes." Two groups met at the Mountain Road (west side) trailhead for a total of five happy hikers. At the trailhead, the weather was sunny and in the high 50's. YAY! The second most exciting part of the hike occurred here. In the middle of the parking lot there was a giant femur. Other bones were nearby. There turned out to be a whole animal carcass (cow?) wrapped in plastic in the woods beyond the lot. Probably an enterprising dog had dragged some of the parts into the parking lot, no doubt called off by a horrified owner. Off we went to the trail, admiring Sue's house along the way. We followed the carriage road up to the summit, which was a mix of frozen mud and long section of old, packed snow. Snowshoes were not really needed, but stepping off the previously-trodden, packed snow resulted in sinking up to your knees in soggy, wet snow. The summit was sunny, but very, very windy. A group of college-age students were sunning themselves on the slab, but we older folks did not prefer such extreme conditions. The first most exciting part of our trip occurred at the summit. Despite the sun, we could see that it was getting suspiciously darker. Huddled on the summit slab, we could see a giant, dark, swirling cloud of snow hovering over the Adirondacks, inching toward us. We made our way down the side trail a ways to the pond and had a quick lunch, watching the swirling cloud get closer and closer. The sun disappeared and one or two snowflakes fell as we descended. A few moments later, the sun reappeared and the sky turned blue again. We could still see out over the valley from the trail, and there were no angry clouds or snowflakes in sight. The rest of the hike was uneventful, and upon reaching our cars, we were reluctant to leave. A good time was had by all. Make no bones about it! If you don't like the weather in Vermont, wait five minutes.

KILLINGTON SECTION ANNIVERSARY HIKE, August 7, 2011, by Allison Henry

This year marks the 100th anniversary of the Killington Section of the Green Mountain Club. To commemorate the occasion, we arranged an "end to end" hike of the portion of the Long Trail that the Killington Section maintains, from Route 140 to Route 4. We did about 23 miles over three days. I was joined by member Joe Minard and friend Kathi, as well as the very famous Prickles Porcupine! Prickles had been shuttled down to Rutland the day before by one Dave Hardy, himself. Our Outings Director, Sue Thomas, joined us for the first half of the trip, and Section President, Wayne Krevetski, showed up a little later on the first day and participated for the rest of the journey. The purpose of this hike was not only to mark the Killington Section's anniversary, but also to give us a chance to admire our beautiful Section. Part of the reason for scheduling this hike for August was to informally spread word among the many hikers, LT end-to-enders and AT thru-hikers along the Trail about the Green Mountain Club and our mission. Our Section was in great shape, not only due to our efforts, but also due to work in current and previous seasons by the Long Trail Patrol and even VYCC. To further celebrate our anniversary, we took the "historic" route of the Trail after crossing Route 103, which means we went up an old road past a Crowne Point Road marker rather than climbing the "Great Gulch." As a result, we ended up at Clarendon Shelter campsite ahead of some very speedy thru-hikers, who had gotten off the Trail for a few hours to go to the Whistle Stop. They did a double-take when they saw we had arrived first! At the campsite that night, there were 14 tents: AT and LT northbounders and southbounders, a few weekenders and us, for a total of 22 people. Sue seemed disappointed to leave us the next morning as we headed through the fields of the Lottery Road area. We had lunch at Governor Clement and admired last year's improvements. Killington was a long, difficult climb that literally took ALL DAY. During our toil up Killington, we met Kim aka Bliss, the Coolidge Range ridgerunner. We finally reached Cooper Lodge in the late afternoon and found ourselves engulfed in a cloud. In the shelter, we encountered two SOBO AT hikers, Whisky and J-Tree, who are veterans of the Long Trail Patrol. Turns out they had already met Prickles and had been in the car with her on her shuttle to Rutland. Kathi, Prickles and I opted to spend the night in Cooper Lodge, since its days are numbered, and had it to ourselves except for one tiny toilet paper-thieving mouse. The gentlemen tented on the platforms. Unfortunately, it started raining soon after everyone turned in for the night, which meant a soggy trek out in the morning. I especially enjoyed the section from Cooper north to Jungle Junction because it is a beautiful, remote-feeling section of trail and I am the section checker. To maintain the historic nature of our hike, we walked out on the Sherburne Pass Trail aka "The Old Trail." Long Trail Ale was waiting for us at the trailhead courtesy of Phil Henry Shuttle Services, Inc.!

HAYSTACK (PAWLET), August 20, 2011, by Steve Williams, leader

Thanks to Sue Thomas' guidance of a Rutland contingent, the complete group assembled with Steve Williams and Diane Bargiel from elsewhere at the Waite Hill Road trailhead just about on the nose of 10:00 a.m. About an hour and a quarter took the group to the summit via a short portion of Tunket Hill Road, followed by a Nature Conservancy trail almost to the summit, thence by what seems to be a generally recognized right-of-way on a limited section of private property to the summit itself; an easy trail with only one brook crossing, and a steeper pitch towards the summit. From the fortunately cleared summit, there are fine views of the Mettowee Valley, Lake St. Catherine, Killington and the eastern Adirondacks. Using the leader's as yet unrecognized expedition efficiency index ("EEI") (equals the rewards divided by the required effort to reach a given location), a high result was expected for the summit and was indeed measured. After a refreshing lunch break at the summit, a one hour ramble returned the group to the trailhead.

FALL HIKES AFTER IRENE, September 24, 2011 and October 8, 2011, Sue Thomas, leader

Our hikes this Fall of 2011 have involved a good deal of improvisation and last-minute rerouting, thank you Irene (grumble). She fuddled both the 100th anniversary trek up the historic Killington carriage road and my October hike around Chittenden Reservoir. Both areas remained off-limits due to storm damage and the minor detail of access roads that were no longer there. That Irene was nothing if not thorough.

So, in September, we decided that if we couldn't climb Killington, we could at least look at it from a distance and settled on Grandpa's Knob in Hubbardton. We could see when we got there that Irene had had her way with Belgo Road, as well, but repairs had been made and we had a very nice hike to the ridge top.

In October, I chose Moscow Pond and Glen Lake as a substitute destination. It was one of those gloriously warm, blue sky days that we think about while scraping the ice off our windshields in December, and what better place to be than a trail along the lakeshore. Ahhh! We checked out the beaver lodge on Moscow Pond, enjoyed lunch at the Glen Lake overlook and basked in the sun at each and every peninsula along the shore, where the water reflected the brilliant blue sky and gold autumn leaves. A stop for ice cream at the country store completed our perfect day. You may now resume ice scraping.

PICNIC ROCK HISTORY HIKE, September 10, 2011, Barb and Barry Griffith, leaders

In the aftermath of Hurricane Irene's destruction from two weeks before, we were wondering if we should cancel this trip, but decided to go forth knowing that we would have to change the hike parameters and modify the trip a bit. The CCC Road being closed and gated, we obtained permission to park in Karen and John Lorentz's driveway. Having to walk in to our starting point added another three miles to this adventure. Being a democratic society, the participants were polled as to whether they wanted to do the climb to Picnic Rock or a walk out to the firing range as we knew we could not do both. The vote was cast for the rock, and we ventured forth. The day was glorious; 11 individuals set out to learn some history of the CCC Road, picnic area and such. Within ½ mile, Shrewsbury Peak rose in the distance at a height of 3,737 (not our destination today). We would soon be on its NW slope.

The Griffiths pointed out old insulators in trees on the south side of the road that they understand were to bring communications to the firing range. Meeting House rock was next on the agenda, where some of Shrewsbury's earliest church services were held. The natural amphitheater was evident. We paused for reflection. Soon the group was at the Picnic Pavilion where, today, only a chimney stands, remnants of the grand building from yesteryear. A photo of the area was passed around showing the former building, the well house and the clearing all around.

We proceeded up Russell Hill to the Russell Hill Shelter, hiking along the side trail to Shrewsbury Peak. From here, there were a few rights and lefts along trails, snowmobile paths, Catamount Trail paths and logging roads until we reached our destination at Picnic Rock. (To be accurate, we went left off the CCC Road, left off the Peak Trail, right off the Vast Trail, left off the logging road, right off the secondary logging road, right into the Rock.)

After much admiration of what we believe is Shrewsbury's largest glacial erratic, the party celebrated a picnic in memory of all the picnics that had gone before. A measuring tape was produced and the dimensions of the boulder were recorded as 25 feet tall and 100 feet in circumference. Doing online research, a cubic foot of granite weighs 165 lbs. (some rock is heavier than others are). Playing with these numbers, our estimate is that Picnic Rock weighs a whopping 1,237 tons (more or less).

Our return trip was a stroll through the old CCC-built picnicking sites. Remnants of fireplaces are still in use. We even came upon a swing and enjoyed more leisure time before heading back out to our vehicles. Our next history hike will be to the firing range, outhouse and stone shelter on October 22. This too has been modified. We planned on Shrewsbury Peak, but the Black Swamp Road has washed out. Perhaps the Peak in the spring of 2012!

WORK PARTY, November 5, 2011, by Herb Ogden, Trails & Shelters Committee Co-Chair

On a beautiful, sunny fifth of November, eight people showed up to help put our trails to bed. If we'd had twice the number, we could have done it pretty thoroughly. As it was, two people cleared waterbars from Wallingford Gulf to the top of Bald Mountain, two cleared from Clarendon Shelter to the Lottery Road, two cleared from US 4 to the Tucker-Johnson shelter site and then out the AT and Sherburne Pass Trail south to Sherburne Pass, and two went to the Keiffer Road to lug the bog bridging, which had been left there in the Spring, into the brook to install it. All but the last two did fine. The last two searched high and low and right and left for the lumber and finally reluctantly concluded that someone had stolen it. All they could do was shim up some of the existing, rotting bog bridging and improve the side ditching just south of the road. They then scouted a possible relocation of the Long Trail south of the Upper Cold River Road.

What a lack of volunteers left undone was the entire Cauty Trail up Blue Ridge Mountain, the Sherburne Pass Trail south of US 4 to the ski trail, and the Long Trail from Jungle Junction. to Shrewsbury Peak Junction. The first two, especially, have scores of waterbars. Please, if you have the time and energy, consider borrowing a hoe from Co-Chair, Wayne Krevetski, and clearing waterbars before the snow is too deep.

The Honor Roll for this work party was Tom Copps, Allison Henry, Cindy Miller (Ms. Gorp), Cindy Oas-Kirk, Herb Ogden, Gregg Rickert, Sue Thomas and Larry Walter.

Killington Section Directors' Meeting

Minutes of Directors' Meeting

September 27, 2011

By Allison Henry, Secretary

Present: Wayne Krevetski, Steve Williams, Gerry Martin, Allison Henry, Tom Copps, Sue Thomas, Dave Coppock, Herb Ogden and Vivian Bebee.

Meeting called to order by Wayne at 6:08 p.m. It was unanimously passed that Dave Coppock be officially appointed to the Board. Welcome to Dave, new Director! "Close the door before he bolts!" Minutes approved from 6/21/11 meeting.

We discussed the format of the minutes, both for on-record and for publication in Smoke & Blazes. The Editor of Smoke & Blazes has abbreviated the minutes at times due to space constraints. Allison offered to provide the Editor with a short version and a long version, but following discussion, it was informally decided to stick with current procedures: Allison will write minutes as usual and provide copies to the Board; Vivian will either print the minutes as is or edit for space.

Treasurer's Report by Gerry Martin:

- donation of $100 from the Killington Section (from Raffle at Inn at Long Trail dinner in June) was acknowledged with a thank you note from the Main Club.
- cds will roll over in mid-October; will keep accounts as they are. Yield painfully low.
- Kirk Funds paid out for lumber.
- Discussion regarding Kirk fund: Can we use only the interest? What is the principal balance we need to maintain? Can we draw from this fund for post-Irene repairs? Still can't find a clear answer in previous records or minutes. Herb suggested that he speak with Barry and Barb to get a summary of what they know; Allison and Sue will re-check old minutes.
- Report approved by Ogden/Williams.

GMC Main Club report provided by Director, Allison Henry. Highlights:

- Long Trail Patrol was off the trail due to Irene; instead worked in local communities for flood clean-up, including Waterbury, Jamaica and Newfane.
- Auditor has visited again; found "no red flags." Recommended better segregation of duties as well as clear documentation of use of restricted donations because donors expect it.
- Lowell Project Update (this refers to the Wind Project in Lowell near Belvidere Mountain): Appeals are in progress, but the company is "ignoring" them for now and proceeding with the project. No further role for GMC at this point. No word yet from FAA on light system (lights are required on some of the tallest turbine towers; new technology is available that would allow the lights to turn on only when a plane is in range rather than blinking all night and destroying the view). A State energy plan has been put out. It can be viewed and the public can make comments at vtenergyplan.vermont.gov. Make comments as a private citizen; GMC will make its own statement. We still need to work on the wording of our wind power policy.
- This year is the 20th anniversary of the Taylor Series; Sections are encouraged to hold an event. Can be held at no charge to the public; option to solicit donations.
- Current membership, 10,177; lots of positive media exposure this year including the Winooski project, new Killington Map, the renewable energy design of the Main Club HQ, and the new trail in the Northeast Kingdom. The Washington Post even covered the Long Trail Patrol.
- The 2012 Annual Meeting will be held at Jay Peak resort.
- The GMC is now responsible for all of the Appalachian Trail in Vermont. Care of the Long Trail from VT Route 12 to the Connecticut River was recently handed over to us from the Dartmouth Outing Club and approved with a Board vote. According to the O-Section, this section of trail "needs work but is comparatively undemanding."
- New trail in Northeast Kingdom has been built—ground broke on July 11; one and a half miles built in eight days. Hoping to eventually go 17 miles to Island Pond.

Trails and Shelters Report by Herb and Wayne:

- Most of LT/AT is open except for 103 to 4 and some side trails. Worst damage is in Shrewsbury area. Several bridges are out along the Trail and local roads, and a section of the trail has slid into Sargent Brook north of the Gould Brook crossing. Partnering with Forest Service on relocating and eventually reopening in this area. Safety is a concern. There are rumors of mud and landslides.

- Shrewsbury is looking into FEMA funds for bridge on Governor Clement Road.
- Dave Hardy in conjunction with some of our local people has proposed a road walk to circumvent the area, with signs posted. Once the Forest Service lets us back in, we can scout out and build a relocation, which is expected to cover about four tenths of a mile. Herb expects this would be an afternoon project for about half a dozen people. The Manchester section has also offered assistance. There was a motion to approve Dave Hardy's road walk, then once the area is reopened, Herb and Wayne would then work with Dave on a relocation (Ogden/Thomas); this was approved by the Board. Our proposed road walk was: West on the Cold River Road to the Wilmouth Hill Road; North on the Wilmouth Hill Road; East on the Upper Cold River Road; North on the Gilman Road; East on the Gov. Clement Road; and North on the LT to Gov. Clement Shelter, fording the W. branch of Sargent Brook, if necessary, where we lost the pedestrian bridge.
- Sherburne Pass Trail is not in restricted area, but no report of conditions. The Bucklin rail is okay—both bridges are there but there is a relo needed on a section between the bridges where the trail has been washed out.

Smoke & Blazes Report by Vivian Bebee:

- Thank you for timely submissions. We have a lot of material.
- Discussion of web site. Do we need any changes? Could use an update in photos and material. Schedule has been updated. Vivian and/or Wayne will take to our web person.

Outings Report by Sue Thomas:

- Hikes can be changed to work parties, especially if previously scheduled hike is in a closed area.
- Discussion; 10/15/11 hike changed to a work party.
- If you do cancel a hike, be sure to go to the park to make sure no one is waiting there. Also, if you cancel a hike due to lack of access, call Herb or Wayne ahead of time in case they want the hike changed to a work party.
- 100th anniversary potluck—our potluck will once again be at the Good Shepherd Lutheran Church on November 19. Barry will be doing a presentation. Hoping to have past K-Section presidents attend.

Other:

- Killington Trails Leadership Team: Wayne went to a meeting in July re: a Killington town trail that provides a loop walk in the Thundering Falls area. We expect this is now on a back burner due to Irene. Wayne mentioned that the Thundering Falls boardwalk is heavily damaged. A piece of it even ended up in Bridgewater and is being used to shore up someone's driveway!
- Taylor Series event? Traveler, Pete Lain, will be in area in February and has offered to do a presentation. Wayne will look into.
- Club Days this weekend at Eastern Mountain Sports. Looking for folks to man a table to talk about the Club, our activities, membership, etc.
- Appalachian Long Distance Hikers Association is having their gathering in North Adams, MA October 7-9. The GMC Main Club is trying to get a table at this event and will need volunteers. Wayne will be attending, but will have other obligations. If interested, speak with Wayne.
- Herb is looking for people to compile data from old Trail Registers, especially usage numbers. Tom Copps agreed to compile the Sherburne Pass Registers and Herb gave them to him. Herb is still looking for folks to compile the Upper Cold River Road and Cauty Trail Registers. We need the data for the Forest Service, among others.

Next meeting will be Saturday, November 19, at 4:30 before the Potluck to discuss any changes in trail conditions and any work that needs to be done due to Irene damage. Next regular meeting will be in January. Meeting adjourned at 8:06.

A Note from Killington Section President, Wayne Krevetski

Just a short note to bring you up to date on what has been happening on our section of the trail since Irene. To start with, we have a section north of Gould Brook that has been scouted for a relocation of the trail that washed into Sargent Brook. We are looking at putting the trail on higher ground to get it out of the wet areas just south of Upper Cold River Road. It is preliminary at this point and more scouting will be needed after spring thaw. Sticking with the trail in Shrewsbury, there recently was a meeting at the Shrewsbury Town Office with Town Officials, the GMC, Engineers, National Forest Staff and FEMA officials concerning bridge replacement in the Town. The good news is that there are plans to rebuild the bridge across Sargent Brook, maybe this Summer.

Late this past Fall, a relocation of the Bucklin Trail was flagged and brushed out. It is in the State Forest, and before it can be made permanent, additional permitting needs to be done. Again, we are also waiting for spring thaw to make some fine adjustments to keep a dry treadway. This relo will also bring you to higher ground above and to the north of Brewers Brook to avoid current wet areas on the trail.

If you have not heard, an individual has just been charged with burning down the Tucker Johnson Shelter. It is sad that it happened, but good to see that justice will be done. On the bright side, there has been scouting done for a better location for a replacement shelter. The Club, ATC and National Forest people seem to agree on a preliminary site a little north of the present side, off and above the trail. More to come on that in the future.

So, you can see there will be lots going on in our neck of the woods this Summer, and we also have Eastern Mountain Club Day in April.

If you are interested in helping out with trail work, or Section outreach, please contact me at wkrevetski@hotmail.com or call 282-2237.

Thank you and safe hiking.

Outing Reports

LOWER POULTNEY PADDLE, August 27, 2011, by Barb & Barry Griffith, leaders

With Hurricane Irene careening up the East Coast, we were wondering if we'd get this paddle in. Those who did call vacillated whether they should stay at home and batten down the hatches or get out on the water before the soaking rain attacked. Well, we had eight participants and two dogs who appeared to defy the Hurricane (the dogs had no choice).

This is usually a wonderful paddle on calm wide waters. We were not disappointed!! It is a bit difficult to describe where our "put in" spot was since the road system in West Haven, Vermont is a bit of a mystery without a map.

This day was the "calm before the storm." Throughout the trip, paddlers voiced concerns that they return home in time to prepare before the hurricane arrived. Weather alerts were still trying to track the path of Irene and what the impact would be on land-locked Vermont. We were oblivious to the destruction that was soon to be wreaked upon us! The Lower Poultney is a nice, quiet paddle. The river tends to be shallow and is much wider to paddle on than Otter Creek. A lot of the land in this area alongside the Poultney River is owned by the Nature Conservancy. As one paddles along downstream (south), Vermont is to your right and New York is on the left bank of the river. We had a wonderful day and welcome camaraderie, with no major (or minor) catastrophes!

On this day, the trip was fast. We managed to drag out for a muddy lunch spot. A cemetery was pointed out on a knoll. This being rattlesnake country, no one wanted to venture into the overgrown field. There were numerous water birds along the way. The riverbanks were lined with cottonwood and silver maples. We put in on the New York State side and took out in Vermont, near the Galick Farm.

BURLINGTON BIKE PATH, November 13, 2011, by Sue Thomas, leader

This year for our "safe" hunting season hike, the Killington Section ventured with great trepidation into the wilds of Burlington, more frightening for some of us than any African Safari. (Give me a charging Rhino any day, over a honking Lexus minivan).

Once parked and on foot, we felt much more at home, and the bike path proved an interesting change from our usual hikes as it followed the lake shore, and waves crashing on the rocks gave it an ocean feel. We were treated to a close-up view of a pileated woodpecker, and the more distant High Peaks of the Adirondacks across the lake.

We arrived at the bridge spanning the mouth of the Winooski River just in time for lunch at a small waterside park, then continued on past Colchester Bog and out onto the causeway, which connects the mainland with the Island of South Hero. By now, the sun had emerged and the sky turned blue, making the walk out into the Lake on the causeway scenic, if windy. Surprisingly, we had it mostly to ourselves, though a bicyclist whizzed by us in an awful hurry and in spite of the break in the causeway (where in summer a bike ferry transports people across) mysteriously never returned. We decided he had either been eaten by Champ or picked up by a Russian submarine.

All in all it was a great day, and we logged almost seven miles of hiking without hearing a single gunshot – only leaf blowers, which transformed mild-mannered Larry into Mr. Hyde. Fortunately, the things are so loud that the operators failed to hear the insults he hurled their way. Otherwise, he likely would have been beaten senseless with the hose attachment. Once he had been subdued and buckled into a straitjacket, all was well.

ANNUAL HOT DOG ROAST, LAKE BOMOSEEN STATE PARK, January 15, 2012, by Larry Walter and Vivian Bebee, leaders

We were a little doubtful that anyone would be crazy enough to participate in an outdoor cookout on the breezy west shore of Lake Bomoseen, especially since the projected high was 6°. Turns out we had four hardy souls besides us show up, so the gig was on. I secured a nice little expedition sled from Dave Coppock (Thanks Dave!) to drag our food and wood into the chosen campsite. There was just enough snow to make it an easy pull. It was a little windy, but we found a nice little shelter in the sun, with a decent fire pit on the down-wind side of the shelter. It was a good thing we ended up close to the entrance road, because we just managed to catch Steve Williams before he gave up on trying to locate us from all the tracks. The campground is a popular destination for the locals, who in turn manage to keep things picked up and orderly. In times past, we've left someone back with the fire while the rest of the group went for a hike, but it was close to lunch anyway, so we burnt some meat and flour-based products in quick order, cleaned up and readied for a hike. There's a nice little loop hike just to the north of the entrance drive that works its way up through the woods. It was just the right grade to keep us warm and occupied with some nice scenery. We noticed there were several fishermen on the lake, but they were all on foot. Much of the water was still open. Pretty strange winter so far.

HIGH POND, SUDBURY, January 28, 2012, by Barbara Griffith, leader

The Nature Conservancy trailhead to High Pond Preserve is on Ganson Hill Road in Hubbardton. High Pond, itself, is in Sudbury. The hiking trail was constructed by the Vermont Youth Conservation Corps in 2005. One word of caution about this trip – you hike in and down to High Pond. Which means that you have to climb up and out at the end. The last time we did this hike there were “feet” of snow on the ground. This day, there was none due to the mild winter pattern Vermont has been locked in. Just ice to contend with. Some hikers wore spikes, others just proceeded cautiously (tried to). Two had their breath knocked out when their feet went out from under them on the slippery slopes. Otherwise, the day was great weather, and we picnic-lunched in a sunny spot above the Pond.

Conservationist, Douglas Burden, started buying parcels of land here in the 1930's. Eventually, these lands came under the care of the Conservancy in the early 1980's. The Preserve now includes nearly three thousand acres in Hubbardton, Brandon, Pittsford and Sudbury. There is quite a history about the site that one can now access online.

RAIL TRAIL/ROAD HIKE, RUPERT TO WEST RUPERT, February 4, 2012,

by Vivian Bebee and Larry Walter, leaders

The morning of the hike looked to be shaping up like most of the VLB/LW outings: Really nice during the previous test-hike and awful for the official event. There wasn't anything in the forecast about snow, but it was definitely painting the road white at 0700. Things started clearing up as soon as we hit the road, and by the time we were nearing the kickoff point, it was sunny and about 20°. Not bad.

Viv spotted a couple strange vehicles at a RxR crossing on Route 153. Turned out to be some of our hiking mates. We had an excellent turnout with 14 people, including 4 newcomers. The entourage continued on down Vermont Route 153 toward Rupert and pulled over near the first crossing of the old railroad bed across the highway (within Rupert Town boundary). I'm not normally a big fan of rail to trail routes since the rail lines were extremely well engineered, hence almost devoid of detectable curves, horizontal or vertical. But this section runs by a lot of nice wetlands, with a little brook draining the same. It's supposed to be closed to motorized vehicles, although we spotted one heading towards Salem the week before. The brook had managed to get pretty wild, probably during Irene last summer, with several recently destroyed farm bridges and even the remains of an old barn along the way. We flushed the same grouse seen the week before. Lots of beaver activity. The ground was bare. No snow anywhere. Cold temperatures made the walking easy.

We left the rail trail after about 2+ miles for a brief tramp on Routes 153 and 315 in downtown Rupert to Youlin Road where we hooked a right and headed south up the hill. This road winds its way up an increasing grade, with little or no traffic, to connect to the Lang Road. There are only a handful of homes up this way, so the hike is pretty much non-motorized. A nice little surprise was the sighting of a couple bluebirds right along the road. I always forget how amazingly beautiful those little birds are. Seemed a little out of season to see them in VT, but there they were. We had lunch on the stone wall by the Hatch driveway at the top of the hill and continued southerly on the downhill slope of the Lang Road. There were some structures missing from the landscape that Viv remembered being there pretty recently. Seems the new owners removed any and all traces of the house and barn where Viv's childhood friends lived with their parents on a working dairy farm.

We continued on the Lang Road to West Rupert, turning right onto East Street, passing what used to be the two-room school house where Viv attended grade school (which is now the location for the Rupert Town Office, and also passed her grandparent's old place (a previous site of the Rupert Town Office), and eventually ending our hike at Viv's Mom's house. A quick trip in Mom's car delivered the drivers back to retrieve their auto's.

LILY POND, BOMOSEEN, February 11, 2012 (Sue Thomas, leader)

Hello GMC! My name is Patches, and this is my report on my first ever hike with the Killington Section. Oh boy, did I have a blast! I know I've only been around for four months, but it was the best time I've ever had! Everyone was so nice, but I did have my paws full keeping track of them all and had to run back and forth all day to make sure I didn't neglect anyone.

The best thing was I made two new dog friends – that Burdock knows everything there is to know about chasing varmints. I want to be just like him when I grow up!

I had such a great day! There were sticks to chase and chew, fascinating smells to be smelled, and I even tok a toboggan ride down an icy hill that was so much fun I went back up and did it again!

I almost couldn't believe my eyes, but all the folks actually sat down in the middle of the day and got FOOD out of their packs. Wow! That was awesome! Burdock says that's his favorite part of hiking with the club.

I couldn't understand why they all circled around Lily Pond though, since the other dogs and I had much more fun running across it on the ice. I guess people are strange sometimes.

Anyway, it was the best day ever, I couldn't stop wriggling. . .til I got in the car to go home, and then I was out like a light. I hear that happens with the people too.

Prickles, Allison, Kathi and Joe – Killington Section Anniversary Hike, August 2011

In case there are some of us who have forgotten what winter really looks like, this is a picture from a club hike in West Rupert, February, 2011. Tom Copps, Vivian Bebee and Sue Thomas are enjoying the view, while Larry Walter takes the picture. We believe we witnessed a bald eagle flying in the valley just below our eye level off this summit.

TRAIL MAINTENANCE REPORT, Tuesday, April 17, 2012, by Barbara Griffith

With a hoe, small saw and hand clippers I spent the day clearing water bars, trimming back small brush and picking debris on the LT/AT. My intent was to park on the Governor Clement Road and head north to the top of Little Killington. It was a glorious day, not too warm and a bit of a breeze. The trail was in amazingly good condition. Barry and I had been out last Fall cleaning water bars from the road into Clement shelter, so the first section I did wasn't too complicated. Saw my first snake of the season. It was a pencil thin, tiny, 10-inch garter snake basking in the sun. It moved away quite quickly when I disturbed it's peace. My next critter was a good-sized toad that was in the mucky mud of one of the water bars with a little wooden log bog bridge leading to it. Luckily my hoe didn't hack away any of it's appendages. I decided to be more careful of my digging techniques for the rest of the day. The trail and the woods were dry, and the understory was oh so dry.

The brook crossing to Clement, which is usually a challenge for me, was doable. Someone had put rocks across, so with hoe in one hand to balance and a pole in my other I was able to cross quite easily. A "thank you" to whoever facilitated that! (I suspect it was "Plans to Much.") It was now much later in the day than I had anticipated (Takes a lot of time cleaning water bars!), and I was wondering if I would make it to the top of Little Killington.

I continued up the road/trail, snagging off the road at the top of the rise. This section of the trail was a bit damp. There are multiple seeps along the side of this section, but still not the mucky, muddy state it usually is in. These water bars had not been cleaned last Fall so my job was a bit more challenging here. In the past when I had been in with a hoe, I had been in a hurry and had not taken the time to clean out the multiple "rock bogging" sections. The mud and leaves had hidden these rocks over the years, so I cleaned around, between and made the drainage more doable. This took a lot of time.

A large flat rock loomed ahead and had "lunch spot" written all over it. My arms were a bit sore, so I decided it was also a good time for a break. So quiet out there by myself, yet not so quiet. As I sat listening, I heard a barred owl hooting in the distance. Off and on, a Pileated Woodpecker was hammering away, and I heard it or them calling their kik-kikkik throughout the day. A little mole or mouse moved around in the leaf litter. Several different butterflies flitted around. The hillside was aromatic with the profusion of ramps. I decided I needed a few for my salad tonight so broke off a couple of leaves.) April 17th and the understory was alive with wildflowers. Trilliums were ready to bloom, but the weather is to turn colder, so I imagine they will be delayed for a while. Also budded were squirrel corn, trout lily, and a plant I could not identify (will have to look up when I get home). In bloom, I was delighted to see spring beauties, colts feet, and yellow violets. Earlier in the day, I checked out the area of the Trail where I have seen lady slippers every year, but they were not up yet.

Continuing up, I now knew I would not make the top at the speed I was traveling. That was OK. I made it to the "Ear Tree." (Those who know this section know what I mean. It's that tree with a limb that looks like an ear. I suspect it hears many stories throughout the hiking season.) I wandered along this ridge another 20 minutes not encountering any water bars or debris. I cut out 2 small trees that hikers had been going off trail to maneuver around. At this point, it was time to return home. I had accomplished most of what I had intended (except the top). It had been a wonderful day "on the trail" and, oh, it does take a long time to clean water bars!

Outing Reports

JOCKEY HILL, February 26, 2012, Barry & Barb Griffith, leaders

A group of nine hikers and two dogs gathered on the site of one of Shrewsbury's original settlers, Thomas Stewart, now known as the former site of the Tin Shanty, ready to hike in to our first destination. It was the first snowshoe of the season for most people. In fact, when people called to confirm, I warned them to dust off their snowshoes and they were incredulous that there would be that much snow (there was). We hiked up the Tin Shanty Road, donning our "shoes," snagged the snowmobile trail and continued to shoe in to the bottom of Jockey Hill. We passed by the Orey Wright Lumber Mill site where Barry pointed out that the lumber for the Northam Church had been milled here in the 1840's. On our return trip, we went in to look at the cellar hole and the stone wall in the stream bed that must have been a dam for said saw mill over 150 years ago.

At this point, we snagged an old logging road to the left and headed up the hill meeting the first real challenge of a stream crossing. (Later in the day we would hike in to the headwaters of this stream.) The snow was pristine, the skies were eggshell blue, the camaraderie calming. As we climbed, we started shedding layers of clothing. At the beginning of the day, it had been cool and a bit of a chill with the wind, but we warmed up quickly with the increased exercise.

Eventually the promised bushwhack commenced as we ascended at a greater slope grade. There sure were plenty of bushes whacking us and at different times, we had to pull two people back up from the snowy depths when they fell over. As we climbed, the snow became deeper and deeper, never losing its splendor. Upwards to the "rock on the rock"!

As always, just when you wonder if you'll ever make it, we reached the top of the hill at 2,641 feet elevation and were rewarded with great views to the east. We then climbed down to the rock and our lunch spot. Could this be an old Druid or Celtic worshiping site? Is the boulder a glacial erratic or is it a "dolman" balanced on those "peg stones" by cultures gone by? On the summer solstice, does the sun really shine past the pegs and align the beam? What is truth, what is fiction, and what is just imagination? (We saw no gnomes, but were they watching us?) Perhaps the magic was the glorious day that had wrapped itself around us.

Lunch being over, we took off for the next destination that Kathy Pingree had reminded us about earlier, the beaver dam meadow site. Off we slid down through the fluffy snow finding an abundance of animal tracks. Jerry pointed out fisher tracks. So far today we had seen the tracks of white-footed mice, voles, coyote, and squirrel. Once at the beaver dam site, we had great views to the north of Mendon, Little Killington and some more of the Coolidge Range.

From here the return trip started. We hiked out and eventually made it back to the old logging road that we had started in on, re-crossed the stream (no casualties), out to the snowmobile trail at the base of Jockey Hill and back to our vehicles. Before departing, we discussed the death of a hiker who died in January while out on the Emily Proctor Trail. I stressed the need for everyone to leave a note where they were or might be going and an intended return time. Alas, this did not help the young hiker in January.

BLACK MOUNTAIN PONDS, March 4, 2012, Allison Henry, leader

The network of trails on the east shore of Lake George is easily accessible and in my opinion, never too crowded. People seem to gravitate to the summit trails on sunny weekends (Black Mountain, Buck Mountain) leaving the more remote pond trails pretty quiet. We have done the Black Mountain Pond areas several times as a winter hike, but it is always a good choice—easy drive, plowed trailhead lot, and usually not too icy. We had a cloudy day for this hike with temperatures in the 30s. Our group included three regulars and two friends of the leader from NY. There was a little fresh snow, but mostly packed down, old snow. Like almost all of our hikes this winter, only microspikes or yaktrax were needed. After the slight climb from the trailhead, we paused at the turnoff for the Black Mountain summit trail, but with no takers we continued on as planned to the pond area. We reached our destination, Millman Pond, in time for lunch. The shelter is a marvel of caretakerdom. There are handmade shelves and storage nooks, frying pans, tools such as rakes and brooms and a well-built fire pit. The outhouse is a site to behold. Outhouse-themed comics and poetry on the walls, a built-in storage compartment for TP and, most of all, a red toilet seat labeled "Millman Pond hot seat," which is a close second to Minerva Hinchey's glory. After a dessert of rolo brownies (just what it sounds like—brownies festooned with chopped up rolo candies) our slog out was a bit slower thanks to full tummies and melty snow.

The most exciting part of our hike was during the drive home. On Washington County Route 6, Larry exclaimed, "Did you guys see that huge porcupine?" I made Sue turn the car around to go check it out. Back we went, necks craning, until Larry said, "Look! There!" and Sue turned the car around again. There certainly was SOMETHING there....a shaggy black animal who looked to weigh at least 40 pounds, clinging to a log in a wetland. "That's not a porky! It's a.....a.....I don't know!" At first, I thought it was a baby bear. It turned out to be a big, black, shaggy.....housecat. Sue got out of the car for a better look, and Mr. Kitty glaaaaaaaraaaed at her before slinking below the log, tail twitching.

PINE HILL TO PROCTOR, March 17, 2012, Sue Thomas, leader

With no leaves yet on the trees the woods were open and bright in the warm spring sunshine. Our merry band of hikers skipped happily along accompanied by the lovely trill of birdsong, oblivious to the peril ahead. Suddenly, the sky darkened and the peace was shattered by the deafening cries of hundreds of menacing birds! Their black bodies blocked out the sun as wave after wave passed overhead, and we cowered, grabbing for Burdock lest he be carried away in the cruel talons of...well, OK, they were just starlings, but it was impressive to see several huge flocks, very Hitchcock!

Nostalgia had inspired me to lead a hike on the old stage road from Pine Hill Park to Proctor before it becomes a more "civilized" mountain bike trail later this year as part of the ongoing expansion of the Pine Hill trail system. A large group patiently waited while we dropped some cars at the Proctor end. The first hill reduced our number by one and another turned back before we reached Rocky Pond. At that rate, I was afraid by the time we got to Proctor there would be no one left but me and the dogs! But the remainder of the group proved more hardy, climbing hills, negotiating a few muddy spots and endlessly tossing a Frisbee for our most tireless (four-footed) hiker, who logged more miles than the rest of us put together. We stopped for lunch at a small reservoir. One hiker who grew up in Proctor remembered coming there to swim and picnic when it was maintained as a town recreation area. We opted to picnic and skip the swim.

We emerged from the woods near the rusty remains of the old Proctor ski tow, glad to have spent a great day outside and also grateful not to have been dismembered by vicious birds – always a goal of the Killington Section.

SLACK HILL, April 14, 2012, Vivian Bebee and Larry Walter, leaders

We had an impressive turnout for this hike up through Coolidge State Park (Route 100A) with a head count of 18. The weather was near perfect. The bugs were few, but potent. More on that later. A non-democratic decision (meaning Larry decided) was made to make it a true loop by parking down by the highway. After organizing somewhat, the head of the monster launched itself up the paved road towards the check-in station (now vacant), passing some nice lodges and some decent views to the northwest. This many people are always challenging, but the GMC ethic kicked in reliably, allowing some of our slower hikers to catch up. It was good to see some returnees by newer participants, as well as some young friends of ours including, Peter, who will be graduating from college soon. Yikes! Peter has hiked with the GMC since he was 15. Larry tortured some of the latter with stupid tree ID questions. They nicely feigned to have (a) confidence in, and (b) a tepid interest in Larry's shaky dendro-knowledge.

The trailhead for the Slack Hill trail began just past the entrance station. About 2/3's of the way on the trail, Jerry Parker slid off to the left side to an old cellar hole, nicely signed "In Memory of Dick" (dated in the early 50's). Different theories were kicked around, including a pet dog once owned by Tom Copps. Once we returned to the trail, we had another steep section to finish before looping around the summit of Slack Hill, followed by a short descent to a small but very nice view to the south, with a bench. Since we weren't all going to fit on the bench, most of the group sat in the surrounding grass and brush. Our chief tick-magnet, Ms. Thomas, managed to produce one specimen crawling upon her person. This discovery produced the usual arms-up, airport security sort of scene, but no other eight-legged critters were discovered. I guess that's a heads up for the rest of the season. Normally there would still be snow on this trail in April, but not a trace of the stuff was to be seen, except up on the mountain resort trails. From the viewpoint, there's an easy hike down to an open field and picnic area with some more nice views. The trail then re-enters the woods and eventually crosses a major stream before heading down an old access road to the cars. Larry was called upon for his "near photographic" trail memory at one junction for a right or left opinion. Fortunately, Viv had a clearer memory and chose the correct direction that avoided Larry's hiking into a dead-end tent platform area. There's an interesting old CCC lodge site across a flood-damaged bridge near the parking area. Some of the stone work, including the old fireplace and retaining walls, are worth seeing. The remains of the original roof trusses are stacked nearby, but they're too far gone to be used again. Some pretty nice joinery went into these old places.

NATURAL BRIDGE, April 21, 2012, Sue Thomas, leader

Up the ridge to the natural bridge

We climbed and we climbed and we climbed.

"For that little bridge we climbed this @*!! ridge?"

Gasping for breath we whined.

"How nice to see" they said to me,

"Green things not seen since last Fall."

"What flower is it? It's so exquisite!"

And Stella, she sat on them all.

Down the ridge from the natural bridge

There in the underbrush thick.

Rocks piled in an arch, we halted our march

And Herb poked inside with a stick.

We readied to flee, but no beast did we see

From winter's slumber awake.

T'was but the steep grade of the old road that made

Our knees to tremble and quake.

MOREAU LAKE STATE PARK, April 29, 2012, Allison Henry, leader

Moreau Lake is a New York State Park just off the Northway, between Saratoga Springs and Lake George. When I lived in Saratoga, I used to go there for walks around the Lake. This past winter, I was invited on a hike there with friends and thought, "This really isn't all that far for a GMC hike." Thus, the hike made it onto our schedule. It was a nice day for a hike - sunny, windy and low 50's. Very few bugs! We had six "regulars" on this hike plus a pal of the leader, plus two pals of the leader's pal. One of our regulars immediately commented that yours truly was not our "token young person" on this particular hike.

Our fearless leader had followed the maze of trails in the park with friends and via sight, but navigating the park map (it cost $2, but was vastly superior to the tiny black-and-white internet printout initially used) was in itself an adventure. Red trails, white trails and trails that were not even on the map all added up to the fun of "I know where we are and how to find our way back to the car, but how do we get over THERE from HERE?" We followed a slowly rolling, ever climbing ROR trail (Red Oak Ridge) just above the campground road, until reaching a turnoff to the Overlook Trail. You might recall from the summary in the schedule that this hike included a "short steep section." Well, this was it, a half-mile climb with not one, but two steep sections that I'd call "talus fields" going nearly vertical. Hands down, this was the toughest part of the hike. Literally, hands-down. The overlook is just what you'd imagine, an overlook, looking east over Moreau Lake toward mountains in the distance which were probably some Taconics and some Greens. At the overlook, conveniently in time for lunch, our chatty group likely disrupted several individuals who had probably hoped for a quieter break on the summit. These folks were easily brought to the dark side with offers of brownies and chocolate eggs.

After coming carefully down the way we came up, with no casualties, we heard something coming through the woods above us and we turned in anticipation, hoping it was a deer or even a bear. It turned out to be a running man in green spandex, wearing a number and carrying a map. At first I thought he had gotten REALLY off course from the Lake George Half-Marathon, which was also taking place that day. He ran right past us and appeared not to have even noticed our group. We started seeing more and more such folks as we headed toward the Lake. Turns out they were participating in an orienteering race called the Billy Goat. They were zigging and zagging up and down the trails as well as bush-whacking through the woods in search of orange flags. We moved a few of the flags to make it easier for the competitors (just kidding).

Once down from the ridge, we made our best attempt to follow some of the trails around the Lake and wetland areas, once again with some head scratching, map rotating, and "how do we get there from here" from our leader. We saw lots of beaver work including a recently chewed tree more than twelve inches in diameter, and a beaver lodge right on the shore of the pond. One member of our party actually scaled the beaver lodge for closer inspection, probably causing the poor beaver family inside to believe that the apocalypse was imminent.

The end of our hike included crossing a causeway for gorgeous views of the Lake, tromping across the playground, beach and picnic area, and briefly considering a group crashing of the Billy Goat's post-race party. Instead, we followed the lake shore back toward the parking lot. For a finale, we followed a herd path right along the edge of the water, which involved some dodging of tree branches lest one step off the lakeshore into the Lake. I was hoping someone would fall in so I could add it to this hike write-up, but the end of the hike remained uneventful.

Killington Section Annual Meeting

March 31, 2012

By Allison Henry, Secretary

(Edited by Vivian Bebee – For complete transcript of these minutes, contact Allison Henry)

Present: President Wayne Krevetski, Secretary Allison Henry, Treasurer Gerry Martin, and Directors Sue Thomas, Tom Cops, Vivian Bebee, and Dave Coppock. Also present: 20+ other K Section members and friends.

Minutes from 2011 annual meeting approved (G. Martin/Barb Griffith; passed)

Treasurer's report from Gerry Martin:

- About one thousand dollars ahead of last year
- Returns on CDs continue to be very minimal, but will continue to roll over; questioned looking for higher interest rate, but higher rate would result in some risk to the principal. Board does not want this.
- Membership numbers are up—have we actually added people or is there a new definition of members, i.e. businesses or additional family members counted. (Note: A. Henry offered to get in touch with Main Club to ask)

Treasurer's report accepted (Barry Griffith/A. Henry; passed)

Dave Hardy, Director of Field Operations, made a guest appearance to update us on the condition of the Long Trail in and around our area, especially after Irene. Of note, paraphrased: The Killington Section has the honor of having "The only piece of the Trail still closed due to Irene.” A section of the trail from Cold River Road to Governor Clement is still closed by the Green Mountain National Forest. A road walk is posted. A site visit with local club members, Dave, Forest Service folks and possibly a grant writer is scheduled for early April. Also, the town of Shrewsbury may or may not replace washed out bridges. Possible trail adjustment or relocation in an area near Lottery Road-- a flagline has been set.

Forest Service is prosecuting the alleged perpetrator of the burning of Tucker Johnson Shelter. A potential new site is being scouted—a little north of the old site, off the trail.

Wind project in Lowell—is moving forward, but will have a radar-operated lighting system, as the Club had hoped. Lights are required on the tallest turbines, but now will only switch on when a plane is in range rather than staying on all night. The Club learned a lot from participating in the public hearings and other pieces of the project, and we have been able to bring our “expertise” to other projects such as the new towers in Deerfield.

Thundering Falls boardwalk—destroyed by Irene. Forest Service looking for support in fixing/replacing. Also damaged/gone: bridge in Kent Brook area, Stonybrook bridge. This has been a low water year and a lot of debris from Irene has not been moved yet so it might be best to wait on some repairs until another high water event moves things around again.

Bromley tower—built in early 60s (Bromley Ski Area) was condemned after inspection last summer by engineer and will be disassembled/destroyed. GMC will work with Bromley and be primary fundraiser on replacing it. Trail will not be moved off the summit of Bromley.

Main Club summary from representative Allison Henry, with some notes provided by alternate Steve Williams:

- Lowell Wind Project under some appeals but still moving forward.
- Main Club Annual Meeting is the weekend of June 8-9 at Jay Peak resort
- Main Club looking for copy of the 1922 Long Trail guide. Historical Society might lend us copy.
- Fiscal Year 2013 budget passed unanimously
- Still working on Winooski Project. Recent appeal raised $50,000.00
- Club involved in discussions of safety and search and rescue on the Trail, following the death of a young hiker on the Emily Proctor Trail. State of VT looking at updating their response protocol—many areas not covered and responsibility falls on State Police. Resources often not available for dangerous or nighttime rescues.

Nomination and Election of Directors:

- Confusion due to lack of a list available of current directors eligible/ineligible for re-election. Discussion ensued with the election going forward under the assumption that Tom, Sue, Allison, Vivian, Dave and Herb were the existing Directors whose terms were not yet up, leaving three positions to be filled. Nominations were made and seconded; following paper ballot, Hillary, Gerry and Barry were elected to fill three vacant positions.

The Directors old and new then met to elect officers (still discussing who was actually off the Board due to term expiration. Officer nominations made and seconded as follows: President, Herb Ogden; VP, Barry Griffith; Secretary, Allison Henry; Treasurer, Gerry Martin. Allison Henry remains our rep for the Main Club, with Hillary Coolidge elected as alternate.

Next Board of Directors' meeting scheduled for June 12, 2012 at 7 pm at the Henry House.

HIGHLAND WORK PARTY, Saturday, June 2, 2012, by Herb Ogden

This year, the Highland Work Party was appropriately named not only because we worked at high elevation in the Coolidge Range, but also because the weather was what the Scotch Highlands are famous for: chilly and rainy. Nevertheless, six people showed up and joined the Honor Roll: Dave Coppock, Tom Copps, Allison Henry, Wayne Krevetski, Herb Ogden and Sarah Shanahan. The day before, Sue Thomas had finished clearing the many waterbars on the Sherburne Pass Trail and Cindy Taylor-Miller had cut weeds in Patch Hollow.

While Allison and Sarah dug out two miles worth of waterbars south from US 4 to Churchill Scott Shelter on the LT, Wayne delivered some bog bridging to the bottom of the Cauty Trail with the gracious cooperation of its new owners. Then he and the rest of us brought sixteen 8' hemlock planks and two sills up to the Alpine Pipeline crossing on the Sherburne Pass trail using Wayne's truck. By the time we had lugged them the remaining .4 mile to Jungle Jct., the rain was becoming steadier and the trail slipperier, and we decided not to lug any farther. We installed one bog bridge, but left for another day the task of carrying 14 planks about a mile south on the LT to fix broken bog bridges. If you know of any carriers with strong backs and ambition, let us know.

Paddling Otter Creek (aka "Tree Kayaking"), July 1, 2012, (not a Club trip), by Barb Griffith

We wondered what this trip would be like as we unloaded the kayaks and equipment for the paddle. I have never seen the "Crik" so low! The last paddle we did on this section was just after a tremendous amount of rain and we zoomed along at a fast pace ending in about three hours time! Today, we dragged the kayaks down to a cavity in the bank and each developed their own launching technique. What was most difficult was extricating our feet and sandals from the mud. (This would be a common theme throughout the day.) We put in to Otter Creek at 11:30 a.m. Our spirits were high and the weather was perfect, sunny and breezy; the trees lining the banks of the Creek gave us shaded relief. However, there wasn't much of a current so we were forced to paddle downstream without much help from the forces of nature.

The first hour of the paddle went without much ado. We did not encounter any snags or stringers. Life was good. We were giddy with the day. Barry chose our lunch spot, but when he got on shore, he hit quicksand or quick mud and started sinking. Once again he extricated himself and crawled back into his watercraft with both crocs intact. Another 15 minutes along, we found a real sand bar and enjoyed a leisurely meal. The whole day was proving to be leisurely. That was soon to change as we started our encounters with maneuvering around, over and under snags left by Hurricane Irene.

As in our initial launching we each developed our own techniques to get our kayaks and selves over each barricade. This prompted a lot of teamwork to get the kayaks over without going over into the water....which did happen by the way. I wasn't available with my camera to document the "tip overs". Rats!!

The snags kept a coming. So, not only did we have no current, we also had river blocks coming at us. This was not going to be a 3-hour trip today. Our spirits were high even though our paddling arms were growing weary. We flushed up a mother duck and about 9 ducklings who could not fly yet, chasing them down stream all day long. (Bet they slept well that night.)

Wish we had kept track of the number of snags we had to get over. I will say "many". After awhile we started to call it "tree kayaking", and we finally made it to our take out spot with thunder in the distance. We all marveled at our time on the "Crik" and for what a perfect day it had been. It was 4:30 p.m. The trip had taken us 5 hours!

What an awesome stupendous day we had!! We survived intact, (already discussing our next kayak adventure), but we did learn that "tree kayaking" TAKES A LOT LONGER than water kayaking.

Outing Reports

BOILING SPRINGS, CHITTENDEN, May 26, 2012, Barry & Barb Griffith, leaders

Our last trip into the Springs was June 2009. As always with these out-of-the-way locations, we attempt to hike in every few years to keep the spot current in our minds. The weather was perfect, the trekkers waiting with bated breath to achieve the destination and marvel at the boiling water. (We had to explain that the "boiling" here did not mean hot). We were 11 hikers, two dogs. This is a rather long hike, but level terrain with a slow uphill elevation gain making it downhill on the return.

Wildflowers were abundant. We came upon an Oven Bird's nest. Would have missed it entirely if our commotion had not made Mama Oven Bird un-nest and try to lead us away. The nest was on the ground on the side of the logging road and carefully camouflaged by wrapping living ferns around the top. Quite clever! We quickly strode by to leave her to get back to incubating her eggs.

We attained the Boiling Spring site by noon. The Springs made quite a show for our lunch. As you can see in the photo, we were captivated as it bubbled away! One must see it to believe. We wondered if there are other "boiling springs" in Vermont and, if so, where. There were other geological questions left unanswered.

There were new participants who joined us. It is always nice to have new input. For those who called the leaders, I advised food, water, proper footwear and the ability to hike 7+ miles. For some, that was a challenge towards the end of the trip. The heat and humidity rose throughout the day. The mud we had to plow through threw a curve ball to some. However, all made it in and out.

WINONA LAKE (a/k/a BRISTOL POND), BRISTOL, July 8, 2012, Viv Bebee & Larry Walter, leaders

Despite the very early start time, Linda, Teri and Sarah joined us with their kayaks for a very pleasant, early morning paddle. We started early not only to avoid the heavy traffic at this "fishing" site and beat the heat, but also in hopes of seeing more wildlife. We were definitely rewarded for our effort. Not only did we see turtles, ducks, gulls, herons and bald eagles, we were also treated to a rare sight. As we paddled down the peaceful channel that leads to the main pond, directly in front of us only a very few feet away, male and female sandhill cranes walked out of a marshy area with two juveniles following close behind, swam across the narrow channel and walked into the marshy area on the other side. They made sounds like a soft, rattle/purr. What a sight! Further out in the pond, we saw some fat, happy snakes sunning themselves on a little island. Needless to say, we all stayed in our canoe/kayaks and did not venture onto the island. Also, there were only a couple of other boats on the water, so we did not have to avoid areas where others were fishing. Note: On the front cover, picture of kayakers, Linda and Sarah.

MOUNT ASCUTNEY, WINDSOR, July 22, 2012, Sue Thomas, leader

Mount Ascutney fits the definition of a monadnock – rising from the valley floor all on its own, with no surrounding mountains or ridges for company. Poor, lonely Mount Ascutney. But the thing about a monadnock is, as you approach from any direction, it looms in front of you in all its intimidating glory, and any sympathy you might have had for it fades as you gaze at its enormous bulk and realize that nary an elevation line was gained by car. Lucky you, you get to climb every inch. Gulp!

Having blue skies, a relatively cool day in the midst of a steamy summer and great companions eased the way as we slogged up the Windsor Trail. We stopped for a breather at Gerry's Falls, not very impressive in a dry year, but any excuse will do on an unrelenting climb!

By the time we reached Halfway Springs, we felt at least 155 years old, so thought we might as well take the 1857 route, now a spur trail, to check out an old cabin, which looked about as rundown as I felt. We found a family there taking a break on their way up. Their little girl seemed not the least bit winded, and with a mouthful of Skittles told us all about the series of candy breaks that had fueled her climb. We ran into them again when we crested the ridge, and she regaled us with the tales of pizza all the way to the summit tower, atop which she clutched a small bag of M&M's and led a discussion about everyone's favorite donut flavor. I hope she took a moment to notice the view, which is of course spectacular, taking in the Windsor/Cornish covered bridge over the Connecticut River in the foreground, to the distant White Mountains and our own Greens.

As we ate our lunch at the base of the tower, our little friend disappeared down the trail, still talking . . . which may explain the overpowering urge we felt for ice cream when we reached the trailhead. A stop at the Brownsville store was just the thing, where we had a scoop each and marveled over the elaborate model train set up in the back room. Extremely detailed, it featured eco-friendly construction sites complete with solar panels and outhouses, a cop car lurking behind trees in a speed trap and even the Old Man of the Mountain resurrected. A fun way to end a great day.

MYSTERY HIKE, August 5, 2012, Larry Walter, leader

I had originally planned to ascend a Green Mountain high peak, but in light of weather forecasts predicting morning thunderstorms, thought better of it. Evidently, most other people thought the same since the phone was pretty silent (no calls for time and place of hike).

Sue, Tom and I decided to limit our hike to something short, with water at the end for swimming to cool off. Silver Lake fit the bill. We came in from the east (easy) side and reached the Lake just when the wind was picking up and the clouds were gathering. Tom and I stuck to the plan and attempted to backstroke through 1 ½-foot-high whitecaps. Sue wisely decided to limit her involvement to a casual wade near shore.

The return trip to the car left us all wishing we were in the water again, so we compensated with a visit to the Brandon ice cream shop on the way home.

- Treasurer's Report by Gerry Martin
 - Membership numbers up, has generated income. Recent expenses include Godnick Center rental and lumber .
 - Recent audit went well

- Main Club Highlights from Allison Henry, Director to Main Club:

He has asked if trailhead can be moved because even with "No Parking" signs, people still park there and block the gate. Wayne will discuss options with Forest Service (they have been discussing moving the trailhead for years) and with the landowner.
 - Other than Irene damage in Shrewsbury area, "our section is in good shape."
 - Some thruhikers have reported confusion with road walk in Shrewsbury area. Barry will be working on improving signage.
 - Vandalism at Rt. 140 lot—there is no sign there warning folks of potential vandalism
 - Mountain bike tracks from 140 to Minerva Hinchey

- Sue questioned what info can be left in the shelters, "officially." Some items found include phone books and bus schedules. Wayne: commercial ads are definitely not allowed. Unsure of actual Main Club policy.
- Smoke and Blazes Update:
 - Make sure your contact info and term limit info are accurate
 - send any photos of outings to Tom and/or Vivian
 - Group "THANK YOU" for Tom and Vivian's efforts!
 - As always, call Sue SOON if you want to lead outings!
- Other Business:
 - Website: Group discussion: website needs updating. Photos and information are outdated. Not all issues of Smoke and Blazes are available on the site. Hillary offered to get in touch with webmaster Deb Waggett.
 - Publicity: What options are there for communicating outings schedule to public, besides Smoke and Blazes and website? Should we utilize email? We have had difficulty with the Herald's calendar not working properly. Hikes are sometimes advertised in small, local papers such as Mountain Times and VT Country Sampler. Group discussion of importance of publicity vs. safety concerns. Publicity is important to make community aware of our activities, invite new people on hikes, recruit new people for work parties, and recruit new members. However, concern was expressed that if hikes are advertised in "tourist"-type papers, tourists who are unprepared may show up for outings. Hillary offered to get in touch with local organizations such as colleges and libraries for outreach (Vivian will send list of people/groups who already receive our mailings).
 - Hike Safety: We held a very long discussion about situations where individuals show up for hikes unprepared, either unprepared with gear and/or not physically capable of completing the hike safely. Throughout discussion we emphasized that it is ultimately the role of the hike leader to turn someone away if unprepared or not physically capable, although some hike leaders might not be comfortable with the possibility of conflict and/or hurting someone's feelings. We do need to make decisions for individual safety as well as the safety/comfort of the group. If someone is unprepared, hikes at a very slow pace, or gets injured, the entire group could be at risk for being out after dark. A caveat has been placed on the schedule that states that the hike leader can turn someone away if unprepared, but a) not everyone reads it and believes it and b) if someone reads about the hike somewhere other than our printed schedule, this caveat is not included (e.g. newspaper). Should we refrain from listing the start time and/or the meeting place on the schedule, so that participants have to call first? Several cons were raised to this point, including that if someone has to call they might leave it to the last minute and not call and thus not attend. Also, even if the leader is to ask questions about the person's experience and gear, "can you really screen someone in a phone call?" Finally, do we need to make more of an effort to include a variety of hikes on the schedule? Our members do have access already to the Thursday Outings schedule at the Godnick Center. As a group we decided that for difficult hikes, we would list less information as mentioned above, so participants are required to call first. We will discuss this problem at future meetings as well.
 - Next meeting scheduled for Tuesday, September 25 at 6:30 pm at the Bebee-Walter establishment.
